REPORT OF THE JUVENILE COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA (S. DOC. NO. 99)

Mr. CAPPER. I present a letter addressed to me by the Attorney General, forwarding two communications from Judge Kathryn Sellers, of the juvenile court of the District of Columbia, together with a report covering the activities of that court during the year ended June 30, 1927. I ask an order, in accordance with the usual practice, that it be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. VANDENBERG. I present a telegram from Henry C. Walters, of Detroit, Mich., president of the Michigan Bar Association, protesting against the passage of Senate bill 3151, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It is not feasible to call a meeting of the 1,600 members of the Michigan State Bar Association to take formal action. But 19 out of the 27 directors and directors at large, which is the governing body unit, have asked me to protest on behalf of the association against the passage of S. 3151 on the ground that miscarriages of justice would follow upon its enactment. Remaining 8 directors and directors at large not yet heard from. The 19 heard from include former Chief Justice Carpenter, ex-Judge Murfin, George W. Weadock, Mark Norris, Stuart Knappen, George E. Nichols, George W. Cook, Wade Millis, Burritt Hamilton, Walter Foster, and C. W. Perry, all former presidents of the State association. The governing body consists of lawyers long in active practice, and they know from experience that real prejudice exists against nonresident litigants and that it is much less pernicious in its effect in Federal than in State courts. They feel that passage of the act would work incalculable mischief and constitute deplorable retrogression.

HENRY C. WALTERS,
President Michigan State Bar Association, Detroit, Mich.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by Earl C. Gormley Post, No. 45, American Legion, of Junction City, Kans., favoring the passage of the so-called Capper-Johnson universal draft bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented letters in the nature of petitions from the congregations of the First Congregational Church of Stamford and the Methodist Episcopal Church of New London, and of sundry citizens of Danbury and New Haven, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the passage of the so-called Gillett resolution (S. FOUR YEARS' TERM FOR REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the Norris resolution having been defeated, I introduce a joint resolution changing the terms of Members of the House from two years to four years. Under the present situation, newly elected Members of the House scarcely take their seats before beginning a campaign for reelection; and that situation ought to be corrected. I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary in the hope that we can extend the terms of Members of the House from two years to four years, so that a Member may have an opportunity at least to get acquainted with his work before he has to run for office again.

MARKETING OF PERISHABLE AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

ORDER FOR EVENING SESSION ON THURSDAY

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present the following order, and I ask for its immediate consideration.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the order.
The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered (by unanimous consent), That on Thursday, May 10, 1928, at not later than 6 o'clock p. m., the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m., and that at the evening session, which shall not continue later than 11 o'clock p. m., the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bills on the calendar, under Rule VIII.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, is unanimous consent asked for the order?
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas has asked unanimous consent for its adoption.
Mr. BRUCE. I object.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.
Mr. CURTIS subsequently said: Mr. President, before the Senator from Alabama proceeds further, if he will allow me to interrupt him, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] is willing to withdraw his objection to the request for unanimous consent. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me to present it again?
Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from Maryland a day or two ago objected to the bill I am discussing, and I will pay him my compliments in a few moments. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.
Mr. CURTIS. I present a request for unanimous consent and ask that it may be read and entered into.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.
The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered (by unanimous consent), That on Thursday, May 10, 1928, at not later than 6 o'clock p. m., the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m., and that at the evening session, which shall not continue later than 11 o'clock p. m., the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bills on the calendar, under Rule VIII.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator ought to change the hour of adjournment on that evening to 10.30 p. m.
Mr. CURTIS. I am willing to change it to 10.30 p. m.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request for unanimous consent will be modified so as to provide for a session beginning at 8 o'clock and adjourning at not later than 10.30 o'clock p. m. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent as modified?
The unanimous-consent agreement as modified was entered into, as follows:

Ordered by unanimous consent, That on Thursday, May 10, 1928, at not later than 6 o'clock p. m., the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m., and that at the evening session, which shall not continue later than 10.30 o'clock p. m., the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bills on the calendar, under Rule VIII.

COTTON-PRICE PREDICTIONS—THE FLAG—GOVERNOR SMITH

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, on yesterday I gave notice that this morning I would discuss the cotton bill (S. 3845), which I have pending in the Senate, the flag in connection with the question which I raised yesterday, the candidacy of Governor Smith, and the presidential situation generally.
Mr. President, on the 15th of September, 1927, the Bureau of Economics, in the Department of Agriculture, gave out a most remarkable statement in which it predicted the prices of cotton. It had no authority to make such a prediction. After reciting the fact that the boll weevil had injuriously affected the crop, that the yield had been cut nearly a million bales in a month, and that the crop would be 5,000,000 bales short of the previous crop, they said, "Therefore we predict that the prices will decline."
(At this point Mr. HEFLIN yielded to Mr. CURTIS to present a request for unanimous consent.)
Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I hope I will not be interrupted any more until I can state the facts in this case. That price prediction broke the cotton market, and the cotton farmers lost some $35 to $40 a bale on the cotton crop of 1927. We are seeking to prevent the occurrence of another such destructive and criminal act. I saw the necessity of having some law on the subject, and while we were debating the Agricultural appropriation bill the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], and other Senators suggested that as I had raised the question here I should introduce a bill providing a penalty for making such cotton-price predictions. I did introduce such a bill; it was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry; and it was unanimously reported by that committee.

When I first called it up, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], who comes from a New England cotton-spinning State and is himself a spinner, as I understand, objected. He renewed his objection later, but finally, as I understand, withdrew his objection.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE], who is supposed to represent in part a State of the South where the home of the cotton industry is located, objected. The Senator knew the importance of passing this measure; he knew how greatly interested the cotton producers of the section from which he comes were, but he objected. He has never withdrawn his objection. I hardly know how to characterize the strange conduct of the Senator from Maryland, who pretends to represent the southern section at least to some extent. Of course, we all are from various States and represent in particular our States and try to represent the whole country as best we can. I do, and I think other Senators here in the main do. There are Senators here who, I believe, are whole-heartedly dedicated to the public interest and are trying to serve the country. There are some who seem to have the center of gravity in their systems on the side of special interests.

The farmers of my section have not only been sorely oppressed, but absolutely robbed of millions and millions of dollars by that strange and unwarranted price prediction made by the Agricultural Department here at Washington.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will let the Senator interrupt me just for a moment.

Mr. BRUCE. There is such a thing as even momentary satisfaction. I will say to the Senator that he is laboring under an entire misapprehension in believing that I have any fixed prepossession against this bill of his. All I suggested the other day was that I did not think at the time that a matter of such importance ought to be taken up for instant consideration. What I was hoping was that some Member of this body who is more familiar with the problem than am I, after hearing the Senator from Alabama, would make an argument that would enable me to realize just how much force the point of view opposite to that of the Senator from Alabama has. That is all. I think it is not unlikely, after I hear the Senator from Alabama and have heard what may be said in opposition to him, that I will vote for his bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, Mr. President, the Senator is too late now, because I am going to express myself on this subject. Seven or eight objections have been made here to the passage of this bill and I think certain interests have suggested the objections. There are Jesuits who sit in this gallery every day, and Roman Catholic priests. I think that they have got friends here through whom they may have objection interposed.

Now, I will give some of my reasons as to why this measure ought to pass. The cotton farmers of the South on a single cotton crop have lost $400,000,000 because of the low price of cotton produced by the unwarranted, unjustified, and outrageous price prediction made by this board in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. HEFLIN. Not now; I can not yield to the Senator now. He is one of the Senators who objected to the consideration of my bill on yesterday, and I am coming to him just as soon as I can get to him.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. You may come any time you wish.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will certainly accommodate the Senator soon. The Senator from California himself comes from a cotton-growing State.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. And I know as much about cotton as you do.

Mr. HEFLIN. His people were robbed by this same prediction, and yet he objected to the passage of this bill on yesterday. I want the cotton farmers of his State to know the true situation and let them inquire of him——

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. So they may——

Mr. HEFLIN. What interest he was looking after when he was trying to prevent the passage of a bill which would punish their enemies who had robbed them of two or three million dollars in that State.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Now, will the Senator courteously permit me to ask him a question? It will be put in the utmost good faith, and it may shorten this discussion. It is this: If the Senator will explain to me how this loss, logically and economically, may be attributed to the prediction which the Secretary put out, I should be persuaded that he is right, but for the moment I have never been able to understand why that prediction of the Secretary had that baneful and hurtful effect. I can not see the logic of that contention.

Mr. HEFLIN. Would the Senator want to give any department of the Government the right to predict prices on any farm product of this country?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. For the moment, I see no economical or logical reason why the people of our country might not be aided by the advice of a Secretary presumably familiar with all the facts with respect to our own Nation and the commerce of the world.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. If it is not conceded that the prediction of the Secretary of Agriculture actually broke the price, he did a perfectly foolish thing, because if it did not affect the price he had no right to use up Government paper and ink to put out a prediction unless it would affect the price.

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. It was calculated to do so. If it did not do so, he did a perfectly indefensible and inexcusable thing, an idle and foolish thing. But if it broke the price, as everybody knows it did, then he did a most unjustifiable thing, because he took the sustenance of men and women who had labored through a year to produce a product, and broke the price over night with a prediction that it was selling too high.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator from Alabama will allow me, I should like to say a word in reply to the suggestion made by the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE]. The Chief of the Bureau of Economics, under oath, swore that the reason the prediction was made was because the department considered the price too high. I should like to say to the Senator that I think the Senate or any board to whom the facts had been presented as they were in the context of this bulletin touching the situation in cotton would, if the last line and a half were striken out, have said, "The price has not yet responded to the facts; it has not as yet gone as high as the law of supply and demand would put it."

If the Senator will allow me to make just this further statement, it was then ascertained that the production of last year was approximately five and one-half million bales less than that of the preceding year. The consumption by the world of American cotton was the greatest in its history. There never was a more healthy tone in the textile market. That was testified before the committee by witnesses representing spinners, cotton merchants, and speculators. Every one uniformly testified that the price obtaining at the time this prediction was made was easily justifiable on the law of supply and demand, and every one testified that they thought it would have gone still higher. But when the Government, with all the facts known to them that were known to the trade, and no more, and perhaps not as much known by these gentlemen in the Bureau of Economics as others knew, came out and as a non sequitur, an absolutely illogical conclusion from the premises they set down, said, "The price is likely to decline," it paralyzed the entire cotton-buying world to such an extent that telegrams poured in from all the exchanges to the Secretary of Agriculture, inquiring if he authorized it. Was it official? Could it be possible under the circumstances? They are in the hearings, and will be in the report that I hope to make as to the facts brought out after nearly three months of as complete investigation as we could make.

The producers protested. The cotton merchants protested. The cotton exchanges and the speculators wanted to know why. It never had been done before; and, remember, it was in the beginning of the marketing period when not a bale could be added to the crop nor one subtracted from it, except one did it arbitrarily; and upon the known fact that the production was five or six million bales less than that of the previous year, with an unusually increased demand and a healthy tone, the question was, "What good purpose can the Government serve, especially the producer, by giving any such statement to the public now?"

It was all right for them in the spring, in March and April, to say, "The carry-over of old cotton is so many bales, and if you plant extravagantly you may have lower prices." That was justifiable. That was what we appointed them to do—not the Bureau of Economics but the Bureau of the Census and others. That was all right. They could say, and did say, in other instances, "If you plant and make a large crop and add it to the large carry-over, you will get lower prices; but if you observe the history of crops and provide for a small crop, you will get better prices." That is precisely what they did in 1927. They responded to that advice in March and April. They planned to reduce their acreage, and the insect infestation added to it and startled the world with the small result and the consequent rise in the price. Now, what possible good purpose could they serve when the advice had already been given and the crop was already marketed by coming in the midst of a prosperous condition and upsetting the whole thing and demoralizing the whole world?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina has stated the matter very clearly. Most Senators who keep themselves informed as to what is going on in this country would not have to have the matter explained to them at length at this time—the loss of $400,000,000 to the people of one section who produced the cotton crop of the United States, the men who toiled through the year to produce it, and frequently their families with them in the field, in the hot sun, and then came into the market place and were battered to death by a Government bureau going into the realm of price prediction on the cotton crop of the United States. I do not hesitate to say that I think they were influenced to do it by wicked and unscrupulous cotton factors. The president of the New York Cotton Exchange swore that if he had the power to predict the price, and had the weight of the Government behind it, he would give millions of dollars for such a power.

This dreadful thing has been done to the cotton farmers of my State. Farmers have lost their homes and have gone into the towns and cities to try to get work. They were unable to meet their obligations. A loss of $35 to $40 a bale took away all their profit and put the price below the cost of production. When I labor as I have done at this session on this committee with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to investigate the scoundrels who brought about this ruin, and introduce this bill, and get it favorably reported, and bring it upon this calendar, it is a strange thing, I say, to have the Senator from Maryland—who ought to be in sympathy with the people of the South who produce cotton, and who are now selling it below the cost of production, and who have lost $35 to $40 a bale on it this season—get up and make an objection without stating any reason for it. Five or six objections having already been made, I confess that I was getting a little tired of it.

I am one Senator who is not going around here to beg Senators privately to withdraw their objections to my bills. I think legislation ought to be had in the open, and facts ought to be brought out. If your measure is not meritorious, it ought to fail. Let the responsibility be taken by those who are willing to make these objections for outside influences, whether or not they are prejudiced against me for making the fight I have made for my country in my opposition to the war sought by the Knights of Columbus at the time when Mr. BOYLAN, a Member of the House, a Roman Catholic, introduced the resolution to sever diplomatic relations with Mexico. I have no apology to make for all that, and I will meet in the open any enemy I have because of it; I do not care whether he is a Catholic, or a Protestant, or a half-hammered Protestant sailing under Protestant colors.

Mr. President, I will never forget a scene near my home—a man, his wife, and two children; a farmer, a boy 14 years old, and a little girl of 6. He had nearly paid for his little farm. He had painted his house. He owned two or three mules and had bought him a Ford car and was trying to get up in the world. Low-priced cotton came. He could not meet his obligations. The mortgage was foreclosed. He was passing my home with his wife sitting in the wagon, back of the driver, with a portion of their household goods. She was holding the little girl by her side, and the farmer himself, with his 14-year-old boy, was walking behind the wagon. I knew him well. I hailed him as he passed my home. I went out to him and said, "Where are you going? What is the matter?" He dropped his head; with a lump in his throat he said, "I am going down to the cotton factory at Lanett, I and my boy, to work in the mill." I said, "What in the world are you giving up your little farm for? You had a nice little home and farm out there." He shook his head and shed tears like a child and he said, "I have lost my home. I have lost everything. I am not out of debt. I am in an awful fix." He said, "My little boy took it harder than anyone else. He did not seem to understand it until we got ready to leave. We all walked out. He closed the gate and looked back at the old home, and turned to me with tears in his eyes and said, 'Papa, what does all this mean?'"

These people have been mistreated and robbed. I am fighting for them. I am seeking to give them a fair deal. I want them to have the necessities of life and some of the comforts of life. God knows they are entitled to them. I want them to be able to educate their children. I do not want them to be agricultural slaves; and it was that motive that prompted me to introduce this measure and to ask for its immediate passage. I did not expect to have a man like the Senator from Maryland—who, I suppose, is supported by the farmers of his State—some of them at least—a man who ought to stand with drawn sword to battle for the producing classes not only of one section, but of all other sections, rise and object. If it had not been for his objection, this bill would have passed the Senate and have been in the House now, and it would have been referred to a committee, and they would have gone to work on it, and the bill would have passed; but he helped to prevent action and he stayed the hand of legislation by his objection. He has never withdrawn it. I doubt whether he has ever read the bill or not; and now he says if it could be explained to him he might withdraw his objection. I shall move to pass that bill, and I shall ask a roll call on it.

Senators know me very well, some of them, most of them here. You never heard me make one of these objections to anybody's bill that had merit in it; I do not care whose it is. You can not point to a single instance where I have ever indulged in such practices as that. But when the cotton speculators do not want this bill passed, when the cotton gamblers do not want it passed, when those who profit by low and destructive prices of cotton to the farmer do not want it passed, the Senator from Maryland rises and objects, blocks its passage by his objection, and he could do that because we were proceeding by unanimous consent at that time. Then on yesterday the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE], the tall sycamore from the Pacific slope, rose and, strange to say, interposed his objection, and I explained to him then what the bill meant, and I asked him, as kindly as I could, to let me pass it. He shook his head and waved his hand with those magnificent and graceful gestures that he indulges in, and still objected.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator permt me to interrupt him?

Mr. HEFLIN. I desire to say that the Senator from California and the Senator from Maryland are largely responsible for the time I am consuming to-day, by throwing themselves in front of needed and meritorious legislation for the farmers of the South and the farmers of California. I am fighting their battle, while the Senator from California is blocking legislation intended to aid and protect them.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HEFLIN. Just briefly, because the Senator has got me to speaking now and I do not want to be pestered very much.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do not wish to engage in personalities, may I say to the Senator from Alabama. I never do, and I mean nothing personal. I was about to ask him, if he would be good enough to reply, this question:

The bill, as it appears, when first introduced related to cotton, corn, maize, wheat, rye, oats, barley, flaxseed, and other grains. In a desire to get at the philosophy or the reasoning which permits the elimination of these other items, I will ask the Senator this question——

Mr. HEFLIN. I stated to the Senator that all that had been stricken out and that the bill now referred only to cotton. I can not yield to the Senator to go over things like that.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. But why was it struck out? If it is good, if the Senator's argument is sound—and I am not now disputing it—why is it not good as to wheat, as to corn, and so on?

Mr. HEFLIN. They have not predicted any prices on grain and the grain growers wanted that out.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to say that I will vote for any measure that will help the grain-growing West, and deliver those farmers from the hands and the clutches of the robbers. The farmers of the West have some representatives here who are faithful to them; and when they come and tell me, "Here is a bill that will give the grain growers a fair deal, and we want you southern fellows to help us," we help them. I would do it. I have done it. I announce it in the open, and they are for my bill. They wanted grain out, and I let them strike it out, and I told the Senator yesterday afternoon that it was all stricken out and applied only to cotton; so the Senator had no excuse whatever to object to its passage.

Did the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] want me to yield to him?

Mr. SIMMONS. No, Mr. President

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I thought the able Senator from North Carolina, who is right on practically everything he advocates, wanted me to yield to him. I yield to the Senator from Georgia, who is another good friend of the farmer.

Mr. HARRIS. I am sure the Senator would like to correct one statement he made. He said they had not predicted that grain would go down. At the same time that they predicted that cotton would go down they said that corn would go down, and in the same statement they predicted that wheat would go up.

Mr. HEFLIN. I had overlooked that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I was not on my feet for the purpose of interrupting the Senator a few moments ago; but, since he has alluded to me by name, I will do so to the extent of saying that I am heartily for the bill which he has proposed.

Mr. HEFLIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think that any official of the Department of Agriculture, or any other department of this Government, has a right to express an opinion upon the future price of a product. That is beyond the domain or jurisdiction that we have given any department. As lawyers say, it is ultra vires. This prediction must have been made, if made deliberately, for a purpose.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is what I think.

Mr. SIMMONS. And it could not have been made, if for a purpose, for any purpose other than to restrain the advance in the price of cotton.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator is entirely correct in that, and we are in hearty agreement.

Mr. President, there is no question about it, there are those in this body, and in all other legislative bodies, I suppose, who really want to legislate for the good of the masses of the people, who want to hold this Government true to the purpose of its creation, who want to be useful to the country. There are others, I have been thinking, who have an ear that they keep mighty close to the ground regarding special interests, and if one introduces a bill in the interest of the farmer, and they think it will get on the toes of the special interests, they are ready to object. Then one will withdraw his objection, and they will call on another one to object, and then keep that up until it is too late to pass the bill. Then, when you ask them why they did it, they say, "I wanted an opportunity to look into it."

I am giving you an opportunity now. I have invited you to look into the Cotton Belt. Men killed themselves after these prices broke and they were ruined, and others lost their minds and have gone to asylums for the insane. Mortgages have been foreclosed, homes have been lost to the farmers, and they have drifted into the cities to swell the number of the unemployed and to bid for the jobs that our laboring men already there now have. You are making the problem of life on the farm exceedingly hard; but none of these things seem to appeal to some Senators, and they rise and object, they protest against the passage of such a measure as this.

Mr. President, let me tell Senators what the testimony has shown. The ex-president of the New York Cotton Exchange, Mr. Marks, under oath said that, in his opinion, this price prediction cost the farmers $20 a bale. That would amount to over $200,000,000 for the whole crop. The president of the New York Cotton Exchange, Mr. Herbert, who has been in the cotton business all his life, and whose father before him was in that business, testified under oath that this prediction broke the price, and that if the prediction had not been made, cotton, in his judgment, would have gone to 30 cents a pound. Senators, what would that have meant to the farmers of the South? Four hundred million dollars. To do what? To pay their debts, to carry on their operations, to lift the mortgages from the homes and farms, to make their families happy, to educate their children, and to give them some of the comforts of life.

Yet the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from California throw their stalwart statures across the path of this legislation and hold it up. This legislation has been pending here for about a month. One objection after another has been made. I want the RECORD to show just who it is that is blocking legislation in the interest of the people, just who it is who is willing to rise and protest against measures that are meritorious, in the interest of the toiling masses of our people.

Mr. Bryan made a great speech, in which he said everything depended on the farmer; and that is true. The Bible says that bread is the staff of life; and the farmer produces that. Mr. Bryan said, "Tear down your cities and leave your farms, and your cities will spring up again as if by magic. But destroy your farms, and grass will grow in the streets of every city in the country." That is true. You break the morale of the farming class, these fine, firm citizens, and you strike the Government a body blow. Rome started on her decline when she proceeded, as the Senator from Maryland has proceeded and as the Senator from California has proceeded, to stand in front of honest, meritorious, needed legislation for the farmers of the country. When Rome struck agriculture down her doom was in sight, and in the United States 2,000,000 farmers have lost in their struggle; they have lost their homes and farms and gone to the cities.

Two millions of them, I repeat, have lost their farms, in six years. In the face of that, the Senator from Maryland objects to my bill which is aimed at an action which has robbed the farmers recently on one crop, the farmers of the South, in a sister State to the State of Maryland—God bless old Maryland! I sometimes sympathize with her. He objects to legislation that one of her sons, a member of the Committee on Agriculture, introduced in this body. I know the facts. I am trying to relieve the situation. I would vote just as quickly to relieve the farmers of California, or of Maryland, or of a State in any other section.

What interest is it that is stalking around this Capitol? Is it those who are interested financially, or has some priest suggested to some of his friends that he hopes they will hold up and defeat HEFLIN'S bill, because the Roman hierarchy and the political machine are on his trail? I wonder if that is a part of the punishment they want to visit upon me. I defy them all. When I get to where I can not stand in this body and defend my country without fearing that I will be punished by a Roman Catholic political machine, I ought to get out of the Senate. When I get to where I can not express my views for the good of my country and defend free institutions in America in their integrity, it will be time for me to quit this body.

Senators, you are going soon to reach the time when you will have to meet this issue. I am receiving a lot of copies of letters you are getting now from your home States asking you to support me, and I have had assurances from many of you that you are back of me. You are going to have to meet this issue in the open. You are not going to be subjected to intimidation by priests who come here and send in for Senators, or see them at their hotels, and suggest in whispered conversation the course to pursue in this body.

I do not ask for any quarter at all. They can oppose me and my measures if they want to. If the bill is a righteous one, it is a contemptible spirit that would prompt the opposition; but I do not ask them to withdraw their opposition. I will put these measures up to this body, and let them vote in the open record as to how they stand upon these questions. I submit to you that I have all sorts of grounds to believe that they have taken an interest against this very bill. I will talk perhaps a little plainer on it later on.

Mr. President, there should not be a dissenting vote in this body on this measure. I have reminded Senators before that in 1904 the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the best informed man on cotton who has ever been a Member of Congress in either branch, in my judgment, a farmer himself, able and fearless in the service of the farmers, detected fraud and corruption in the Agriculture Department in 1904, when two employees padded the reports on cotton production and sold out to some gamblers on the exchange in New York, and made $40,000 between them. The names of those gentlemen were Hyde and Holmes. Now comes this thing. The sell-out of Hyde and Holmes cost the farmer about $7.50 a bale. This prediction, this criminal action, cost the farmer $35 to $40 a bale, and the Government never authorized the department to make the prediction. They included a carry-over report in it, something they have never done before. That comes under the duty of the Census Department. They handled it all in that report, and hammered the price, admitting that the crop was 5,000,000 bales shorter than the one before, and the estimate of the yield had fallen nearly a million bales, and that the boll weevil was doing a lot of damage. Still, in the face of that, they predicted the low price.

Senators, I am just asking for a fair deal for these cotton producers of the United States.

POSITION OF THE UNITED STATES FLAG

Now, to the second phase of this matter. Yesterday I introduced a resolution setting out the fact that the Roman Catholic flag had been hoisted above and flown above the United States flag on the battleship Florida and the battleship Cincinnati. I have seen the pictures of both. I have both of them. I referred to one of them, the Cincinnati, in this Chamber a month or more ago. I have here a picture of the battleship Florida, and exhibited it to several Senators yesterday.

Mr. President, I ask that the clerk read my resolution in my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CUTTING in the chair). The clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that the Roman Catholic flag, the same design as the flag flown at the Vatican in Rome, has been recently hoisted above and flown above the United States flag on the U. S. battleship Cincinnati and the U. S. battleship Florida; and

Whereas it is the solemn duty of Congress to see to it that no flag of a foreign power or potentate shall fly above the United States flag on any foot of American soil or on any American battleship or on any other American ship or in any foreign American possession; and

Whereas the act of placing the flag in question or any other flag above the United States flag has the appearance of questioning its right to be first and of challenging its supreme authority and sovereign power: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That it is hereby declared to be the fixed principle and policy of the United States that hereafter nowhere on land within her jurisdiction or on her battleships or on her merchant ships shall any other flag be placed above and flown above the United States flag.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of Government officials in civil authority and in the Army and the Navy to see to it that the principle and policy here set forth is strictly observed.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, what objection could any real American have to that resolution? I offered it yesterday morning and asked unanimous consent to have it immediately acted upon. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] objected. What excuse can any American give to declaring it to be the fixed policy of this Nation that no flag shall fly above the United States flag? I reminded the Senator from Maryland yesterday that as I wrote the resolution the other night I thought over the membership of the Senate and said to myself, "Senator BRUCE, of Maryland, will just about object to it." Oh, my prophetic soul! The Senator rose and fulfilled my prophecy and made his objection to the consideration of the resolution. Never did I dream the day would come when in this historic, magnificent old body there would be a voice lifted to prevent the passage of a resolution laying down the doctrine of the sovereign power of my country that that flag should fly first and uppermost always.

Mr. President, while I was absent yesterday afternoon in the committee carrying on the investigation of the cotton exchange's activities in the Agricultural Department a friend sent me word that some statement was being presented to the Senate from some chaplain of the Navy regarding my resolution. I hurriedly came into the Chamber, found out what was going on, and expressed a few thoughts upon the subject at that time. I would not have thought, with the exception I have already made, that anybody would be bold enough to stand up here and object to the passage of a resolution like that.

Listen to this order, you who are still interested in your country, who believe in asserting its sovereignty anywhere that our flag flies, whether over a battleship or any of our possessions or at home. Listen to this remarkable order of 1927, when Al Smith's campaign was just getting off good on the race track, when they were looking forward with a great deal of pleasure to the time when they would have one of their chief and high muckamucks in the White House. This is an extract from the code book of the Navy, 1927:

Church pennant: The church pennant shall be hoisted at the same place of hoist and over the ensign during the performance of divine services on board vessels of the Navy.

What is the ensign? It is the Roman Catholic flag. It flies the cross above the Stars and Stripes. They sent some more instructions up here on this subject to the effect that not only do the Catholics worship under it flying above the United States flag, but that the same pennant and none other is used in the same place when Protestants of various denominations have their services on board a ship. Then, I ask, why was that particular flag design adopted for this purpose? What Roman Catholic conclave gave birth to that suggestion? Who backed the movement and forced the naval officers to write it down as an order of the United States Government that that flag should fly first and be the only one to fly over our flag at any and all religious services on a ship?

Senators, I said on yesterday that I did not care if it was a church pennant. There is no place too sacred for our flag to be. It represents the best that there is in human government. It stands for principles without which no republic can last, and in the loss of which religious liberty is lost.

I introduced in the House in 1914 a resolution at the suggestion of Miss Anna Jarvis, of Pennsylvania. She was working to create some movement that would perpetuate the name of her mother. She wanted to pay a fine tribute to her mother. Congressman Hampton Moore, of Philadelphia, was in the House, as I was. He introduced her to me and told her that I, he was sure, would be glad to aid her. I wrote the resolution. We passed it through the House. The able Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] looked after it in the Senate and it passed the Senate. President Wilson approved it, Secretary of State Bryan proclaimed it, and it is the doctrine of our Nation to-day. In it we provided that the second Sunday in May of each year should be designated as Mothers' Day in America, and that as distinct tribute, of affectionate regard, and undying love for the mothers of America, the United States flag was to be unfurled above the homes of the people of the Nation. The home is the most sacred place in the Nation. Henry Grady said, "The fireside is the true altar of liberty and the strength of the Nation is lodged in the homes of the people."

We proclaimed that the flag should fly above the homes of all American people on that day, and on public buildings, and in our foreign possessions, paying a tribute of honor and love to the mothers of America. That flag has been used for many noble and lofty purposes, but never was it used in a dearer or more sacred cause than when it flies above the tender and gentle army of American mothers. If it is good enough for that purpose, if it is good enough to fly above the American homes, and to fly from the public buildings of the Nation, kissing with its beautiful folds the genial breezes of a great and free country, it is good enough to fly first on a battleship when people want to engage in religious worship.

I do not see the importance or necessity of lowering that flag on any occasion for the purpose of putting another one above it. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] I would think naturally or ordinarily would be the last to raise his hand against it. Maryland has paid many tributes to the flag. Francis Scott Key's immortal poem described that flag—"Mid the rocket's red glare, gave proof through the night that our flag was still there." That flag was good enough to fly above the Continental Army, good enough for John Paul Jones to unfurl above the Ranger, when the sea caught a glimpse of its glory, and it proclaimed the imperishable doctrine of the rights of a free sea.

It was good in the battle with Spain when that song was written, "Look, boys, the flag is down. Who will volunteer to save it from disgrace?" "I will," a young man shouted; "I will bring it back or die." He rushed into the thickest of the fray, saved the flag, but gave his young life all for his country's sake. When they brought him back they heard him softly say, "Break the news to mother. She knows how dear I love her. Tell her not to look for me for I am not coming home." He had given his life for the flag. "Tell her there is no other to take the place of mother. Kiss her dear sweet lips for me and break the news to her." If that flag was good enough to die for—for a young man to dash into the fray and sacrifice himself in the iron storm of war, it is good enough to fly first on a battleship when people want to worship on Sunday.

In my section of the country the flag flies above the church and above the schoolhouse. I want to remind Senators that I was in Illinois last summer. They had a bill pending in the legislature providing that the flag should be placed above all schools in Illinois, where the remains of the immortal Lincoln sleep until the light of eternities morning shall break beyond the mystic mountains and the redeemed of earth shall meet to part no more. That bill in the Illinois Legislature provided that they shall fly the United States flag above Protestant schools, Jewish schools, and Catholic schools, and every Roman Catholic member of the legislature in the House of Illinois voted against the bill and brought about its defeat.

I am raising an important question here as an American. National dissension and warring interests on a great and vital question between the North and South are behind us. Brave men from both sections went on the battle line and settled their differences. They could not be settled in the halls of peace. The right to secede, a doctrine originally agreed to by all the States, had existed, but a new idea had grown up. Webster and others had given expression to the thought that the Union was one and indivisble. The southern idea was that the States could secede if they wished to do so. Those questions were settled by the arbitrament of the sword. I have seen Union soldiers and Confederate soldiers in happy reunion shaking hands, tears streaming down their faces, those grizzly old warriors of the War between the States happy in a reunited country.

I was to speak in Kentucky in October about eight years ago. As I approached the courthouse at Scottsville I heard singing. I said, "What is going on up there?" I was told, "The old soldiers of both armies are having a reunion." I said, "I want to go up there and see them." I went in. They were walking up and down shaking hands with each other, shedding tears, and I saw them lean their heads on the shoulders and breasts of one another. They all joined in singing "God be with you till we meet again."

Hope's precious pearl in sorrow's cup
Unmelted at the bottom lay,
To shine again when all drunk up
And the bitterness should pass away.

No longer held together by outward forces and barriers, but bound together by the ties of love and loyalty and the cling of section to section. East and West, North and South, to work together for the good of each and each for the good of all! One country! Old Glory is the standard, the banner of constitutional liberty in each and every section, and the South stands ready to follow wherever Old Glory bares her beauty to the breeze; one people, devoted to that great banner which hangs back of the chair of the able Vice President of the United States.

Mr. President, I can not give my consent to have any banner, church pennant, or anything else fly above our flag. I will not agree that it is necessary to put it above it in order to announce religious services. I say that it would be better to set up a pole on the side of the ship and place a church notice there, because the flying of church pennants is not the sort of worship that appeals most to Jesus Christ our Lord. It is not by these outward signs, this pomp and show, that have no religion in them. Religion is a contrite heart, a humility of spirit, earnest devotion, and faithful service to the Christ of God, the Son of Man, the Savior of the world.

I challenge the strange doctrine that you have got to lower the United States flag and put this Roman cross above it in order to be accessible to a throne of grace. I challenge the doctrine that this Government should permit it for a moment. It ought not to permit it. We are going on record as to whether or not we will permit it. I ask again why this particular flag was adopted by the Navy?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I explained to the Senate on yesterday the circumstances in connection with this matter, and it seems to me the explanation is perfectly clear.

Mr. HEFLIN. I like the Senator personally. I hope he will not get out too far into the water on this particular question.

Mr. HALE. I was not alive when the church pennant was adopted, and the Senator was not alive. It has been in use in the Navy for probably 150 years—since the very beginning of the Navy. We have records showing that it was referred to in 1867, and in all probability the flag that is now used was taken over when we started our Navy, and its use was in accordance with the English tradition. They had the same custom in their own navy. The Senator referred to this as a "Roman Catholic flag." What does he mean by a "Roman Catholic flag"? I did not know there was such a flag.

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, the Senator is not able to discuss this matter with me if he does not know that. [Laughter.]

Mr. HALE. There is a cross on this flag, and there is also a cross on the Red Cross flag. Does the Senator say that is a Roman Catholic flag?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am speaking about this particular one.

Mr. HALE. But I should like to have the Senator explain what he means by a "Roman Catholic flag." This is purely a nonsectarian flag; it has nothing to do with any religious denomination in any way whatsoever.

Mr. HEFLIN. Has not the Senator ever seen a cross flying on the Catholic banner around their institutions and in their parades, and in other places?

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator mean to say that the cross may not be used at all on any banner in this country?

Mr. HEFLIN. If the people want to use a cross, of course, Christ was crucified on a cross; but I do not propose for Catholics in the Navy, if I must speak plainly, to prescribe what pennant shall be used to the exclusion of all others, and I deny that this particular pennant has been used all along by our Navy—the order permitting the use of this one seems to have been issued recently. So now in the Navy it seems that when other denominations worship they are compelled to have the United States flag lowered and this particular Catholic pennant put above it.

Mr. HALE. The cross is not a Catholic symbol in this case in any possible way, shape, or manner. The only Catholic flag that I ever heard of is the flag of the Vatican, which, I understand, has a cross on a black and yellow field, and on that cross is superimposed the corpus; that is, the figure of the body of Christ. I understand that to be the Vatican flag. I have not seen that flag myself, but I have heard it so described.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator is more familiar with the Vatican and its flag than I am.

Mr. HALE. This question has nothing to do with any such flag as that.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is what I said, that it was designed on the order of the Vatican flag, and the Catholics are well pleased with it.

Mr. HALE. It is not in any way a sectarian flag, and I can not see why the old custom of the Navy should be changed because the Senator objects to the particular flag which is used.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will ask the Senator, does he believe that any flag or pennant should be put above the American flag? What is the necessity for it? Does the Senator believe that the people of Maine want that flag lowered by any denomination and another flag put above it?

Mr. HALE. I do not think the people of Maine would in any way be disturbed by the Navy keeping up the custom that it has always kept up. The move to put that flag over the other flag was a religious move; certainly not a sectarian move. It was done in order to do reverence and honor to religion, no particular religion but to religion in general.

Mr. HEFLIN. But this I understand is not the pennant always used. How would the Senator stand on fixing up a banner of American design and putting that up there with a little red schoolhouse on it? That would represent the public-school system of America, the bulwark of American liberty. The Roman hierarchy and political machine of Rome are deadly enemies of the little red schoolhouse that opens the door of education and opportunity to every boy and girl in the country.

Mr. HALE. The hierarchy and political machine of Rome, to which the Senator refers, have nothing to do with this question in any way in the mind of anyone except the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. I regret that the Senator feels that way about it; but let the people of Maine help him to determine that question.

Mr. HALE. I am perfectly willing to leave it to the people of Maine.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am satisfied that the Senator is going to be questioned about it, because this serious matter means a great deal to informed wide-awake Americans. They do not want these things put over their public servants at the Capitol, some of whom seem to be stone blind and deaf with regard to this important American matter.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to suggest also that the Army chaplain's flag is a Latin cross in white on a blue ground.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am going to take both of them down. [Laughter.] I will ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if he does not think it would be better to put those banners or pennants somewhere else below the United States flag rather than above it?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. In the Army there are not any masts, so they can not put one above the other.

Mr. HEFLIN. Why not?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Because the Army does not have any masts.

Mr. HEFLIN. They put the flag up and fasten it to a pole.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. They do not put two flags on the same pole.

Mr. HEFLIN. They can lower the American flag on the pole and put the Roman cross above it. Senators can not get away from this issue by reciting statements here that were taught them by Roman Catholic chaplains of the Navy. [Laughter.] I am familiar with them.

I want to remind the Senator of another thing. A Protestant boy on one of the battleships was beat up by some of the officers and men. He seems to have struck an officer a back-handed lick, not knowing he was there. It seemed that he had been drinking. It was his first offense. When he discovered that he had struck an officer he never touched him any more and did not hurt him at all seriously. That boy has been transferred to another ship. He and one other were the only two Protestants on that ship; among the whole outfit there were just two Protestant sailors, and there is only one of them now.

These things just do not happen in this way. I am talking to you about matters that vitally affect this Government. The Bible says, "My people perish for lack of knowledge." Some countries perish for lack of courage in their public men. Now, here is what happens with some of them: This Roman machine slips around; it keeps in touch with Protestants it can use. It tells them, "If you will do this and do that we will give you the Catholic vote." You never get such Protestants to open their mouths for Protestant institutions or for American free institutions any more. Such men are not worth 5 cents any more to the cause of the country; but they get enough of that vote and by pussyfooting and whispered conversations do get elected; and when you bring up the question of the sovereignty of this Government, supreme power of the flag, they say, "That is all right; sure, that is all right. That just happens to be a cross, and the Pope has got one just like it on the Vatican, but what of it?" That is fine logic, is it not?

Now I am going to give you a chance to say whether or not any pennant shall fly above the American flag. I am going to ask the Senator from Maine if he will vote for a resolution that will declare it to be the fixed policy of this Government that no flag or pennant shall fly above the American flag?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I do not object to the question of the Senator in any way. If we are going to have any action on that matter that involves a change in the whole procedure of the Navy in this respect, I should think it should go before the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs to see whether or not there is any rhyme or reason in the request. Certainly I should not object to that.

Mr. HEFLIN. From what the Senator knows about it now, with the question up as to whether or not the pennant should fly above or below the American flag, which way would the Senator vote?

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator mean after the argument that he has made whether I would agree with him? If so, I must certainly say that I would not, and I do not believe that there are 10 Senators in the Chamber who would.

Mr. HEFLIN. We will give the Senator an opportunity to see, and I am going to predict that the Senator will receive a number of telegrams from Maine to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Maine will be delighted to have them.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator may speak his convictions and those of the Jesuits and others who do not want that pennant pulled down from above and put under the American flag, but he is not speaking the sentiments of the rank and file of Maine. I have been in Maine; I have spoken there; I know those people and they do not agree with him on this question. They do not want any flag hoisted above that flag; and when the Senator stands on this floor and becomes the champion of the Roman Catholic chaplains and the hierarchy, to keep that Roman cross above the flag, he is taking upon himself a considerable job.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senator knows that what he is saying is not based on facts in any way, shape, or manner whatever. He knows, if he has any intelligence, that that is not a Roman Catholic flag, and he has no right to call it such.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator is improving in his defense of the hierarchy. I assert that it is the Roman Catholic papal banner.

Before I pass from this point, let me say that just yesterday, after the Senator from Maryland objected to the passage of the resolution, I saw that this Roman Catholic anointed of the Pope, Nobile, is to fly to the North Pole, and here is a picture on the front page of the Washington Times showing the cardinals, and the Pope amongst them, anointing him. They have got a cross made out of a tree that grew in the garden of the Vatican; and Nobile, before he sets out on his mission, is blessed and anointed, and he agrees to pray, when he plants that cross on the top of the world, in the name of the Pope, whom they claim is the supreme power of the world.

I just wish the Senator from Maine could have gone there and witnessed that. If he had done that, he would have been in better position to defend them. This man is going up to drop that cross, to plant it in the ice. I imagine that a hundred years from now, when trips will frequently be made there, they will find that thing looking as though it grew up out of the ice, and there will be a lot of pilgrims who will swear that Christ himself put it there. Oh, it would have been glorious for the Senator from Maine to have been present on that occasion.

Mr. President, I have here a picture of the battleship Florida. There is Old Glory, drawn down a couple of feet or more; and up goes the Roman cross, flying to the breeze. In spite of the imagination of the Senator from Maine, it is flying there in the picture. I received a letter from a patriotic citizen who sent it to me, and he asked me why we did not look after that situation and change it. He said that he did not want to see any flag fly above our flag. Yet I encounter opposition from the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Maine when I raise the question as to which flag should fly in the uppermost place, when I contend for the right of our flag to be first, the right to have it fly with no other flag challenging its supreme authority. There is but one excuse you can give me—one of two. One is that the Romans want it there; the other is that Old Glory is not fit to fly first.

Mr. President, that flag flies over the great American household in which is sheltered religious freedom in America. But for that flag and its sovereign power, I would not have the right to worship as I choose; neither would you, nor the people here who hear me. It is by the sovereign power which that flag represents that I am entitled to worship as I choose. It is that flag, and what it represents, that gives every man and woman in the country the right to kneel down and worship God as he or she sees fit; the right of congregations throughout the country to repair to their churches on Sunday, whether they are plain log houses, brick, or stone, and conduct their services as they choose; and yet the Pope of Rome, Pius IX, declares in his doctrine that the State has no right to permit the citizen to have the religion of his choice. He declares in his doctrine, following that, that the Roman Church has the right to set up the Roman Catholic religion as the exclusive religion, and to exclude all other religions but the Roman Catholic religion.

Cardinal Gibbons, of Maryland, said:

> Nowhere in recorded history can you find a single instance where the doctrine laid down by any Pope was ever condemned or repudiated by another Pope. The doctrine of one Pope becomes the doctrine of all Popes, unchangeable and eternal.

Now, if that doctrine is taught in this land of ours—and it is—why do we sit here with folded arms, having eyes to see and seeing not, and ears to hear and hearing not, when they are pulling down our flag upon the battleships and elsewhere and flying the Roman cross above it?

Let me read to you what is being taught in the parochial schools of America right on this subject.

This is from the Manual of Christian Doctrine, and so forth, forty-fourth edition. It bears the imprimatur of Cardinal Dougherty as an approved textbook. The system of instruction is by question and answer. I quote two or three samples of the instruction that is now being given to our American children in Catholic parochial schools:

> Q. May the state separate itself from the church?—A. No; because it may not withdraw from the supreme rule of Christ.
> Q. What name is given to the doctrine that the state has neither the right nor the duty to be united to the church to protect it?—A. This doctrine is called liberalism. It is founded principally on the fact that modern society is founded on liberty of conscience and worship and liberty of speech and of the press.
> Q. Why is liberalism to be condemned?—A. Because it denies all subordination of the state to the church.

That is being taught in the parochial schools of America. One of the fundamental doctrines of this Nation is the separation of church and state—religious freedom—that every man, woman, and child may worship God as they choose. That is left to the citizen to decide; but here we are confronted with the doctrine of the Roman Catholic hierarchy, backed by the Roman Catholic political machine, with Al Smith as its chief head, trying to become President of the United States, claiming delegates right and left.

He has not got 500, and some of them are in question, and there will be contests at the convention. He is claiming 659. This little squirrel-headed fellow up here in the press gallery named Fox has claimed about enough to nominate him. They say Senator REED is as mad as a wet hen, if he will excuse the slang; that they are claiming his delegates and claiming other delegates; and now they bring forth the startling statement from Tammany that the thing that concerns them most is how to keep from nominating him on the first ballot!

What do you think of that? There never has been such a campaign made in the history of this country. My judgment is that there never has been so much money spent in any one man's campaign. I think a great deal has been spent in Mr. Hoover's campaign. I think the metropolitan press has determined to nominate Hoover for the Republicans, and Smith for the Democrats, and I think the hierarchy would be satisfied with either. Of course, they would like to have their own dear Al Smith, but they are not going to get him; and I do not think Hoover is going to be nominated. I think the Vice President has some chance; I think Frank Lowden has some chance; but I am inclined to think that you will nominate either Hughes or Coolidge. Put that in your pipes and smoke it until the convention and see how it works. [Laughter.]

Why are the leading Republicans trying to get Smith nominated? Why are the Republican Washington Post and these little Republican pen pushers boosting Smith and just trying to shove him right over on us? Because they know that if we nominate him, you Republicans will get in a room and you will laugh your sides sore. [Laughter.] You will say, "By golly! They did it. We can go fishing now." [Laughter.] You know you can beat him by ten or fifteen million votes, and that is why you are trying to put him on us. I want you to stop it [laughter] because I think something of the future of my party; the well-being of the Democratic Party.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The occupants of the galleries will be in order.

Mr. HEFLIN. It looks like the Democratic Party is fast becoming the only champion of the flag. The leader from Maine has gone back on it. The Senator from Pennsylvania was about to get into the lake. The Senator from Maryland—may the Lord have mercy on his soul! [Laughter.]

Here is a little fellow called Rothwell Brown. Rothwell is a pretty bright squib writer. He writes the "Postscripts," and he is properly the postscript. Listen what he observes about this race of Governor Smith's:

> If Senator JIM REED were as philosophical as Senator WALSH, he would realize that if Al Smith is finally turned down because he is a Catholic the Democratic nomination for President would be just about as valuable to any other candidate as a plugged nickel in a Broadway night club.

[Laughter.]

Do you understand how to count notches on a mile post, or to interpret figures on a cat-faced pine? Then there is a threat to the party that the Roman Catholic hierarchy will bolt; that unless we do their bidding, and accept their chosen candidate, they will vote some other ticket. Of course they will. That is nothing new for them. I understand they have interrogated these candidates for President a little.

I advocated this resolution to raise a committee to investigate these slush funds, and I am satisfied that there are Senators on that committee who are going to make something out of the investigation. You are going to investigate in earnest, and not let it be a farcical performance to whitewash somebody. I understand that Governor Smith gave out a statement that he had not even authorized anybody to give anything for him, and he had not asked anybody to act as treasurer. Why, of course not. Those are the Tammany tactics. Somebody else does that; and you note this: He has not made a speech in a single State in the Union outside of New York. He has not discussed national issues once. You will pardon me if I tell you I do not think he can. [Laughter.] I do not think he is presidential timber. I do not think he is big enough to fill that office. I do not think the Nation ought to accept a Tammanyite of that stripe for the office of President.

Grover Cleveland denounced and repudiated Tammany. Bryan, whose voice sounded around this Nation like a trumpet call, denounced and repudiated Tammany. Woodrow Wilson, a great man, twice elected President, denounced and repudiated Tammany. Her history is covered with the slime of crookedness and corruption from its birth time; and yet the great Democratic Party, which has produced some of the ablest men that ever adorned public life in this country, is now called upon to accept that man to be the leader of the host of Democracy; and we are threatened, like that Rothwell Brown squib, and others say that if we do not accept him they will bolt the party, and bring it to defeat.

Are we ready to heed those threats? Is the South ready to accept the threat against her, that Governor Smith and his bunch would punish the South by opposing measures which would benefit the South unless we fell in line and supported Smith? Yet that is a fact. Even the Washington Post had an editorial on that, and condemned them for employing those tactics. They went down in Virginia and made that speech. There is a publication gotten out by Doctor Scharf, a Roman Catholic, who is aiding Smith in the South, to the effect that they bolted in 1924, and that they would bolt again if Smith were not nominated.

What are they saying to us, in effect? Rothwell Brown has said that if the Democrats of America decided to nominate a Protestant instead of a Catholic, the Catholics would bolt. That is what they are saying. There is not any other way to express it but to tell the blunt truth about it. They are saying in their Catholic papers, "If you do not nominate Smith, the party will commit suicide." What is that equivalent to saying? "We are demanding his nomination, and if you do not accept him, we are going to bolt."

I say to loyal Democrats, you have no business considering a man like that as a candidate of the Democratic Party. He has no right or claim upon leadership in the party, or upon the support of Democrats.

That last move by Tammany was interesting; that the thing that was troubling them was how they were going to prevent a stampede to Smith, with Smith being nominated on the first ballot. They hope to avoid that! Are they not considerate and kind? They do not want to hurt the feelings of the favorite sons. Some Democrats are going to have a hard time ever emerging from this wreck that is coming if that fellow is nominated and they vote for him. You will see some of them after it is all over and ask, "How are you?" A great many of them will be lame and halt, and they will be saying, "I am poorly"; and they will be poorly.

And now Tammany is saying: "All we have to do now is to hold them back, and do not let them nominate him on the first ballot!" That is the only thing that is troubling them.

That reminds me of old Rufus, who joined the church when he was 80, and the parson said, "Some of you "niggers" stayed out of the church all your lifetime. I am going to give you a chance to say something now. I have got my eye on one who has been out all his life, and now he is 80 years old," looking at old Rufus. Old Rufus looked pious and blinked, and then got up and said, "As fur as I is individually concerned, the way is clear, dry, and smooth, just like the ceiling. They ain't no rocks or roots or stumps in the way. All I has to do is to walk right up to the pearly gates and go right in. The only thing that's troubling me is how is I gwine to get my shirt on over my wings." Old Rastus, a crap-shooting old fellow, sitting in the corner, rose up and said, "Yes, you old crap-shootin' devil, you; your trouble's gwine to be how is you gwine git your hat on over your horns." [Laughter.] That is going to be Alfred's trouble at Houston. They are not going to be able to put the Democratic hat over the ears of that Tammany tiger. The moral forces in the Democratic Party will never accept that as leadership.

The Senator from Maryland rises in his place here and makes wet speeches, attacking the eighteenth amendment and the law-enforcement forces of the country, nearly every chance he gets. He did imagine at one time that Ritchie had some chance; but Ritchie spoke himself out up here at the Jackson Day banquet. He is now not much more than an aid society to Alfred E. Smith.

The Senator from Maryland stands up here talking about violation of the law, and what is going to happen. You remember last year in the debate with me he said that if a dry were nominated there would be a third party, and a wet would be nominated. Do you remember that? I thought about him the other night. I read a horrible story from Kentucky, of a mother with her two boys and her daughter and her sister living with her out beneath the shades of her own roof tree; an American mother, entitled to protection, entitled to live undisturbed.

There was a stillhouse or two operating near her home. Her boys were being tempted. Her desire to rear them away from that miserable influence, her desire to see the law of the country enforced, her desire to have the Constitution lived up to, prompted her to walk 14 miles—an American mother, earnest enough to get out and walk the highway 14 miles in and 14 miles back—to quietly inform the officers of the law, of the law being broken, and of these evil influences near her home. It got out amongst the distillers that she had told. They gathered around her house at midnight and called one of her boys to the door, pretending to want to hire him to chop wood the next day. The boy agreed to do the work and he went back into the house. They found who was there. In half an hour or more they were awakened by hearing the crackling of fire. The house was filled with smoke. Their house was afire, being consumed in a flood of flame—and all this right here in America.

Outlaws and thugs had gone there, lighted this house with a torch, and gathered around with their guns. The door had been fixed so that it could not be opened, and one of the boys had to break it down with an ax from within. Then one of the boys leaped out through the smoke and they shot him four or five times. He hollered that he was shot. That was the first sound that greeted his mother's ears as she followed, the cry of her offspring, of her eldest boy, who was shot down and murdered in her home. Then they shot her, and she passed away in a moment or two. They shot her sister and shot her other boy and her daughter.

There was a mother guarding her offspring from the road of ruin, aiding the constituted authorities of her country to enforce the law, murdered for being a good citizen, killed for opposing the conduct of criminals, and hearing the wails of her offspring dying before she passed away, right here in the United States.

The outlaws, the criminal horde who attack the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act, are moving against the strongholds of the Government, shooting down mothers and killing their children, inspired by speeches made in this body, no doubt, and by other forces that are at work, since they feel that Al Smith, the Tammany wet, will soon be in charge, and the law will not be enforced, and the barrooms will come back, with all their attendant evils, these hell holes that haunted the Nation and dragged men and women down to ruin in the years that have gone; driven out by the prayers and the efforts of godly mothers and fathers in the country, by ministers of the gospel, by moral men and women, and now they are fighting to keep them out. Alfred Smith said in a speech in New York, we are told, that he wanted the day to come back when he could put his foot on the bar rail and blow the foam from the glass.

You would bring back the barroom, Governor Smith? We have a serious problem with the negro now. We have the best negroes in the world, and we have some of the meanest, and your social-equality ideas, Governor Smith, are hurting us in the South; already your dance halls in your home city of New York, where negro men dance with white women in New York City every night, present a mean and contemptible form of social equality.

Your effort to have the antilynching bill passed when your Democrats from Tammany would not vote with us was putting a premium on the crime of rape, and sowing dragon's teeth in the paths of white women in the South and in other sections of the country.

Governor Smith, you are not sound on that question; you are not sound on the whisky question; you are not sound on the great moral issues of the Nation. You are a Constitution nullifier. You withdrew your State from the Union so far as the eighteenth amendment is concerned. You bade defiance to that portion of the Constitution and announced in effect that you had no sympathy for it and no support for it in the action you took.

Now, Governor Smith, there is a doctrine in your church which declares that any part of the Constitution or laws condemned by the Pope is not binding on Catholics.

Not long ago, Governor Smith, the Delaware Express, a paper in the United States, took the college of cardinals to task for advising the repeal of the eighteenth amendment and the law-enforcement statutes of the United States, and that Delaware paper said that they were not taking their inspiration and directions from the Vatican in Rome, but were taking them from the people of this country, and that they relied upon the United States Congress to attend to these things.

Mr. President, on top of that, they are going around and digging up this money and pussyfooting about the country, slipping it here and yonder. It is hard to keep track of them. But you see the evil effects of their corrupt work.

I hope the campaign investigating committee will summon here the editor of the Asheville Citizen, of North Carolina, Mr. Webb. I want them to call him here and ask him if any contribution has been made to him or to his paper for the support of Governor Smith in North Carolina. I want the manager of his campaign in North Carolina subpœnaed, and I want the manager of his campaign in each congressional district subpœnaed, and asked who is furnishing the money they are using in North Carolina; asked the source of the financial aid they are getting.

I would like to have Mr. Wilbur Marsh, of Iowa, brought here, and Mayor Walker, of New York City, and others. There are some active up there, I understand, who are not in the city of New York; they are operating for Smith in this campaign on the Jersey side of the river. Let the committee inquire about them, and bring them down and see what they know about this question.

Mr. President, another word or two for the moment, and I will be through. Let me read you something interesting on this subject:

When a Catholic candidate is on a ticket and the opponent is a non-Catholic, let the Catholic candidate have the vote, no matter what he represents. (Catholic Review.)

A priest can not be forced to give testimony before a secular judge. (Taberna, a papal theologian, vol. 2, p. 288.)

The Roman Catholic citizens of the United States owe no allegiance to any principles of the Government which are condemned by the Pope. (The Tablet—R. C.)

Undoubtedly, it is the intention of the Pope to possess this country. In this intention he is aided by the Jesuits and all the Catholic prelates and priests. (Dr. O. A. Brownson—Catholic writer.)

Many non-Catholics fear us as a political organization and are afraid that the Catholic Church will dominate and rule. We are working quietly, seriously, and, I may say, effectively to that end.

June number, 1909, of the Missionary Roman Catholic:

We can have the United States in 10 years, and I want to give you three points for your consideration: The Indians, the negroes, and the common schools.

They will get control of the common schools of America. The next time I discuss this question I am going to tell how they captured the common schools of a large city, a city of considerable importance, and just what happened to the institution after they got charge of it, how they ignored the requests of the Protestants and how they have filled the places of teachers with Catholics.

I am going to call attention now to a bill introduced in the Legislature of New York a few years ago providing a penalty for any agency to go out in the rural districts seeking a school for a son or a daughter or a neighbor and telling what church they belonged to. At the hearings it was disclosed that the Knights of Columbus objected to the present way of doing these things because they said Catholics were discriminated against. If the Protestant people out in the communities were told that the person seeking a school was a Catholic they would not employ him or her, but wanted a Protestant. Think of that, Senators! Why should not they have Protestant teachers if they wanted them? Would you muzzle a Protestant community and deny it the right to have a Protestant to teach Protestant children? That is what that Catholic move sought to do.

Senators, did you know that Governor Smith offered an amendment to the State constitution of New York proposing to repeal the present provision which provides that no subdivision of the State or the State itself shall appropriate the taxpayers' money for sectarian schools? Governor Smith offered an amendment to repeal that provision in the constitution so as to allow subdivisions to appropriate money to the Roman Catholic schools. That is what was meant by sectarian schools. They control New York City absolutely, so they were going to put parochial schools on the basis of public schools, and Governor Smith was the author of that amendment. I have it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. HALE. I am compelled to go to a meeting of the conferees on the naval appropriation bill. I would like to explain that the flag which I described this morning as the papal flag was not the papal flag. The papal flag consists of a mitre with crossed keys under it.

Mr. HEFLIN. How is that?

Mr. HALE. The papal flag consists of a mitre with crossed keys under it. I described this morning a flag with a crucifix and cross on it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Now the Senator says the cross is under it.

Mr. HALE. I have stated that the papal flag is a flag with a mitre and crossed keys underneath.

Mr. HEFLIN. Crossed keys?

Mr. HALE. The keys are crossed under it.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is a cross just the same!

Mr. HALE. Oh, no; it it not.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is a very interesting piece of information the Senator from Maine is now offering. It does not make any difference whether the cross is made of keys or straight bars. Show it to me. Oh, no; that is not a key. That is a flag flying at each end of the material forming the Catholic cross.

Mr. HALE. Oh, no; it is a mitre and crossed keys.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not know what they call it. I know it is a flag at the upper end of the crossed bars. They have two flags flying at the upper end of the cross.

Mr. HALE. No, Mr. President. I have explained that it is a mitre, and the crossed keys have nothing to do with a flag.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator is not only wrong on the other question, but he is blind on this one. Anybody can see that those are little flags at the end of that cross. Would the Senator give the impression that they are the Vatican keys to unlock the sovereign household of America? Well, I do not think that will be done.

It does not make any difference whether they run the flag at the top of those crosspieces, or whether they run it at the bottom. The flags are there. The pennant is one that has been gotten up, not by the Protestants of America, not by the Jews, but by that other force. They are very successful in getting certain Protestants to come to their rescue, and they will get the Senator from Maine in a lot of trouble if he does not mind. They will have him explaining all over Maine why he has championed the plan of a foreign potentate to fly that flag above the United States flag. I did not ask him to get into this discussion. I told him at the outset I would rather he would stay out. [Laughter.] But he has come in of his own accord, and that is his privilege. Now let him explain to his people in Maine.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we vote immediately on this flag resolution of mine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BRUCE. I object. I desire to say something on the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, according to the rule we would have to have a quorum called first.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Before a vote could be taken by unanimous consent we would have to have a quorum call.

Mr. HEFLIN. Very well; I had a purpose in making that request now; I will wait and renew the request later. It may be necessary for me to make a motion. My resolution is already on the table and can be taken from there. I want a quorum here when we vote on it. I want every one to have a chance to express himself on it. I think it is high time that the country, through the Congress, should fix a policy regarding the use and abuse of the United States flag. We will never have this question before us any more if we do that. If anyone wants to put up a pennant somewhere around the ship's edge to announce religious services on Sunday, that can be done. I am utterly surprised that any Senator on this floor would rise here and quibble on the question when it is so simple that a child can see it and understand it. If there is no design in putting it above our flag, why does not everybody rise up and say so? There would be no harm done. Put it below our flag. Why should they insist that it go up there? That is a question for us to consider.

Who are we representing, the people of America or the people who have some sort of secret allegiance to a foreign government? Mr. President, I told the Senate the other day that the supreme authority of that flag in the United States was challenged by the Pope of Rome and his cardinals recently. Sixty-three Americans, members of the Catholic Church, in Rhode Island, who had given large sums of money to a Catholic bishop and priest, asked what they had done with it. They refused to tell. They said, "We will take you into court." Was it not the natural thing for American citizens to want to go into an American court of justice to have their claims adjudicated? They ought to have been encouraged. Of course, the bishop and priest had to go into court in the matter. They were indignant. What did they do? They took the names of those 63 Americans to Rome. The Americans were not there in person. They tried those American citizens in a college of cardinals, a church court in a foreign country.

They found against them on this transaction in Rhode Island, United States of America. They condemned and repudiated those American citizens. They excommunicated them, which means that so far as they could they sent their souls to hell for going into a court of justice in America, suing the bishop and priest to get an accounting of the funds in their hands amounting to a million dollars or more. They attacked their business. One of them was an editor. They issued an edict that he could not run his American paper another day. They tried to confiscate his paper by an edict under the Roman flag in Rome when he was exercising his rights as an American citizen under the American flag at home. Which one of those countries has jurisdiction? I say again, we have soldiers and marines in Nicaragua defending the property of American citizens, but who is defending that poor editor in Rhode Island, right under the United States flag, for committing no crime whatever? All he did was to go into an American court of justice instead of a Roman Catholic Church court in a foreign country. They wanted to know the truth and they had a right as American citizens to know it. Their names were taken to Rome in their absence; this action was taken; they condemned his property and ordered him to cease publishing his paper at once.

Senators do not seem to know what is going on. Doctor McDaniel, the great Baptist preacher, president of the Southern Baptist Convention, said in the last public speech he ever made to his people: "Of all countries in the world, the Pope wants to get control of America." I have read you doctrine from the Catholic books showing that they intend to control it. The strong men are now laying the foundation, one of them said. Doctor Chapman, of Yale or Harvard, in his book said the Roman Catholic Knights of Columbus slogan is "M. A. C.," meaning "Make America Catholic." Doctor McDaniel said Mussolini and the Catholics had destroyed free speech in Rome; they have destroyed religious freedom; they have destroyed the religious press; they have closed Protestant churches; and burned the lodges of Masons. They have murdered Masons in their homes, 137 of them in one night in Florence, Italy. The grand master of the Masons in Italy is now in prison because he dared to meet with his brethren in a Masonic lodge—five years imprisonment by Mussolini's order, the most dangerous Roman Catholic tyrant in all the world.

Pardon me for expressing the belief that Mussolini was in that plot to kill King Emanuel recently when a bomb exploded. They tried to say that he, too, was in danger, but he was not. The bomb exploded before the King got there. He was a little late. Now, subsequently, we are told that Mussolini is talking about driving the king from his throne and taking it himself. This tyrant, this Roman Catholic tyrant, this man who is secretly conniving with the Vatican in Rome, is a dangerous man. Doctor McDaniel said if the Roman Catholics of the United States wanted to, they could use their influence on the Pope and Mussolini and stop the killing of Protestant and Jew Masons, stop the burning of their lodges, unfetter speech, restore free press, and permit the Protestants and Jews to worship as they choose. He said if they wanted to they could do that, but they will not do it. He said if Mussolini and the Pope wanted to give this freedom to those Protestants and Jews there they could do it, but they will not.

Wake up, America! That flag is the ensign of a Nation's strength and solidarity. It is the battle flag of a patriot Republic. It is the banner of constitutional liberty. Marks, of Tennessee, once speaking of America, said:

> Her emblem is the eagle. Her flag, like a scrap of midnight heaven, blossoms with stars. Stars and eagles belong near the sky, and she will take them home if glory's wing can get her there.

I want our flag to be first and uppermost nearest the sky. I do not want any eye in the world to see that flag pulled down and another flag put above it. Whether it be a Roman Catholic flag or any other flag. Let our flag be first at all times, asserting at home and abroad her single and supreme national authority.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama has said, "God bless the State of Maryland; I sometimes sympathize with her." I reciprocate by saying, "God bless the State of Alabama; I often condole with her," and so does all the press of this country at the present time, and I might say also all of its enlightened citizens.

Of course, the Senator from Alabama is not inclined to draw distinctions between the religious crosses that are consecrated by the strong devotional feelings of mankind. The only cross in which he is interested is the "fiery cross" of the Ku-Klux Klan, which has been responsible during the last three years for no fewer than 700 floggings in the State of Alabama, some of old men, some of women, and some of children.

Mr. HEFLIN. I challenge that statement. It is not true. There has been a lot of misrepresentation made about that by the Roman-Catholic-controlled press of my State.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I decline to be interrupted. All I want to say is that the truth would be in a bad way if the final test of truth was the ultimatum of the Senator from Alabama.

Many years ago a Member of this body entertained the same fear of assassination by some agency, the exact nature of which I forget, that the Senator from Alabama does, of assassination at the hands of the Catholic Church; and Senator Thurman, of Ohio, commenting on that fact, said on one occasion that the idea of that Senator that he might be assassinated was "the airiest bubble that had ever found lodgment in an empty head." So I say that an airier bubble never found lodgment in a—I will not repeat the adjective—head than the idea of the Senator from Alabama that I have been prompted by any Catholic ecclesiastic, prelate, or layman to object to the instant consideration of the bill which he attempted to bring to a vote yesterday. Not one single, solitary ecclesiastic, prelate, or layman has ever had a word to say to me, either epistolary or oral, with respect to that bill. Equally absurd is the idea that the conditional objection that I made to it yesterday was prompted by any special interest of any sort. Never has a single line been written nor a single word uttered to me by any banker, broker, factor, merchant, trader, or any person whatsoever in relation to the bill. The abusive allegations of the Senator from Alabama are wholly the fictions of his own distempered, and I am beginning to believe almost deranged intellect. [Laughter.] I simply asked that the bill, which I had had no opportunity to examine, should not be taken up yesterday for instant consideration, as I wished an opportunity to examine its contents.

Mr. HEFLIN. It was on day before yesterday.

Mr. BRUCE. Was it the day before yesterday? If that is true, I am glad to see that the Senator from Alabama is for once accurate.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will be accurate again in a few minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BRUCE. No. It is beyond the Senator's power to be accurate. I recollect that Judge Black once spoke of somebody or something as being "marked by loose and lavish unveracity," and I have never heard the Senator from Alabama make a speech in my life that was not marked by loose and lavish inaccuracy.

I took it for granted, naturally enough, that our Department of Agriculture would not have pursued for years the practice of making predictions with reference to crop prices unless there had been some popular demand for price prediction, and unless there had been some sort of substantial basis found in the human reason for such a practice; but I was as good as my word. As soon as I had the opportunity I read the bill, and notwithstanding the fact that I observed that it had been so amended as to eliminate from it all reference to predictions in relation to corn and wheat and other commodities than cotton, I became inclined to vote for it——

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the Senator yield there?

Mr. BRUCE. That is to say, to withdraw my objection to its consideration, should consideration again be asked for at any time, though to this moment it has been my hope that some Member of the Senate—if there be such a Member opposed to it—might rise and give me a clearer understanding than I have had of the reasons why the administrative practice of making price predictions has prevailed for so many years.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield now?

Mr. BRUCE. So the Senator has not only indulged in scurrilous language with reference to me, but he has indulged in it from the point of view of the fortunes of his own bill, when there was no occasion for his doing so; but I suppose that when the Senator gives free rein to his natural instincts of scurrility it makes very little difference to him whether there is any real provocation for his doing it or not.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRUCE. No; I do not. You have already made a threat as to what you propose to say in reply to me.

Mr. HEFLIN. The department never has made those price predictions before.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland declines to be interrupted.

Mr. BRUCE. They had never previously made these price predictions?

Mr. HEFLIN. No, sir; they never made those predictions until last year.

Mr. BRUCE. Then, it is hard for me to see how there could be any considerable fund of human experience to show that the practice is a pernicious or inexpedient one.

So much for that. Now, just a word with regard to the pennant that flies above our ships during the hour of prayer. As has been already explained, that pennant is not the Catholic pennant at all. The Catholic pennant is a yellow and white flag with the crossed keys of St. Peter and the papal tiara. That is the Catholic flag. The flag that flies above our ships is a flag that, like the Constitution of our country, like the human heart when it is at its best, knows no sect whatsoever. It is flown from the ship whether its chaplain is a Catholic priest or a Presbyterian minister or a Methodist pastor or a Baptist pastor or a Lutheran pastor. It is a blue cross on a white field, the Christian cross that is common to all sects, except, as I am informed, the Greek Orthodox Church, whose cross is the St. Andrew's cross.

And why should that pennant not fly at the masthead above our national flag when our naval officers and sailors are paying their brief homage in prayer to God, the God who is not only the God of mercy and the God of love, but the God of hosts. It is flown to notify every passing vessel that on the ship on which it is spread to the breeze the hour is being dedicated to the worship of God, to reverence for His holy name, and to the cultivation of the profoundest and most exalted sentiments by which the human breast can be animated. It has been flown on our warships ever since 1850, and on British warships for the last 800 years, it is said.

Never, it seems to me, is the character of the Christian more impressively, more strikingly illustrated than when he is pictured as a soldier. He owes allegiance to the most powerful of all princes. He serves under the greatest of all commanders. It is his duty, as it is that of the seaman or the ordinary soldier, to obey his superiors and to keep step with his comrades. In his bosom is the battle field on which the principles of good and evil are ever struggling for the mastery. It is eminently proper, therefore, that His pennant should, at times, in the hour of prayer, in the hour of devotion, in moments of adoration or reverence, fly above the Stars and Stripes from the mastheads of our ships, or be elevated above them in the military field.

As for me, I see nothing inappropriate, I see nothing incongruous, I see nothing that deserves criticism or censure in the pennant of Christ floating for a few minutes of worship above our proud national emblem; and when I see it streaming in the wind my mind goes back to those beautiful lines of Shakespeare, in Richard II, when, speaking of the end of "banished Norfolk," he says that Norfolk—

> Toil'd with works of war, retired himself
> To Italy; and there at Venice gave
> His body to that pleasant country's earth,
> And his pure soul unto his captain Christ,
> Under whose colors he had fought so long.

These are the sensations, these are the feelings, aroused in my heart, and I believe in the heart of every Member of the Senate, except perhaps that of the Senator from Alabama, when we see that religious emblem aloft in the pure air of heaven.

I do not intend to follow the Senator any further in his long rambling and disconnected observations on pretty much everything with which the human mind of the United States is concerned at the present time. Least of all have I any intention of offering any defense of Governor Smith. He is already as good as nominated. Every thinking man knows that. Now that in Maryland we have been unable to make certain the nomination of our own honored governor—who, in my opinion, is the best qualified man in the United States at the present time to be President—it is a source of nothing but intense gratification to me that Governor Smith will so assuredly be nominated, and, as I believe, elected, too.

For many months past I have said that, other things being equal, at the present time—though under ordinary circumstances I do not think that sectarian distinctions of any sort should have any place in the public life of this country—I should rather see a Catholic, if you please, nominated to the Presidency of the United States, than any Protestant, because, in the providence of God, the time has come when another solemn appeal should be made to the fidelity of the American people to the Federal Constitution, which, of course, bans sectarian distinctions of every sort so far as the political life of our country is concerned, and when every true American should be quick to set his foot upon the rising spirit of sectarian intolerance, which has recently been such a disgraceful, not to say such an abominable feature of our national life.

The Senator made some reference to Francis Scott Key, the author of the Star-Spangled Banner. Besides being a poet of some merit, and a true American, he was as pure minded a man and as devout a Christian as ever lived in our land. The thought that he would not have been willing that the pennant which is the pennant of no single church but of all churches, should fly in hours of devotion at sea above the flag that he did so much to glorify, is one that is not tenable for a moment to a Marylander who is familiar with his character, his career, and his religious and political beliefs.

No; I say that nothing better could befall this country, nothing would do more to purify our political atmosphere at the present time, than the election to the Presidency of the United States of some one who did not happen to be a Protestant. Governor Smith is about to be nominated to the Presidency not because he is a Catholic but because he is a man of the most delightful and magnetic personality; because his whole career has been marked in the highest degree by integrity and public spirit; because he is endowed with an extraordinary measure of administrative genius; and because he has taken hold of the imagination of the country as no one has done for years past in our political history.

It so happens that no other Catholic in our national annals, unless it is Charles Carroll of Carrollton, has ever been sufficiently famous to be pointed out as a highly eligible candidate for the Presidency of the United States; but now that we have a man who answers that description, and who happens to be of a different faith from mine or from the faith of the Senator from Alabama, if he has any, which I am inclined to doubt, he is to be rejected on the preposterous ground that he is a Papist, or that, if elected to the Presidency of the United States, he would be subservient to some influence inimical to the welfare of the people of the United States! It is enough to state such a proposition to doom it to condemnation.

Why, the splendid qualifications of this man for the Presidency are not certified to by Democrats alone. By far the most impressive tributes that I have ever heard paid to his abilities and public usefulness are those paid to them by three of the most celebrated Republican residents of the State of New York—indeed, of the entire United States—Elihu Root, Charles E. Hughes, and Nicholas Murray Butler. Upon credentials from such members of the Republican Party as these, as well as upon credentials from members of his own party, the claims of Governor Smith to the Presidency are based.

In fine, in the fullness of time just what was predicted by Theodore Roosevelt—that true American, who scorned sectarian bigotry as few great Americans have—is about to take place. You will recollect that in one of his famous letters he said, if I recall his words aright, that in the future it was not unreasonable to expect that a Catholic would become President of the United States, and later a Jew.

I say, God speed that day; because once elect a Catholic or a Jew to the Presidency of the United States, and never again would we hear anything more of hateful sectarian distinctions in connection with the Chief Magistracy of our Nation. To-day we have sitting upon our supreme bench, in the city of Baltimore, two Americans of Jewish extraction, and two of the most learned and useful judges on that bench they are. The two most famous chief judges that have ever sat upon the bench of the Court of Appeals of Maryland in my time were two great Catholic lawyers and jurists, Judges Alvey and McSherry. Two of the greatest Chief Justices that have ever sat upon the Bench of the Supreme Court of the United States, Chief Justice Taney and Chief Justice White, were Catholics; and there are one or more Catholics sitting upon the Bench of the Supreme Court to-day. Surely if we can commit our lives, our liberties, and fortunes to the arbitrament of Catholic judges we can safely intrust to a Catholic the responsibilities of the loftiest executive office of our country.

Who stops to think any longer whether a man appointed to high judicial office, and clothed with the most exacting duties with which an individual can be invested is a Catholic or a Protestant or a Jew? We have long passed that stage of primitive superstition and prejudice. This thought—how contemptible it is—that the heart of the Catholic is not as devotedly loyal to every part of our country as that of any other American citizen whatsoever.

Why, it is a fact that practically every battle lyric that has ever stirred the heart of the South, not to speak of Catholic patriotism in its larger aspects, was written by a Catholic.

Who wrote The Sword of Lee? Who wrote The Conquered Banner? Father Ryan, of Alabama, a Catholic priest. Who wrote Maryland, My Maryland—that inspiring battle song? Randall, of Maryland, a Catholic. Who wrote Hurrah for the Bonny Blue Flag—that flag that was so often dyed with the richest crimson from the veins of the South? Why, an Arkansas Catholic.

Ah! Far better did the trustees of the University of Virginia know the true heart of the South than the Senator from Alabama when that university held its great centenary celebration a few years ago, to which illustrious men repaired from almost every corner of the globe, and selected as the priest to open the exercises on that memorable occasion Bishop O'Connell, a Catholic bishop of the city of Richmond, Va.

The Senator from Alabama is in no danger of assassination. Let him not lay that flattering unction, for that is all it is, to his soul. American patriots, American Democrats, can not afford to have him assassinated. He is making more friends for religious freedom and Governor Smith than any other man in the land. I for one am ready at any moment to form part of a bodyguard with which to preserve his precious life—so priceless to us in making intolerance detestable, in showing how much better it is that the human heart should be actuated by love than by hate, and how much more advisable it is that we should cling, as to the cords of our eternal salvation, to our Federal Constitution, which tolerates no sectarian discrimination whatever, than that we should be engaged in the odious, the un-Christian, the unpatriotic, the wicked task of stirring up brother against brother and sister against sister and of curdling all that is kindliest in the sweet milk of human nature; the effect of such conduct is simply to estrange us from the teachings of Washington and Jefferson and Madison and the other great founders of this Republic, who inculcated, as they inculcated hardly anything else, the principle of religious freedom, and brings us to that domain of narrow-mindedness, of bitterness, of rancor, and of discord, in which the despicable bigot lives and has his being.

I had not expected to say what I have said. Perhaps I have spoken longer than I should have done, but I would have been false to my country, false to the State that I have the honor in part to represent in this body, and above all to myself, if I had not said what I have said.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I shall be very brief in replying to the defense that the Senator from Maryland has tried to make of himself and his political alignments.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me just a moment; or does the Senator prefer to go on now?

Mr. HEFLIN. I would prefer to go on now. I am not going to speak long.

Mr. NORBECK. I just want to make a short speech on a Republican candidate for President.

Mr. HEFLIN. I would like to proceed briefly now, because I want to get through and get a bite to eat. I have had nothing to eat since breakfast.

Mr. NORBECK. If I do not have to wait too long.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator will not have to wait long. I have already spoken at length and I assure the Senator that I will not speak long.

Mr. President, in the first place, the Senator from Maryland has shown how utterly innocent he is, not to say ignorant, of the facts about this price-predicting power and practice of the Agricultural Department.

Last year, the time we complained of, is the only time they ever made such a prediction about cotton prices. The Senator consumed a great deal of time justifying what he called a practice of a long period of years by the Department of Agriculture. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] showed that this cotton-price prediction was something new under the sun, and that they had no authority to make this prediction, and we complained about it, and we are now trying to keep it from happening again. That was and is the purpose of my bill. So the Senator now shows that he objected to the consideration of it on a ground that did not exist. His information or misinformation was absolutely incorrect, and not sound in any particular. He made his objection and opposed the passage of the bill, according to his own statement, because he was not at all informed about the matter. The Senator also said that he would be glad to see a Roman Catholic elected President over a Protestant. Doctor McDaniel, the great president of the Southern Baptist Convention, in 1926, in a great speech, one of the greatest I ever read, goes on to show that this country was established by Protestants; that these institutions that have grown out of the work of the statesmanship of the early days are Protestant institutions; that there were not in the United States anywhere Catholics of any consequence except a handful with Lord Baltimore over here in Maryland.

I am proud of these institutions, and I do not want to see them lose their Protestant form. I am not fighting the Catholic religion. I am willing for the Catholic to worship as he chooses. I do not know of a Protestant or a Jew in the United States who would, if he could, prevent a Catholic from worshiping as he wants to worship, but I am fighting the Roman Catholic hierarchy and the Roman Catholic machine. I am fighting the declared purpose of the Roman Catholic Church, not the individual's right or desire to worship as he chooses. I am fighting a program that is dangerous to religious freedom in America.

The last book given to the public by the Catholics in America, so far as I know, was written by Doctor Ryan, a Catholic priest of this city, who is the professor of moral theology in the Catholic University of America. Senators, the Senator from Maryland does not keep informed, because I do not think he reads any Protestant literature. He is well informed on the Vatican, he knows what the Jesuits desire and what the program of priest and Pope is, but he is not informed about American affairs from the American standpoint.

Listen to this: In this book which Doctor Ryan has written he sets out boldly and pointedly that when the day comes in the United States when Catholics are strong enough they will set up the Catholic state, declare the Catholic religion, and proscribe other religions; that they may permit some of them to continue to worship until they die out, but they will not be permitted to carry on general propaganda. You can not have your protracted meetings, you can not invite outsiders to join your church, but must eke out your existence until you die, and then the Catholic religion will be declared to be the only religion in the United States. That is what I am fighting against, fighting against the day, and God stay the hand that would bring it, when they will proscribe me and mine, and you and yours, and make us worship as Catholics would have us worship, as they did in Mexico for 400 years, as they have done in other Catholic countries, as they do in the Argentine Republic now. There is a provision in the Constitution of the Argentine Republic to-day, a sister republic, that nobody but a Roman Catholic can be president of that country.

In the face of that the so-called Protestant Senator from Maryland, who was once, I believe, a Presbyterian, and who is now a high church Episcopalian, is gradually moving toward the Vatican. He expresses his wish, and his sincere hope and supreme desire, to see a Roman Catholic elected above all the Protestant statesmen in America President of the United States.

Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland talked about the old days when Roger B. Taney was on the Supreme Bench, and when Priest Ryan wrote The Sword of Lee and Furl that Banner. I want to say to the Senator that in that day the Catholic population was small; they were not flying their flag above the Stars and Stripes; they were not making open and determined warfare against the public-school system of America; they were not bold enough to write in their books to the faithful the program that they were going to proscribe Protestants and Jews and suppress Protestant and Jew religion.

In those days no Pope would have dared to issue an edict condemning the property of an American citizen in Rhode Island or elsewhere and, by an order from Rome, confiscate his property right here under the flag of the United States. In those days, Mr. President, no priest would have dared sit in these galleries and hiss a United States Senator, as one of them did me when I was helping to defeat their Mexican war program. In those days no priest would have dared to state, as this thug Priest Belford, of New York City, in his periodical, a Catholic paper, did, when he said that they (meaning the Roman Catholics) ought to hire thugs to waylay me and murder me on my way home from the Capitol.

I remind the Senator from Maryland of these bold and brazen encroachments and all these outrageous programs that they are now laying down right here in the United States. They assert in their doctrine that "the public-school system of America ought to go where it came from—the devil." Then the Senator wonders why I give warning to my country in these strange times when so many Americans are asleep.

When I assailed the Roman Catholics for their efforts to get us into war with Mexico, every priest about this place—that I have heard about—condemned me. Every Roman Catholic writer in this press gallery assailed me and misrepresented me and slandered me all over the country. Every Roman Catholic paper in the Nation assailed and slandered and vilified me because I was talking as an American against their un-American program, because I was asserting my rights as an American Senator to defeat, if possible, the Roman Catholic program for war with Mexico. They hated me because I seemed to have the foresight to see just what they were trying to do and had dared to tell the Senate and the country about it.

They would not have dared do that in the days about which the Senator from Maryland speaks when he is courting Catholic votes in Baltimore. I want to remind the Senator that just such obeisance to the flag of the Pope and by the way that particular flag is driving his State away from those who have had control of the Democratic Party there. I want to assert on this floor as a Democrat who has spoken in the name of the Democratic Party since my early youth time that the Democratic Party is not going to become the tail to a Roman Catholic kite in America. The Democratic Party of the Nation, the upstanding, red-blooded Americans of the Nation, under the flag of Democracy, are not going to permit the Roman Catholic political machine of Tammany to intimidate and control the great Democratic Party. Let the Senator from Maryland put that in his pipe and smoke it.

Mr. President, let me also remind the Senator that Baltimore, a Democratic city, defeated a Roman Catholic candidate for mayor last year by 17,000 majority. Archbishop Curley, it is said, insisted on nominating Curran, a Catholic, a very clever and able man. They followed Bishop Curley's suggestion and nominated him, and he was defeated by a large majority.

I want to remind the Senator that a Protestant mayor was elected in Boston; that in Chicago, Dever, the Roman Catholic candidate, went down before Thompson, the Protestant, and in Detroit a man by the name of Smith, a Catholic, was defeated.

I spoke in Detroit in June last year. I addressed Masons, members of the Junior Order of American Mechanics, Knights of the Ku-Klux Klan, the Odd Fellows, and other patriotic citizens. They had a parade in a park. The Romanists objected. The mayor, a Roman Catholic, had machine guns sent out there. They clubbed women, one, it was charged, with a baby in her arms, her head lacerated with a club in the hands of a Catholic policeman, and they had to take her to a hospital.

I addressed them just after all this had occurred. Those fine and brave Americans were ready to fight and die, but I said, "Do not do that; that is not wise or best. They have done enough to make you want to fight and do something desperate, but do not do it. Listen: If you have the American manhood and womanhood that I think you have, lay this to Mayor Smith, candidate for reelection, and beat him for reelection." They did it. Protestants and Jews who were not klansmen were indignant at the action of that Roman Catholic mayor in clubbing those Protestant people, and so they joined with the people imposed upon and clubbed, and beat him by 17,000 votes and drove him out of office. That is what happened to this crowd that is trying to pull down the American standard and put Al Smith in the White House and their standard above the United States flag.

The Senator from Maryland said that three great Republicans had paid high tribute to Al Smith. I told him in the outset that they are trying to get Smith nominated. They know that they can defeat him easily. The Senator told us that Elihu Root had complimented him. Elihu Root is the man who wrote that corporation constitution which Smith tried to put over a few years ago in New York and which the people of New York beat by 500,000 majority. Charles E. Hughes, the able and distinguished American citizen, perhaps the ablest man in the Republican Party to-day, complimented him, I think, because he wants the Democrats to nominate him. He knows that he can toss him around and play with him in a race for President, and operate on him as he chooses. That is why Mr. Hughes complimented Governor Smith.

Then comes old Nicholas "Flurry" the Butler, of the Columbia University, this old whisky-soaked bag of New York. He, a Republican, comes out and boosts Al Smith. Well, his wife is a Roman Catholic and he is rearing his children in the Roman Catholic Church. You know whenever one of those smart alecks, sailing under false colors, gets very smart I unhorse him before the public. I have the history of every one of them, and of their Roman Catholic connections. So I am telling you about old Nicholas Flurry the Butler, of Columbia University. So that disposes of Senator BRUCE'S Nicholas Flurry, the Butler.

The Senator from Maryland referred to President Roosevelt. Roosevelt, in his letter to Archie Butt, which was among the letters Archie gave to his mother at Augusta, Ga., and which were published after Archie Butt died, said: "The Catholic Church is out of harmony with American institutions. It is a Latin proposition," he said, "and could never hope to grow and expand except by emigration." That is what Roosevelt felt and said.

Now, what else? The Senator from Maryland talks about me attacking Catholics. I am not attacking the individual Catholic nor his right to worship God as he chooses. I have two letters now from those American citizens of Roman Catholic faith in Rhode Island thanking me for taking their part and defending them in the Senate in this hour "of their deep trouble." Instead of the Senator from Maryland being of any value to the American Catholics who want to be real Americans he leaves it to me to defend them and their American rights in the Senate and they are now writing and thanking me for what I have said. In this letter one of them said he would like to vote for me for President. If the Senator from Maryland had heard that he would have fainted, would not he? [Laughter.]

Now, in conclusion, the Senator from Maryland said that he would like to form a bodyguard to protect me. Mr. President, I have been frequently threatened. I have probably 250 letters from various sections of the country from Roman Catholics, saying to me that if I did not let up and cease making my fight in the Senate on this question they would murder me. Of course, that is not pleasant. I have written 37 letters, and they are in the hands of 37 friends, true and tried, saying that if anything happens to me I want those letters published and I want my expressed will carried out.

I do not intend that the time shall ever come when these pussyfooting priests and Jesuits shall stalk around the Capitol and intimidate Senators, and whisper in their ears to "Go in there and punish this man or that because he dares to speak for his country and against the Roman Catholic program." I want the truth known. They know what will happen to them if they ever carry out their threats against me. I hope they will not, but if it takes a promise from me to them to cease my fight for my country to prevent it, I swear before God in the United States Senate that I refuse to make such a promise. That is my position.

Mr. President, if I know my own heart I am for my country. I am going to continue to support it regardless of any view the Senator from Maryland may have, who has this day and yesterday brought down on his head the wrath of the rank and file of the party in Maryland. Let him and them settle that question.

No, Mr. President, I do not want the Senator from Maryland on any bodyguard for me. He will have to excuse me. I would hate to lie down and sleep in a room, if it was not locked, with a bunch of bodyguards such as some of them might select for me. I prefer to have Masons and Klansmen, and the Knights of Pythias, Woodmen of the World, Odd Fellows, and other Americans who do not belong to any fraternity, rather than to have the Senator from Maryland and the Knights of Columbus. That is my position. The Senator will have to excuse me. I could not vote for the Senator to be my bodyguard. This is a very delicate question but I must be excused.

The Senator from Maryland was a member of the committee of the Senate investigating a Roman Catholic scandal and conspiracy to destroy me politically. That scheme and criminal performance was born in the brains of Knights of Columbus and Catholic priests and Jesuits. They set up the machinery and turned it over to Hearst, whose wife is a Catholic, to bring me into a scandal and ruin me if possible.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I was chairman of the committee that investigated the incident to which the Senator has just referred. There was no evidence whatsoever that Mr. Hearst's wife or any Catholic priest had anything to do with it. The thing originated in the mind of a man named Avilla, who wanted to get money for his purposes.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am not asking the Senator from Pennsylvania to make any suggestion to me. I will come to him in a minute. I was just going on to say that this conspiracy framed against me was born in the minds of Roman Catholics. I did not expect the Senator from Maryland or Pennsylvania to say that, but I did not expect them to do what he did in that important matter. Avilla swore before that committee. He is a cross between an Italian Catholic and a Roman Catholic Mexican. He swore before that committee, and the testimony has been changed.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Does the Senator mean that we changed one syllable of that testimony?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not; but it certainly was changed by somebody.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The committee does not know it if there was one syllable changed.

Mr. HEFLIN. I heard his testimony, and I will swear to what I heard. He was asked, "Who did you get those papers from?" He said he got them from Catholic clerks of the Government of Mexico.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I heard every syllable of his testimony and there was nothing like that in it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Nothing like that in it?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; not a word.

Mr. HEFLIN. I repeat that Avilla said what I say that he said.

I will send for the record. That part of it is still in there. I will send a page for the record of the hearings. I want to show the Senator from Pennsylvania before the Senate and the public. That part is still in there. They said, "What did you tell them you wanted to do with it?" He said, "I told them I wanted it for Bishop Diaz, a Roman Catholic bishop." Did he not say that? I did not know there was a Mexican Diaz, a Catholic bishop. I was in the committee room and heard him. He said, "I told them I wanted them for Bishop Diaz, a Roman Catholic bishop," and that is the part that they struck out. He might have corrected his statement. I do not know. The first part is in there yet, that he got them from Catholic clerks of the Mexican Government, and that "they wanted them for Bishop Diaz" is stricken out.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. He was not allowed to see his testimony before it went to the printer. There was not one word of it changed by him or by anybody else so far as I know.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is worse still. If he did not do it, I would like to know who did. I have witnesses who were with me and heard him make that statement. I made that statement on the floor of the Senate in my speech on January 18 by what I heard him say and not by that changed record. They undertook to ruin me, and I got up on the floor of the Senate as an American Senator and exposed that Roman Catholic conspiracy and crime and told the truth about it and drew my own conclusions as to how it was brought about. I have had over 6,000 letters from people in every State in the Union who read the facts, and they agreed with me and indorsed my position. I came here and made my speech denouncing those scoundrels who conspired together to get up that conspiracy. When I got through the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the temporary leader of the Democrats, rose with a well-prepared speech and attacked me. Who got him to make it? This Roman influence? I think it did.

What did the Mexican scandal investigating committee do? It did what it could not help but do in one instance. It exonerated me, freed me of all suspicion and charges of wrongdoing, as it did the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. Then the members of the committee folded their tents like Arabs and silently marched away. They have never said a word of condemnation of Hearst. They brought no indictment against Avilla, a Roman Catholic, who had dragged the names of four of their colleagues into this Catholic Mexican scandal. They have not said anything condemnatory of him yet. Is not that strange? Then talk about it not being time that we should take some steps to curb this rampant Roman Catholic spirit in America and check its hurtful influence in Congress. What influence prevented proper action by Senator ROBINSON, of Arkansas, and BRUCE, of Maryland, and REED, of Pennsylvania, and JOHNSON, of California? Why did they not condemn Hearst and ask the Senate to condemn him and Avilla?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The committee found the facts and left the denunciation to those who enjoy it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; the committee found the facts. It could not help but do that and acquit of wrongdoing the four Senators who were unfortunately in their hands in the matter, but it failed to go further, neglected its duty, and is subject to my condemnation, and I here and now pronounce it in the Senate of the United States. I have spoken in the Senator's State, the State of Pennsylvania, and I am going to make many more speeches in it. There are many very fine people up there. Woodrow Wilson paid them a very high compliment while he was President of the United States.

I was entitled to have my good name relieved from this cloud of scandal. I was entitled, as were the other three Senators and the Senate itself, to have this committee of Senators denounce those who sought to destroy us; but, strange to say, they have not done so to this day. They are still hanging on to this committee, and I object to the presence of every one of them except the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] on that committee. If anybody wants me to give reasons for that statement, I will do so. Why were the Roman Catholics able to hush this matter up as they did? Why not bring these things out in the open? That is the way to preserve the Republic. If a public man is assailed wrongfully, go after and denounce and repudiate those who did it.

Bring them into the open and repudiate them, and denounce them as scoundrels. That was the duty of you, Senator REED, of Pennsylvania; Senator JOHNSON, of California; Senator JONES, of Washington; Senator ROBINSON, of Arkansas; and Senator BRUCE, of Maryland. But, Mr. President, I repeat, strange to say, that that committee never opened its mouth on this question. I, a United States Senator, a Democrat, from the State of Alabama, would expect that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], at least to go after those and denounce those who had slandered and tried to destroy me, but they both failed and refused to do it. I am going to get some lunch directly, and build up for another charge against the Roman Catholic machine. And after I get another good night's sleep I may be able to lay some other revelations before the Senate.

Mr. President, it is a noble thing to render service to one's country. It is pleasant to fight in the open without fear and without annoyance from the enemy who is seeking to control this Government, and who has announced in its program that when it does control it it will destroy the Protestant religion in the United States. There is a thrill and an enjoyment in battling for a cause when you know you are right. Regardless of the opposition, regardless of the difficulties and dangers that beset us, it is the duty of every Senator, of everyone who loves his country, who is willing to serve it in time of peace and fight for it in time of war, to stand his ground and speak his views and serve his country as best he can in the open. I took an oath when I came into the Senate and stood at the altar place of this body that I would defend my country against all enemies, both foreign and domestic; and, so help me God, I will be faithful to that oath.

HERBERT HOOVER

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I have been wondering whether Secretary Hoover was going to say anything about the agricultural issue, and the silence has finally been broken. The newspapers carry a copy of his telegram to John Brown, of Monon, Ind. The statement is positive as to the many things he does not want and is vague as to what he favors.

I send Mr. Hoover's statement to the desk and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

> I have your wire saying that the statement is being broadcast in Indiana that I am opposed to all farm-relief measures. As you are aware, I have continuously advocated Federal farm-relief measures for many years. While I have not been able to support those provisions in such measures which embrace price fixing or Government buying and selling of farm products because of my belief that they will be harmful to the farmer and the whole Nation, I have and do believe there are methods through a Federal farm board by which the farming industry can be brought to the same success as our other industrial groups. The President has repeatedly recommended such legislation, and I have been in hopes that Congress will find such measures this session.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. Hoover says he favors farm "legislation." The remarkable thing is that this statement was made two days after the McNary-Haugen bill passed the House by a majority of nearly 100 and had previously passed the Senate by a vote of more than 2 to 1. Mr. Hoover must have heard of this bill. If so, he must be repudiating it. At least, he refuses to recognize that measure which the farm organizations of the entire country are supporting. It can hardly be ignorance. If it is not ignorance, then it is something worse—a deliberate insult to the farm organizations, an insult to the farmer, and an insult to the Congress of the United States.

He implies that the bill is already dead, because he still expects farm legislation. He does not favor price fixing; but this bill is not a price-fixing bill. It simply provides for removing the surplus so as to give an American market to the American farmers.

Mr. Hoover says he does not favor placing the Government in business. The McNary-Haugen bill is a device through which the farmer, at his own expense, will be able to remove from the domestic market the weight of exportable surplusage, thus insuring to him the benefit of a domestic market, with full protection of the tariff on agricultural commodities. There is no element of price fixing or Government in business in this bill.

What kind of farm legislation does Secretary Hoover favor? As far as I know, the only plan that has not met his objections has been the one suggested in the 1925 report of the President's agricultural conference. This simply provided for loaning money to farm organizations for marketing purposes. These organizations did not ask for any such bill. They did not need it then. They do not need it now. They do not want it.

We recall that in the last Congress a close friend of Secretary Hoover advocated such a measure in the Senate. It got splendid support from the industrial section, but was repudiated by the agricultural representatives. The plea that under this proposed plan some of this borrowed money might be used to stimulate the market was only another way of saying that the funds would be available for gambling on the board of trade for the purpose of boosting prices.

Unless the farmers were wiser than others who "play the board," they would soon lose their wad. They would be discredited and dishonored. They would be worse off than ever, and they would frequently be reminded by their new-found friends that their business methods were not the best.

By this telegram Herbert Hoover has given notice to Congress and to the farmers that if he is elected President they need not apply to him. It can only be considered a declaration that the present policy of cheap foodstuffs must be maintained in the interest of larger industrial dividends. The election of a candidate who approves the break of party pledges made four years ago would mean the final submergence of agriculture in America to industry.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A mesage from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 744) to further develop an American merchant marine, to assure its permanence in the transportation of the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. WHITE of Maine, Mr. LEHLBACH, Mr. FREE, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. BLAND were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3740) for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate agree to the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

K. Mahone Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Wellsburg, W. Va."

Mr. NEELY. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

TAX REDUCTION

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the first amendment which was passed over was the one dealing with the surtax rate. I understand that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has a very urgent appointment for 4 o'clock, and he would like to open the discussion upon that amendment. It is impossible for him to conclude his remarks to-day by 4 o'clock. He will have to leave some minutes before that time. Therefore, at the Senator's request, I ask that we take up the amendment on page 195, section 500 (a), which is the admissions tax.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I understood that out of the fullness of the Senator's heart, and those of his colleagues, they might agree to the proposition to eliminate the admissions tax, with the exception, of course, of the House provisions touching prize fights, because it was stated in the committee that the House having cut down the exemption to $1, and the Senate having raised the exemption up to $3, that would be a loss of some $17,000,000, as I recall, and we would only get an additional $1,000,000 out of admissions. Necessarily, the administration of the law would cost something, as well as the worry; and I understood that the Senator might agree that we would strike out all admissions taxes with the exception of the provision in regard to prize fights carried in the House bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the committee decided to follow the recommendations of Mr. Brady, who represented the producers of the spoken drama, as well as the representative of the actors' associations; and they requested that the limitation be increased to $3. I think this will only cover high-priced operas and the spoken drama perhaps in Chicago and New York; I do not know of any other place in the United States where it will apply.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Senator is putting Mr. Brady in a false light there. Mr. Brady was trying to get the exemption raised as much as he could. He wanted it all eliminated if it was possible, because it was pointed out before the committee that these people who train themselves in life work, endowed with wonderful talent, that are engaged in grand opera, for instance—personally, I do not like it, but a good many people do like it, and I admire those that do like it—would have to pay the tax. In other words, it is argued that we are taxing talent in this matter; and because of the small amount of taxes that we would obtain by virtue of leaving it over $3 it seems to me we might eliminate the whole proposition, and this one war nuisance tax would be gotten behind us. Of course, if the Senator wants to contend further on the proposition, it just takes up that much more time.

Mr. SMOOT. I prefer to.

Mr. HARRISON. Let us take a vote on the proposition, then.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing to have that done.

Mr. HEFLIN. Let us have a vote now.

Mr. HARRISON. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing to take the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I wish to say just a word.

I want to say, with reference to the request that I made of the Senator in charge of the bill, that I had expected this bill to come up earlier in the day, and made the appointment which has been spoken of, thinking that by the hour named we would have disposed of it; but, while I am on my feet, I want to discuss briefly the amendment that is now before the Senate.

I heard the argument or statement of Mr. Brady. It was one of the most interesting to which I have listened in a long time. Of course, in the position he occupied, Mr. Brady was ready to take and had to take what he could get. He wanted to get as much as he could, and he expressed the opinion that so far as his association was concerned it would be very gratifying if the exemption was moved up to $3. He discussed, however, the effect of this heavy tax upon the spoken drama. He said that before the admissions tax was imposed the spoken drama was played in all parts of the United States; that it went to the smaller towns. Especially did he lay stress upon the fact that it played in the South, which at that time had but few small cities, and that these smaller communities were given the benefit of the spoken drama, with all its educational advantages and effects. As a result of this heavy tax, he said, the spoken drama now was almost exclusively confined to the larger cities of the country; that they had practically ceased to pay any attention to the South or to those States in the West with only small towns, and that as a result of that these people were denied the benefits of hearing the spoken drama as interpreted by the highest talent in the profession. That he pronounced deplorable. That he denounced as something that denied to a large portion of the United States the educational benefits of the spoken drama.

He called attention to the fact that the movies had been substituted for the spoken drama in these sections of the country. I had not thought of it in that light before, but I did remember when I was a younger man, before I came to the Senate, how I enjoyed the plays that visited the little town in which I lived, then a town of not over 10,000 people, and how the people of North Carolina and all these little towns had the benefit of the visitation of these troupes, giving Shakespearean plays and other great educational performances; and it seemed to me that while the movies are also enlightening and educational, they are not to be compared in many respects to the spoken drama. The sections that have had them substituted altogether for the spoken drama have suffered on account of it, and suffered for the sake of a very small revenue income which it was supposed would be derived from the tax.

The majority on the Committee on Finance agreed to raise the exemption, and it may be that as a result of that increase to $3 in the exemption some classes of those companies that play the spoken drama may come to the South, may go to the West, the smaller towns of the South, the smaller towns of the West; but I am inclined to think that while the increased exemption will mitigate the evils of the situation it will not give those sections that are now excluded from these enlightening performances full restoration of what they lost through the imposition of this tax.

There is only a million dollars in dispute. I do not see why we should haggle about a thing of this sort for only a million dollars' revenue. There is no such emergency as requires a tax of this sort, especially a harmful tax yielding such a small amount as this yields. That there is no emergency requiring such a tax is shown by the large surpluses that are constantly piled up in the Treasury.

Raising the exemption to $3 will not enable grand opera to go to the South. Its towns are too small to justify its coming. Now and then some ambitious community in the South—and I take it that this applies also to the West—sometimes gives a guaranty on the part of some of its enterprising citizens, and in that way they secure now and then grand opera in those communities. But why impose upon them, upon a few gentlemen or a few citizens who are so eager to see grand opera that they are willing to pay exorbitant prices for admission and guarantee that the total receipts will not be below a certain sum? Would it not be well to strike out this little pittance of a million dollars and let every part of this country have an opportunity to enjoy the better type of spoken drama, to see the great actors in person upon the stage, to draw that inspiration from these performances which we used to get from the better Shakespearean plays?

Why should not the people of all the country be permitted to hear grand opera? It is delightful to many. I myself care little about it. I do not know that men care so much about it as a rule, but the women of our country almost without an exception enjoy it to the fullest, and yet by reason of this tax, as I say, a large part of the people of this country are prohibited from hearing it because of the burdensome tax imposed upon it. That tax now has been reduced so that it will remain as it was before, above $3 upon grand opera, and exclude it. It will remain, as before, above $3 upon the spoken drama, and exclude it. Is $1,000,000 in the Treasury of the United States so badly needed by the Government that it should deny the privilege of enjoying these plays and hearing this grand music?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. And, of course, I may say to the Senator, it is not alone the rich. Many of the most lowly of our people are interested in these fine plays and this fine music.

Mr. SIMMONS. Why, of course; and if they are induced to come to a community by reason of the guaranty given by a few citizens of the community, the poor can not take advantage of it. The rates will have to be so high that they will be prohibitive except to the people who are well-to-do in life.

It seems to me if there is any tax in this bill that is utterly unjustified, it is the retention of this $1,000,000 tax; and that is the total revenue the tax yields.

I regret very much that the chairman of the committee does not feel at liberty to consent, without having a vote upon it, to let this $1,000,000 tax go.

Mr. SMOOT. If this amendment went out it would make no difference whatever in the matter of grand opera. The tax is not going to hurt any person who is able to pay $10 or $11 for opera seats. We desire to have this as a tax program in order that if there were to be a raise of the tax in the future we could simply raise the rate, and there could never be any complaint about it.

The spoken drama up to $3 would never pay a cent of tax. There are very few little towns in the United States in which the people could ever or would ever afford to pay $3 for a ticket. The movies have taken the place of the spoken drama; there is very little of it left. If it were free of tax it would never be revived again, in my opinion, as long as the theaters charge the rate they do, and Mr. Brady said they were compelled to charge such a rate on account of the expenses. It will never be revived again in the United States. We have on hand now the spoken movie, in which the person appears, you hear his voice, you see him upon the platform, and that can all be witnessed for 35 or 50 or 75 cents. It seems to me that we ought to retain this tax, even if we want to increase the taxes in the future; and I want to say frankly that if the plans are carried out upon the five or six great projects that are being pressed here and in the other House, and they become law, I do not see how we are going to avoid it. Therefore, for that reason, I hope the Senate will support the committee amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator take the position that remitting this million-dollar tax would embarrass the Treasury?

Mr. SMOOT. Not to-day. I thought I explained that that would not embarrass the Treasury.

Mr. HARRISON. May we not have the amendment reported now?

Mr. SMOOT. I think the proper way to proceed would be for the Senator from North Carolina to offer his amendment now.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has offered his amendment, and I just asked that it be reported.

Mr. SMOOT. It is lying on the table.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is on the table, and I ask that it be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from North Carolina offers the following amendment: On page 195, to strike out lines 3 to 23, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(a) Section 500(a) of the revenue act of 1926 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 500. (a) There shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid—

"(1) A tax of 25 per cent of the amount paid for admission to a prize fight, or boxing, sparring, or other pugilistic match or exhibition, for which the amount paid for admission is $5 or more: Provided, That an equivalent tax shall be collected on all free or complimentary tickets or admissions to such prize fight, or boxing, sparring, or other pugilistic match or exhibition, and the tax shall be on the amount for which a similar seat or box is sold at the said match or exhibition;

"(2) Upon tickets or cards of admission to theaters, operas, and other places of amusement, sold at news stands, hotels, and places other than the ticket offices of such theaters, operas, or other places of amusement, at more than 50 cents in excess of the sum of the established price therefor at such ticket offices plus the amount of any tax imposed under paragraph (1), a tax equivalent to 50 per cent of the whole amount of such excess, such tax to be returned and paid, in the manner and subject to the interest provided in section 502, by the person selling such tickets."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this amendment is in three sections. One section provides for the taking off of the admission tax. The House adopted the provision with reference to boxing and sparring matches, and so on, which we do not disturb, which is included in this amendment. In other words, by this amendment we leave the tax which the House incorporated in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senate committee also leaves it in.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator means the committee leaves it in on boxing matches?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; and on prize fights. The third section of the amendment deals with this situation: Under the law now there has been a custom which has grown up in the large cities that hotels and certain theater brokerage firms sell theater tickets.

Mr. SMOOT. Which are known as scalpers' tickets.

Mr. HARRISON. They are known as scalpers in some instances, but the large hotels of the country carry these tickets for the convenience of their patrons.

Mr. SMOOT. This is the present law.

Mr. HARRISON. In the amendment which the Senator from North Carolina proposes, he permits a service charge of not more than 50 cents for each of these tickets which are sold in these hotel lobbies and brokerage offices.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the present law.

Mr. HARRISON. If they charge more than that, there is a penalty imposed. Consequently, we do not disturb the law in these other features particularly, but we do take the admission tax off by this amendment, whether the admission is over $3 or under $3.

Mr. SACKETT. What is the amount of the penalty imposed?

Mr. HARRISON. The penalty is 50 per cent of the amount charged by these people for the services rendered.

Mr. SACKETT. Fifty per cent of the amount charged?

Mr. HARRISON. Fifty per cent in excess of the established price, I should say.

Mr. SACKETT. That would be 25 cents?

Mr. HARRISON. That would be 25 cents in addition to the 50 cents.

Mr. SMOOT. That is correct.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, does the amendment repeal existing law respecting these admissions? Would that law be terminated under this amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. It does repeal the existing law with reference to the admission tax; yes. That is the object of the Simmons amendment.

Mr. Brady, who has represented the theatrical people for a long time, not with any pay coming to him, but because of his love of the work, made one of the finest presentations before the committee that was ever made before it. He had us all crying there for a little while, in speaking of the great men and women who had shed luster on the theatrical profession.

I do not believe any member of the committee wants to penalize the talent of these people. We all know that in the large cities—and here in Washington—often the theaters charge more than $3. It may be more than they should charge, but they do charge more at times. If the public wants to pay it, it is up to the public; but it seems to me that a decade after the war is over, when this war tax was imposed, it is time for us to eliminate it; and if there is good reason for the Congress to eliminate $17,000,000 out of the $18,000,000 that is now collected from admission dues, certainly the reason should be just as great not to retain the $1,000,000 that we do collect by virtue of this.

I submit that when we consider the expenses incurred in the administration of the law, the trouble that is imposed upon the theatrical profession in the sale of these tickets, and so on, this million dollars can be well made up in some other way, and that all the admission taxes should be taken out of this bill.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, the Senator believes in the principle of the surtax, does he not?

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, yes; I believe in the principle of the surtax.

Mr. EDGE. This involves very much the same principle; if one can afford to pay $3 for a ticket, it is not a great burden to pay a small amount of taxation.

Mr. HARRISON. I am surprised at my friend from New Jersey making that argument, because I presume that, outside of the great city of New York, more of these talented people come from New Jersey than from any other State. I suppose the people of New Jersey, which is really next to New York, like to see real legitimate drama, spoken drama, and grand opera and these talented people. I am surprised the Senator wants to impose this penalty upon them. I can see very little likeness or similarity between the imposition of a surtax and the imposition of a tax on people who go to a real good show that might cost $5, where the finest talent are "strutting" their goods on the stage, rather than to go to the Gayety down here, where the admission is probably 50 or 75 cents. I want to encourage people to go to the very best in this country. I want to encourage the people in this country with talent, who have educated themselves for the stage, for the drama, and for grand opera to employ their talent and make great money if they want to without being embarrassed by the Federal Government.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from New Jersey speaks of this as a surtax. As a matter of fact, we put a surtax upon the rich, but just as many of the people who buy these tickets are poor as are rich.

Mr. SMOOT. A ticket costing over $3?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; tickets costing over $3.

Mr. SMOOT. They may be in New York.

Mr. COPELAND. A man may be a truck driver and yet have a love of the stage or of grand opera, and he is entitled to go, and he should be given consideration just as much as those who are able to pay high prices.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, in the very forceful presentation to the committee by Mr. Brady he showed that a few years ago in all the cities throughout this country the finest, highest class theatrical troupes visited the cities, and people in those communities could see those shows.

Mr. COPELAND. The poor people.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; the poor people could see them; but not to-day. Because of the obstacles being thrown in their path, discouragement upon the part of the Government, and many other things, there is hardly any legitimate theater in the country. The people are now going to see motion pictures, and so on. When the people from my section of the country get enough money to visit the city of New York, one of the first things on their program is to see a fine show there, or the grand opera; they want the best; and I presume that is the way with the people from Utah, and from other States.

I submit, Mr. President, that this figure of $3 was not fixed at the instance of Mr. Brady.

Mr. Brady wanted to strike out the admission tax altogether. The theaters of the country and the theatrical patrons want to strike it all out. But when the chairman of the committee, in his suave way, put it to Mr. Brady, "Would you not accept $3," of course, he would accept $3 in preference to a dollar, which was put in the bill in the House, or in preference to the 75 cents that is fixed by the present law. I submit that the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina should be accepted.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does not the Senator know it to be a fact that in parts of the country where these fine plays do not go there are numerous people who will travel at heavy expense to the larger cities, at least once a year, maybe twice a year, for the purpose of enjoying the kind of play that is denied them at home?

Mr. HARRISON. That is quite true.

Mr. SIMMONS. We have taken all the tax off the movies; we have taken all the tax off circuses; we have taken all the tax off everything of that kind except the spoken drama.

Mr. SMOOT. Except where the admission is over $3.

Mr. SIMMONS. Except where it is in excess of $3.

Mr. FLETCHER. Can the Senator say whether taking the tax off the movies has reduced the price of admission to the public?

Mr. SIMMONS. I presume it has, and I think it has. I think it will have that effect.

Mr. SMOOT. In some cases, and in some cases not.

Mr. SIMMONS. Why, I ask the Senator, take the tax off these other things, circuses and movies, and retain it qualifiedly or to a limited extent upon these other performances?

Mr. HARRISON. The reason is just as strong for taking it off this as for taking it off these other things. I ask the chairman of the committee if he will not agree to let us strike this out?

Mr. SMOOT. The chairman of the committee can not do that.

Mr. HARRISON. Then let us vote. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair announces that before a vote can be taken on this amendment, it will be necessary for the Senate to vote on the two committee amendments on page 195, lines 11 and 23. The clerk will read the amendments, because these will perfect the amendment which the Senator from North Carolina proposes.

Mr. SMOOT. It will be just the same thing.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that we vote on the amendment as it is pending now.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator must modify that request. Let us vote upon this amendment as a substitute for the committee amendments as reported.

Mr. HARRISON. That is right.

Mr. SACKETT. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether the committee has considered at all the penalty provision on speculation in tickets?

Mr. SMOOT. That is in the present law.

Mr. SACKETT. That is in the present law; and is not changed by the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. It is changed very little. It is not changed as the Finance Committee reported the bill, but it is changed in the last four lines of the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SACKETT. Has the committee examined that change to see whether it amounts to anything or not?

Mr. SMOOT. No; but I know that the scalpers desire to have this change made.

Mr. FESS. Let the question be stated.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] offers an amendment as a substitute for section 500.

Mr. FESS. Then we will have to vote on these amendments before we vote on that.

Mr. SMOOT. We certainly would; but unanimous consent was asked to vote upon this amendment as a substitute for the committee amendment as reported.

Mr. FESS. I wanted to know what we were to vote on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed as a substitute by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (when the name of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas was called). I was requested by the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to announce that if he were present he would vote "yea" on this question.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING], and vote "nay."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BRATTON. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON]. I am not at liberty in his absence to vote, but if allowed to do so I would vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] to the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], and vote "yea."

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]; and

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. PINE] with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. LOCHER].

I also desire to announce the absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] on business of the Senate. If present, both Senators would vote "nay" on this question.

The result of the roll call was—yeas 40, nays 40, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas are 40 and the nays are 40. The amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] in the nature of a substitute is not agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I would like to give notice that there will be another vote on the Simmons amendment when the bill is in the Senate unless some Senator on the other side of the aisle desires to change his vote and come over to us.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, Mr. President, I would like to have the amendment agreed to as reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 195, line 11, strike out "$1 or less" and insert in lieu thereof "$3 or less," so as to read:

(1) A tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission to any place, including admission by season ticket or subscription, to be paid by the person paying for such admission; except that in case the amount paid for admission is $3 or less, no tax shall be imposed, and except that in case of admission to a prize fight, or boxing, sparring, or other pugilistic match or exhibition, for which the amount paid for admission is $5 or more, the tax shall be 25 per cent of such amount: Provided, That an equivalent tax shall be collected on all free or complimentary tickets or admissions to such prize fight, or boxing, sparring, or other pugilistic match or exhibition and the tax shall be on the amount for which a similar seat or box is sold at the said match or exhibition.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 195, line 23, strike out "$1 or less" and insert in lieu thereof "$3 or less," so as to read:

Amounts paid for admission by season ticket or subscription shall be exempt only if the amount which would be charged to the holder or subscriber for a single admission is $3 or less.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Finance in charge of the bill whether he would be willing to take up, somewhat out of its order, the amendment with regard to club dues?

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing to do so. It will be found in section 412, on page 196.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 196, line 5, the committee proposes to strike out "5 per cent" and insert in lieu thereof "10 per cent," so as to read:

(a) Section 501 of the revenue act of 1926 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 501. (a) There shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of any amount paid—

"(1) As dues or membership fees to any social, athletic, or sporting club or organization, if the dues or fees of an active resident annual member are in excess of $10 per year; or—

And so forth.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to state to the Senate that the revenue derived from club dues amounts to $10,000,000 a year. The House proposes to reduce that tax to $5,000,000; that is to say, the House adopted a rate just one-half of the present law. It is in opposition to the amendment proposed by the Finance Committee of the Senate, restoring the tax eliminated by the House, that I wish to ask the Senate to indulge me just for a moment.

I believe that both parties have repeatedly, through their official spokesmen in the administration and in Congress, expressed the desire that we should get rid as quickly as possible of these small rates that were imposed during the war when a great emergency existed, and which are generally characterized as nuisance taxes. The tax upon club dues is largely of that character. There was a time in our history when only the rich were able to indulge in the pleasure of belonging to clubs. But that time has passed and there is hardly a town of 5,000 inhabitants in the country to-day that has not what is called a country club, with golf links attached. Golf was formerly a sport of the rich. There were but few clubs with golf courses in the country, and they were confined largely to the rural surroundings of the larger cities of the country.

But that game has to-day become one of the most fashionable amusements in which our people indulge. The little clubs with golf courses have in their membership the relatively poor as well as the relatively rich. It is a sport that is indulged in by women as well as by men. It is a sport that conduces to good health, to vigorous manhood and womanhood. Not only lovers of sports indorse it but leading scientists and physicians of the country join in proclaiming it one of the most healthful amusements to which men and women now resort.

I wish it were possible to eliminate the tax altogether. An amusement and a sport which is healthful, which has become a resort for exercise and for pleasure of a large element of our people from one end of the country to the other ought not to be subjected to a tax. There are other things from which the Government can get its revenue which are more appropriate sources than this. Because of the universality of this sport, because of its healthful character, I hope that the Treasury Department will be able to stand at this time a cut of one-half of the tax.

Mr. President, I do not wish to pursue the matter further than to make this brief statement. I might speak more at length, but, as I said, I believe it unnecessary at this time.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. How much will we lose if we leave off the tax entirely?

Mr. SIMMONS. We would lose $10,000,000. If we cut it in half, we will have $5,000,000 still left. The House proposal was to reduce the tax one-half, and I am asking that we adopt the House amendment. The majority of the Finance Committee have asked that the House amendment be stricken out and the present tax retained.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. On the last roll-call vote I understand that the vote of the Senators was equally divided; and I rise to ask how the Vice President is recorded as having voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The name of the Vice President was not called. The parliamentarian informs the Vice President that in the case of a tie vote on an amendment, where the tie vote defeats the amendment, it is not the custom to call the name of the Vice President. If my name had been called, I should have voted "nay."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I suggest that under the Constitution it is the duty of the clerk to call the name of the Vice President when the Senators are equally divided.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed by the parliamentarian that it is necessary for the Chair to direct the clerk to call his name; and the Chair now directs him to call his name.

The CLERK. The Vice President.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, just a moment. As I understand, the vote was 40 to 40; and, as it was an amendment, the amendment was lost by reason of the tie vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment was lost on a tie vote.

Mr. BORAH. I can not quite understand what effect the Vice President's vote will have.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, was the vote 40–40 or 50–50? [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, undoubtedly it is the parliamentary rule that a motion requires a majority to carry it. If the vote is evenly divided, the motion is lost; but in view of the provisions of the Constitution, it seems to me that the Vice President is charged with the duty of voting, whether he desires to defeat or to carry the motion; and I take the view of the Senator from Pennsylvania that when there is a tie vote the Vice President has a right to vote.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Not only a right but a duty, Mr. President.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Not only a right but a duty as well.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. And if he disagrees with the adversaries of the amendment it is his duty to register his vote and carry the motion.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, it seems to me the failure of the Vice President to vote shows that he was opposed to the amendment, because his vote for it would have carried it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Constitution does not provide for implying or inferring what his intent is.

Mr. SWANSON. The Constitution can not compel him to vote, I should think.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Constitution compels all of us to vote unless we are excused.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I submit, on the point of order, that it required a majority vote to carry that amendment, and unless there was a majority vote it was lost. Being lost, obviously there was no requirement or necessity for the Vice President to vote.

I now raise the point of order that the roll call having been finished and the result announced, and other business having been transacted, it is not in order for the Vice President to cast his ballot, any more than it would be for an individual Senator who has now come into the Chamber.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I make the point of order that the roll call is invalid unless the names of all those entitled to vote shall be called.

Mr. BLEASE. I ask that the roll call be taken over, if my friend insists on his point of order; but under all parliamentary usage, where there is a motion made, in order to carry the motion a majority must vote in favor of it, and if there is not a majority the motion is lost; and if another Senator should come in now he certainly would not have a right to cast his vote.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I want to resent the imputation that the Vice President has not done his duty, and I am delighted to know that the imputation does not come from this side of the aisle. I know, and the other Senators know, that the Vice President does want to discharge his duty, because we will not forget an occasion when he hastened back here at top speed in order to perform his duty. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, leaving the comedy out for a moment, I do not think the question is wholly a laughable one. Every motion conceivable to be made in the Senate is lost if the vote upon it is a tie. There is nothing peculiar about this amendment. The passage of every bill is defeated if the vote be a tie; so that the plain intention of the Constitution was that wherever a tie vote existed, the Vice President should vote. His vote is not dispensed with by reason of the fact that the motion is lost when there is a tie, because that is true in every case and the Constitution must have had it in mind.

I do not advance the suggestion facetiously or lightly. I think the question ought to be ruled upon and acted upon, and that in time it might become of extreme importance; and if there is any doubt about the procedure to be followed it ought to be settled now.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I call the Senator's attention to the constitutional provision. It does not require the Vice President to vote. It is a permissive provision. It says:

but shall have no vote, unless they be equally divided.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Precisely. That is true of the Senators. Each Senator has a vote; but the whole intention of the Constitution is that every one having a vote shall vote unless excused.

Mr. DILL. But there is nothing compulsory about it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. There is nothing compulsory in terms upon the Senators.

Mr. DILL. I do not think the Vice President has failed to discharge his duty at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in order to settle the thing, I move a reconsideration of the vote. Then we can take another vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Florida. Without objection, the motion is agreed to.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No, Mr. President.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I call for the yeas and nays on the original reconsidered motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask to have the question stated. I do not understand it.

Mr. SMOOT. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Is this the motion to reconsider, or has the motion to reconsider been adopted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The roll call is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Is it in order for a Senator who is in the minority to move to reconsider?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the motion to reconsider is out of order, because the original vote was an illegal vote, and it can not be ratified by another one of the same kind.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. I have the floor. Let me state the matter, please.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. BINGHAM. Has the Chair ruled on the point of order which I raised?

Mr. TYDINGS. Have I the floor, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida did not have the right to make the motion to reconsider.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then I call on the Senator from Pennsylvania to make it.

Mr. TYDINGS. I still have the floor, have I not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland has the floor.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then the only way we can correct the RECORD, there being an illegal roll call, is to have the roll recalled on that amendment, without any motion to reconsider.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the roll call that was taken be set aside, and that another roll call on the amendment now take place.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRATTON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON]. During his absence, and not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea" on this question.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], which I transfer to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES. I have been requested to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL];

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. PINE] with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. LOCHER]; and

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

So Mr. SIMMON'S amendment, in the nature of a substitute, was rejected.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to offer a substitute for the committee amendment by moving to repeal section 501 of the present statute.

Mr. SMOOT. The committee amendment is to restore 10 per cent, the existing law.

Mr. BARKLEY. My motion is to repeal section 501 altogether. I offer this as a substitute for the committee amendment, which restores the tax from 5 per cent, as carried in the House bill, to 10 per cent, as under the present law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote will be taken first upon the committee amendment, since it seeks to correct what the Senator would strike out. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 196, line 5, it is proposed to strike out "5 per cent" and insert "10 per cent."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Without regard to the action taken by the Senate on the committee amendment, will I still have the right to move to repeal this whole section?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will have that right.

Mr. SMOOT. The first amendment voted on, however, will be the committee amendment for 10 per cent.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I ask to have the amendment stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be restated.

The Chief Clerk restated the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. That is existing law. In other words, we impose the same tax upon club dues as is imposed in the existing law.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, it is a very serious question in my mind as to whether the anti-nuisance-tax crusade is a wise one. The fact is that the tax upon moving pictures, upon theaters, and amusements in general is the easiest paid tax there is. A good deal of it comes from a class of people who pay no other taxes. It is a voluntary tax, because no one is compelled to attend any of these places of amusement unless he feels able to pay his way into the theater or other place of amusement. It brings in a large income, and its burden is but slightly felt. My own opinion about it is that there will be but very little money saved to the patrons of these places; that the reduction in tax will be absorbed by the proprietors of the places; and that there will be, in fact, no reduction.

I voted for the amendment to take the tax off theaters proper, because if you are going to exempt the moving pictures, then clearly the exemption ought to be extended to all classes of theatrical amusement. If we ought to encourage anything, it is the legitimate drama, which certainly has not sunk quite to the depths that the moving pictures have in many instances.

Now it is proposed to impose a very heavy tax on clubs. The Senator from North Carolina spoke of golf clubs. If that were the only kind of clubs concerned, it would not arouse much sympathy with me. I am not opposed to ladies and gentlemen playing golf if they want to, but this provision applies, as I understand it, to almost all kinds of clubs.

The fact is that the club is in many instances the home of many people, and if not the home, it is the place where they resort for a portion of their meals. A tax levied upon a club is a good deal like levying a tax upon a home. It applies not only to the great club, with its wealth, but it applies to the club that is of ordinary size. Many of these clubs are barely able to exist; the only way they can pay this tax is by increasing the charges to the patrons; and the patrons are simply a number of men and women who have organized for the purpose of having some place where they can go and enjoy an evening meal. In some instances single men live at the clubs, and it is a tax upon their rooms.

If the tax is to be levied upon homes, it ought to be levied upon every hotel in the land, and I can not see why it should not be levied on the homes themselves. I am opposed, therefore, to increasing the tax on these clubs, and I think that if we are going to take it off theaters, off moving pictures, particularly off moving pictures, we ought to take it off clubs; but in principle I believe that these so-called nuisance taxes are not nuisance taxes at all; they are taxes which get a very large revenue for the Government. Most of them are taxes upon pleasure; most of them are taxes nobody has to pay unless he voluntarily pays them, whereas a man with ordinary income finds to-day that the Government takes so large a slice of it as seriously to impair his living. Taxes upon moderate incomes in this country are outrageously high.

There ought to be an effort to reduce those taxes, taxes that are forced from people, taxes that largely fall upon the actual earnings of men, not upon their invested capital, but upon their earnings as they go through life.

As far as I am concerned, I am opposed to a 10 per cent tax upon clubs. The 10 per cent upon the club is just the difference between an extortionate rate and bankruptcy. It is said the individual pays the tax. In the long run, it is just the same whether the individual pays it or the club pays it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to discuss very briefly the amendment pending, because what I might say in behalf of the amendment which I expect to offer later would be as applicable to this amendment as it would be to that.

There are some 5,000 of these country clubs located throughout the United States. There has grown up in the last 5 or 10 years a disposition among the smaller communities throughout the country, county seats of 1,500 and 2,000, 2,500, and 3,000 population, to establish some community centers where the members of these clubs, and where the people in the towns generally, might have a place of recreation.

If anybody has any prejudice against these clubs because men play golf on the grounds, I would suggest that a very small portion of the people who attend them engage in golf playing. In the average small county seat there is no public park where children may play or men and women may congregate for any purpose of pleasure or recreation. So by reason of the lack of these public facilities for recreation they have undertaken throughout the country to establish country clubs; there are now nearly 5,000 of these small clubs which have sprung up throughout the country in smaller towns, and many of them have a very difficult time in meeting their expenses and maintaining themselves.

I have in my office letters from officers of some of these small clubs which state that it is a continual fight throughout the entire year to maintain them, and that it is a very serious handicap to be required to pay this 10 per cent tax upon the dues that are charged.

The men and women who are members of these clubs take their children out in the afternoon; they take their lunches out in the daytime; they take their dinners at the club at night; and until bedtime these clubs afford a place for children to play and for men and women to congregate on the porches and engage in conversation.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Many of these clubs are devoted to the improvement of health, where people go to exercise and to acquire health. So they render a public service in improving the public health.

Mr. BARKLEY. They are all devoted to health, in a general way. Some of them are especially devoted to the improvement of health.

It has been a very fine thing, in other words, to find in the smaller communities of the country men and women who are willing to get behind these local organizations, because their children, as a rule, have no place around the cities to play except in the back alley or out on the street, where they are liable to be run over by a passing automobile and injured or killed.

The amount raised by this tax is $10,000,000 a year. Certainly, in the interest of health and recreation, the Government of the United States can undergo a loss of $10,000,000 a year that is now collected upon these dues under the present law.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the very people about whom he has been talking do not pay the $10 dues. This exempts everybody paying up to and including $10.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not talking about $10; I am talking about 10 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. If the dues do not exceed $10, the member does not pay anything.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is not one club out of a thousand where the dues are not more than $10 a year.

Mr. SMOOT. They are not $10 a year in the class of clubs to which the Senator has been referring.

Mr. BARKLEY. They are more than $10 a year in the clubs I have reference to. There are some clubs where the dues are less than $10 a year, but it is inconceivable that any club of any importance or any size can maintain itself on an initiation fee or dues of $10 a year.

Mr. SMOOT. The important clubs charge sometimes as high as a thousand dollars.

Mr. BARKLEY. The exemption of $10 really brings no benefit to any great number of clubs.

I think that of all the nuisance taxes which are now levied, this is one which ought to be removed. It ought to be removed in the interest of health and recreation; it ought to be removed in the interest of the creation of a community spirit which is fostered and maintained around these small country clubs in various sections of the country and in the small county seats, where the people have no other center where they can meet for social or athletic or recreative purposes.

I not only hope that if any tax is to be imposed the Senate will agree to the House provision of 5 per cent—if there is to be any tax at all it ought not to be more than 5 per cent—but I sincerely hope we may be able to strike this tax out entirely, because there is no justification for its continuance any longer.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the exemption of $10 would not take care of a country baseball club, would it?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; the exemption of $10 is practically of no benefit whatever. There is not a club among the nearly 5,000 to which I have referred that could maintain itself on a charge of $10 a year as dues. Many of the clubs charge $10 a month; many of them charge over $100 a year; and to a small county seat, a town in a rural section, where the people are undertaking to maintain a community center for the benefit of the community and for the creation of a spirit of neighborliness among the people, as well as health and recreation, this 10 per cent tax is quite an important item, and keeps many men from joining these clubs.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I would like to ask the Senator from Kentucky if he does not think it might be better, if we are going to tax the wealthy clubs—and I do not know that there is any serious objection to that—in the next paragraph to raise the exemption, which is now $10, to at least $25? That would exempt the ordinary little town or country club.

Mr. BARKLEY. It might help some, but even that $25 limit would not touch the great bulk of these clubs. The Senator can very well understand that in a town of 2,500 or 3,000 or even 5,000 people, in order to maintain a club of any value, the annual dues must be more than $25 a year.

Mr. FRAZIER. Then raise the exemption to $50.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the whole thing ought to be eliminated.

The number of large, rich clubs in this country as compared with those which have sprung up in all sections of America for the benefit of the people who have no other lines of recreation, is insignificant. I think a proper raising of the exemption would help many of these clubs, but I think the tax ought to be eliminated entirely.

Mr. FRAZIER. It seems to me the raising of the exemption would meet the situation, at least as I see it in my State, and I think perhaps it would reach it in a great many other States.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I am opposed to any tax being levied upon club dues, for the same reason that I was opposed to the tax levied upon admissions. Those taxes were only thought of for the purpose of creating revenue during the war. They were war-nuisance taxes.

We have removed these taxes on from 40 to 50 different articles upon which nuisance taxes were levied during the war. The whole tendency, in every tax revision bill, has been to eliminate the nuisance taxes. They are taxes levied upon a particular class. I do not care how rich people are or how poor they are, it is class taxation, and is not based upon any sound principle of tax policy.

The theory of ability to pay is not applicable here, and I hope that the Senate will get rid of all these nuisance taxes and get down to a simple taxation system of levying the tax burdens upon the theory of ability to pay.

So, Mr. President, I shall vote not only against this tax and the admission tax but every other war-nuisance tax in order that we may get back to a peace-time system of taxation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may not the amendment be stated? I do not know exactly what we are to vote upon.

Mr. SMOOT. We are voting upon the committee amendment, as I understand it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 196, line 5, the committee proposes to strike out "5 per cent" and to insert in lieu thereof "10 per cent."

Mr. BRUCE. That is an amendment proposed by the committee?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; a committee amendment we are voting on. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRATTON (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement of my pair made on the last preceding vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the previous vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. JOHNSON (when his name was called). Upon this vote I am paired with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. I am unable to vote, the Senator and I being paired, he being of one thought and myself of another.

Mr. HARRIS (when the name of Mr. OVERMAN was called). The junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] is absent on official business. He is paired with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the last vote, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GLASS. I desire to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] was called from the Chamber on official business. He is paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT]. Were he present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. BRATTON. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BLEASE] and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL];

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. PINE] with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. LOCHER]; and

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 35, as follows:

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment at this point. I move to amend the bill by striking out, on page 196, under the title "Sec. 412. Club dues tax," lines 1 to 26, inclusive, and on page 197, lines 1 to 10, inclusive. This would eliminate altogether the nuisance taxes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Kentucky moves, on page 196, to strike out lines 1 to 26, inclusive, and on page 197, lines 1 to 10, inclusive, in the following words:

SEC. 412. CLUB DUES TAX.

(a) Section 501 of the revenue act of 1926 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 501. (a) There shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of any amount paid—

"(1) As dues or membership fees to any social, athletic, or sporting club or organization, if the dues or fees of an active resident annual member are in excess of $10 per year; or

"(2) As initiation fees to such a club or organization, if such fees amount to more than $10, or if the dues or membership fees, not including initiation fees, of an active resident annual member are in excess of $10 per year.

"(b) Such taxes shall be paid by the person paying such dues or fees.

"(c) There shall be exempted from the provisions of this section all amounts paid as dues or fees to a fraternal society, order, or association, operating under the lodge system, or to any local fraternal organization among the students of a college or university. In the case of life memberships a life member shall pay annually, at the time for the payment of dues by active resident annual members, a tax equivalent to the tax upon the amount paid by such a member for dues or membership fees other than assessments, but shall pay no tax upon the amount paid for life membership.

"(d) As used in this section, the term 'dues' includes any assessment irrespective of the purpose for which made; and the term 'initiation fees' includes any payment, contribution, or loan required as a condition precedent to membership, whether or not any such payment, contribution, or loan is evidenced by a certificate of interest or indebtedness or share of stock, and irrespective of the person or organization to whom paid, contributed, or loaned."

(b) Subsection (a) of this section shall take effect on the expiration of 30 days after the enactment of this act.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRATTON (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement of my pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON], I withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRATTON. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] to the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] was called from the Chamber on official business. He has a pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I understand under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into that we are not to take up other amendments until all committee amendments are disposed of. Therefore I shall offer no further amendment at this time, but at a later time I shall offer amendments increasing the exemption of $10 to a higher figure.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we have had all the votes that I shall ask the Senate to take to-night, and I am ready to have the Senate take a recess under the unanimous-consent agreement.

FLOOD CONTROL—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to state that as early as possible after the Senate convenes to-morrow I desire to call up the conference report on the flood control bill, which has already been adopted by the House.

GOLD MEDALS FOR "NC-4" AVIATORS

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, in accordance with the notice which I gave a few days ago and in order to properly commemorate the fact that it was nine years ago to-day that the first airplane crossed the Atlantic Ocean, the NC-4 starting from Long Island on that journey which made her and her crew so famous, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar 1088, Senate bill 4338, providing for gold medals for that crew. The bill was reported yesterday unanimously by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4338) to authorize the President to award in the name of Congress gold medals of appropriate design to Albert C. Read, Elmer F. Stone, Walter Hinton, H. C. Rodd, J. L. Breese, and Eugene Rhodes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and is hereby, authorized to award, in the name of Congress, gold medals of appropriate design to Lieut. Commander Albert C. Read, United States Navy, commanding officer; to Lieut. Elmer F. Stone, United States Coast Guard, pilot; to former Lieut. Walter Hinton, United States Navy, pilot; to Lieut. H. C. Rodd, United States Navy, radio operator; to former Lieut. J. L. Breese, United States Naval Reserve Force, engineer; and to former Machinist's Mate Eugene Rhodes, United States Navy, engineer, for their extraordinary achievement in making the first successful trans-Atlantic flight, in the U. S. naval flying boat NC-4, in May, 1919.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COST OF PRODUCING FERTILIZER UREA

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 228), which was ordered to lie on the table:

Senate Resolution 228, Seventieth Congress, first session

Whereas it was the intention of the tariff act of 1922 to permit the importation, free of duty, of fertilizers and fertilizer materials for the benefit of the agriculture of the United States; and

Whereas paragraph 26 of said tariff act laid a duty of 35 per cent ad valorem upon importations of urea; and

Whereas at the date of said act importations of urea were of negligible quantity and were restricted to medicinal uses; and

Whereas since the date of said tariff act there has been a wide expansion in the production of synthetic urea and an expanding market for such urea in the United States as a fertilizer, a use which was unknown when said tariff act was passed; and

Whereas there is no production of fertilizer urea in the United States, and the production of medicinal urea with which said fertilizer urea does not compete is limited to a few hundred tons per annum; and

Whereas, because of the demand of American agriculture for an improved and effective nitrogenous fertilizer which leaves no inert residue in the soil, the imports of fertilizer urea have arisen to approximately 1,000,000 pounds per annum; and

Whereas the cost of said fertilizer urea to the American farmer is increased 35 per cent by virtue of the existing tariff which represents an arbitrary imposition upon agriculture without corresponding benefit to any American industry: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is requested, under provisions of section 315 of the tariff act of 1922, to investigate the cost of the production of fertilizer urea in the country from which the principal exports of fertilizer urea are made to the United States, and the facts with respect to the quantities of fertilizer urea being imported and used in the United States, and to report its findings to the President of the United States.

COSTS OF PRODUCING AMMONIUM SULPHATE AND AMMONIUM PHOSPHATE

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 229), which was ordered to lie on the table:

Senate Resolution 229, Seventieth Congress, first session

Whereas the tariff act of 1922 laid a duty of $5 per ton upon imported ammonium sulphate and a duty of $80 per ton upon imported ammonium phosphate; and

Whereas by the tariff acts of 1909 and of 1913 ammonium sulphate was importable free of duty; and

Whereas in 1926 the exports of ammonium sulphate were 181,125 tons and the imports were 8,368 tons, giving a balance of exports over imports of 172,757 tons, which balance is more than twenty times the total imports for that year; and

Whereas since the date of said tariff act of 1922 the exports of ammonium sulphate as a fertilizer have more than trebled in quantity; and

Whereas ammonium sulphate produced in the United States is sold abroad for the service of foreign agriculture at a lesser price than the same is available in the United States for the service of American agriculture; and

Whereas over 95 per cent of the ammonium sulphate sold in the United States for domestic consumption and for export is under the control of a single monopolistic corporation; and

Whereas said monopolistic corporation by increasing its exports has created an artificial shortage of ammonium sulphate available for the service of American agriculture, which has caused the domestic price to be bid up from $43 to $48 per ton in the last few months, which artificial increase equals the entire duty on ammonium sulphate laid by the tariff act of 1922; and

Whereas ammonium phosphate is becoming available for use as a fertilizer material because of new processes which permit large-scale production; and

Whereas the duty of $30 per ton on ammonium phosphate laid by the tariff act of 1922 is prohibitive and prevents the importation and use of ammonium phosphate as a fertilizer for the service of American agriculture; and

Whereas the rates of duty laid by the tariff act of 1922 upon ammonium sulphate and ammonium phosphate effectively restrict the use of such materials as fertilizers for the service of American agriculture and lay an undue burden upon the farmers of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is requested, under the provisions of section 315 of the tariff act of 1922, to investigate the costs of production of ammonium sulphate and of ammonium phosphate in the United States and the principal competing country, and to report its findings to the President of the United States.

COSTS OF PRODUCING SYNTHETIC METHANOL

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 230), which was ordered to lie on the table:

Senate Resolution 230, Seventieth Congress, first session

Whereas the tariff act of 1922 laid a duty upon importations of methanol at the rate of 12 cents per gallon; and

Whereas the President, by proclamation of November 27, 1926, under the authority of section 315 of said tariff act, increased the duty on imported methanol from 12 cents to 18 cents per gallon, which was the maximum increase permitted by such act; and

Whereas at the date of said proclamation the domestic price of methanol was 65 cents per gallon; and

Whereas since said proclamation there has been a great expansion in the production of synthetic methanol in the United States by virtue of which the domestic price has fallen to 45 cents per gallon, which indicates a presumptive reduction in the cost of production in the United States of 20 cents per gallon, which is more than three times the increase of 6 cents per gallon in the duty made by the presidential proclamation aforesaid; and

Whereas the facts above recited warrant that the President, in the exercise of his powers under section 315 of said tariff act at this time, reduce the duty imposed by said act upon imported methanol from 12 to 6 cents per gallon, which will absorb but 12 cents of the presumptive reduction of 20 cents per gallon in the cost of producing synthetic methanol in the United States; and

Whereas methanol is of extensive and expanding use as a raw material in important industries in the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is requested, under provisions of section 315 of the tariff act of 1922, to investigate the costs of the production of synthetic methanol in the United States and the principal competing country and to report its findings to the President of the United States.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS, CARTELS, AND THE TARIFF

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a very interesting article on "The League of Nations, cartels, and the tariff," by A. Cressy Morrison.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is here printed, as follows:

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS, CARTELS, AND THE TARIFF[1]

(From the viewpoint of an unofficial observer at the Geneva Economic Conference. Mr. Morrison presents some interesting facts on the international situation.—The editors.)

In May of 1927 I had the good fortune to be an unofficial observer at the Geneva Economic Conference. The League of Nations had devoted a year and a half preparing for the conference, and had invited a selected list of distinguished thinkers and writers in different parts of the world to compile data for the gathering of economists and other representatives from all nations. The conference was called to discuss questions of commerce, industry, trade barriers, international cartels, and agriculture in its relation to industry. One idea developed at the conference was termed the "rationalization of industry."

President Coolidge, upon request, sent five American representatives; like members were also sent from other countries. The league reserved the right to select additional delegates from the different countries representing various organizations. Fifty nations were represented by about 400 delegates and experts.

As soon as the conference organized, it divided into many committees upon which each nation might have a representative if so desired. Not being a member of the League of Nations, the United States did not desire representatives upon some of the committees.

You will be interested to know that the international sessions at Geneva are not nearly as orderly as meetings of the majority of commercial bodies in the United States. There are so many races, people, and languages involved. Those who do not understand the speaker immediately begin talking loudly, and no one is able to comprehend what is being said. It was my idea that the league would be a very dignified body where diplomats in uniform or formal dress would rise and address the assembly, which would listen in rapt silence.

The official languages of the league are English and French. A Frenchman makes a vigorous speech with all the emphasis of his nature and with that eloquence which is proverbial among the French. He meets with tremendous applause from those who understand French. Immediately after him a translator rises, who says: "Monsieur So-and-So has spoken as follows——"; and then, to the utter amazement of those who are unfamiliar with the real brilliancy of these translators, he will repeat the speech that occupied 30 or 40 minutes and not miss a point. If he is speaking in English, translating it from the French, all those who understand French begin to talk at once, and the poor English listener is hardly aware of what is being said by the translator, and I may well say vice versa. These meetings, therefore, are not the dignified and wonderful things which one would expect.

I emphasize this particular characteristic of the League of Nations meetings because I want to illustrate the point—that it is not a body of supermen. The delegates are ordinary human beings. They have the same frailties, the same standards, the same selfishness, and the same schemes, and indeed the same generosity and general decency which humanity in general possesses. It is a composite of humanity. As a nation is a composite of its citizens, so when a nation sends delegates to the league they are more or less a cross section of its average intelligence. So the League of Nations is the average of the intelligence of the nations which compose it.

Now, that disposes of a prevalent idea that a gathering of the League of Nations is necessarily always right or always wrong. It is human, and the human equation is just as apparent there as anywhere—vindictive responses, lacking entirely in diplomacy, and earnest, sincere men advocating theories they believe to be new but which have been accepted in other countries for years. It is a most interesting study.

As it seems to be a universal opinion in Europe and other countries that the United States is unduly prosperous, so is there a united sentiment that anything which can be done to distribute our prosperity throughout the world, and advance other nations by tapping our sources of income, is a perfectly normal and proper thing to do.

The organization of the League of Nations is very complete and, as in many great bodies where there is wide divergence of opinion, the steam roller is also present. I want to emphasize this steam roller without questioning or criticizing it, except as it applies to the United States.

All the documentary preparation for the economic conference was necessarily in the hands of the officials of the league. Their point of view being international, then the documents prepared are likely to be international, because they select sympathetic writers for the preparation and so the documentation of the economic conference, amounting to about 120 volumes, all prepared in advance and costing approximately $100,000 of the league's money, had a strong international tendency. There were long and emphatic statements about universal brotherhood, the love of your fellow man, mutual dependency of nations, and so on, all highly altruistic. This was a part of the steam roller designed to color the thought of the delegates.

The chairmen of the committees, I am perfectly sure, were designated before the conference convened; and were more or less in sympathy with the purposes of internationalism which the league had in view. I am not criticizing that.

The resolutions were prepared in advance and submitted to the committees for consideration. Of course, they were considered, but human experience develops the fact that there is almost always a majority affirmatively inclined toward a well-written resolution. Mental laziness prevents many from rising and criticizing the verbiage of a resolution which has already been prepared, especially since men have confidence in their committees. The fundamental basis of the resolutions, the thing on which the outcome depended, was evidently prepared in advance. In the end, those delegates who wished to oppose a resolution were almost always in the minority. As a result, the fruit of the conferences and the outcome was largely the result of the determination of the League of Nations to bring about in the conference an international point of view; to destroy nationalism and to substitute a universal brotherhood of nations may be ideal, but the millennium is not yet here. The New Testament teaches "brotherhood," but we still have policemen.

Every one of our own delegates at the conference was sound in his Americanism. On many things they did not vote, especially where it involved an investigation or an expenditure of money by the league; and the American position was very sound, for they could not well vote on a subject that involved expenditures from a fund to which we do not contribute.

Our delegation found many things in the resolutions, evidently inserted with direct reference to us or for the purpose of propaganda in the United States. Many were eliminated. In one case an American delegate, who was a minority of 1 against 52 opposing a clause in a resolution, had the courage to say: "If you press this matter, which is contrary to the interest of the United States as I see it, I shall be obliged to bring in a minority report and precipitate a debate on the question before the conference." That seemed certainly effective, and the wording after long debate was apparently eliminated; but when the report of the committee was printed the next morning, by some inadvertence the objectionable clause was still in the resolution; and it required still more courage for that American delegate to go to the chairman and say to him: "I have discovered a typographical error in the report, and unless it is taken out before it is presented I will renew my objection by making a minority report and will bring the error into public discussion."

So you will see how difficult it is for any nation, and more especially the United States, to meet the majority opinion and be courteous and friendly without yielding something to his international idea when in our hearts we feel we should not yield.

I have given this picture of the League of Nations so that you may see that the league differs in no particular from other great bodies of men wherever they get together to discuss important matters. As is human, they, too, are more or less steered; it is the same thing we find anywhere. That disposes of the League of Nations as a superbody, and I am sure that anyone who will go there and observe it as I did in connection with its inner mechanism will feel that way. In my opinion, whether the propaganda charges us with isolation or not, it makes little difference. If we become bound by the rules of the League of Nations we will find ourselves, step by step, yielding to the majority. We are a good-natured, generous-minded people, and with organization and a majority against us the situation would be dangerous. It is my opinion that the United States should stay out of the League of Nations.

Many of the keynotes of the league are obvious statements. If I were a politician I would always deal in obvious statements, and then the most of my hearers would agree with me.

For illustration, here are some of them: "It is generally conceded that 'the greater the international interchange of products best and most economically produced' in different countries should therefore be regarded as the normal rule." This, of course, means free trade. But the human equation enters, and certainly France, with her standard of living, could not abandon the making of silk and pottery and give this business to China or Japan, nor would those countries give France any return unless her prices were lower than other nations.

Again, England could not abandon the manufacture of dyes and chemicals to Germany on both military and commercial grounds; nor could she intrust a monopoly in such things to any other country and be sure that the higher prices of dyes would not make her production of textiles competitively impossible.

Here is another obvious statement: "Human brotherhood is growing, and in human brotherhood lies our opportunity for future progress and the growth of civilization." Well, that is true basically whether we are white, black, yellow, or red. We are of the same humanity, and we have evolved along similar lines; but our standards differ enormously, and we can not sacrifice them; nor can we adopt the methods of life, morals, or economics of some of our brothers.

Another: "You can not sell unless you buy." Well, that sounds perfectly sound and obvious, but there is much to be said on the other side. Such general statements are hard to answer, and it takes patience and time and no little ability to do it. The league's attitude all the way through was based upon these generalized statements.

"Rationalization of industry," by which is meant quantity production, automatic machinery, system, and great capital investment, became a subject of much discussion. There was a clear understanding that a great deal of the industrial progress of the United States was due to this policy. The efforts of the American people to standardize products so that rationalization could be attained and the extraordinary reduction in man power per unit of output was recognized. The league was apparently unanimous in the opinion that Europe, if it wishes to succeed and compete successfully with the great country across the seas, must adopt this magic rationalization.

All through the discussions of rationalization were long arguments to the effect that the introduction of new machinery was dangerous to the workingman; that if they started rationalization by improving their products or getting a larger production per man it would increase unemployment; and therefore provision must be made and subsidies provided for the idle laborers thus thrown out of work until consumption caught up.

Now, we in America have passed beyond that. Labor in this country knows perfectly well that the introduction of a new machine means more business for the employer and more work for themselves at higher pay. But over on the other side they still show by their debates that they are in the old state of mind. That may not be the feeling of all, but it is the state of mind of many of the delegates.

We see that the average opinions of the other nations are a generation behind us in this matter. But they are awakening, and the time is coming very soon when rationalization and the adoption of American methods will be general. American machinery is now purchased and copied, so that in certain industries, like window glass, they are beating us with our own tools. It is going to increase their competitive ability most materially. They are still in the stage where they feel that low-cost labor reduces the cost of production and that the way to save money is to take it out of the human hide. Fortunately we have gotten beyond that, and the producing power of the American people is the key to our progress. I hope we can maintain wages in this country, and if necessary pay higher ones. Certainly we should pay wages commensurate with our standard of living and continue to use our genius to improve our processes and to bring about further savings in manpower cost.

ON THE QUESTION OF AGRICULTURE

At the Geneva conference agriculture was recognized for the first time side by side with commerce and industry. Its problems must be solved with the others.

But we Americans had paved the way for that, for when we framed our own tariff act of 1922 we recognized that the raw material of one man is the finished product of another. We recognized the farm as a producing industry. It is just as difficult to raise a Merino sheep as it is to make cloth and an overcoat from its wool. The man who produces sheep is just as much a manufacturer as the mill owner. That idea seemed to be just born in Geneva, although we have had it over here for some time. So agriculture was recognized as an integral part of the industrial structure of human life and civilization and entitled to equal compensation and equal recognition.

It seemed to be acknowledged as a deplorable reality that in all of the European countries agriculture was not prospering in the same measure as industry. Our own country recently has been no exception to the general rule. But there the comparison ends, for in our own country agriculture has attained a position of importance, incomparably better than that of the farmer of Europe, who has absolutely no voice in the councils of the nations, and is only a peasant.

If our farmers could only visit Europe and see the return for effort and the standard of living of the peasant farmer, they would learn much by the comparison and would conclude that their lot here is not so bad. Our farmer should still try to better it, but he should hesitate to change our great national policies, like the protective tariff, lest he destroy himself.

CARTELS

Now comes the question of cartels, and that, I presume, is the key point to which I am to address myself. You will be interested to know that the ultimate conclusion of the League of Nations was this: They do not know whether the cartel is a good thing or not. Let me explain that "cartel" is their word in Europe for a trust or monopolistic organization, which may be national or international.

Here in our country, as is well known, we are not allowed to form monopolies or combinations to raise prices or to divide markets. The Sherman antitrust law has for years forbidden that, and our country has thought it wise to continue to do so. Here we know what riotous competition is and what its dangers are. At Geneva we were told that we are stripping our natural resources because riotous competition forces us to take only the cream from our mines, our forests, and other exhaustible natural resources. That is certainly a detriment to future generations, but for the present at least we can not help it.

But over in Europe cartels have been encouraged. Prior to the war Germany had an enormous advantage of rapidly growing industry and governmental recognition or encouragement of cartels. Agencies of the old German Government in foreign countries were charged with the duty of ascertaining the nature of imports from other countries. In Brazil, for illustration, representatives of the German Government were everywhere, in banks and other clerical positions, acquiring information regarding contracts and trade relations with other countries, so that the information might be transmitted to Germany and there acted upon by the cartel for the benefit of German commerce.

An American concern sent a man to Brazil who made contracts with the leading dealers in his particular commodity. The contract bound him to furnish all the items of that commodity which they could normally handle. The contract was large enough to involve the question of loans, and as a matter of course the local dealers went to the banks. The banks copied the contracts and sent them to Berlin, and inside of 60 days a German representative of the cartel came to Brazil, saw the other dealers, and cut the price sufficiently so that the original firms could not compete. The American manufacturer was confronted with the necessity of either cutting his price to a ruinous degree or going out of the business there. In those days Americans were not particularly interested in export business, and the manufacturer did not cut his price, and his business in Brazil was lost.

These methods are not exactly ethical and I do not say that Germany is the only one who did it. A chicken like that might some day come home to roost on our own rail. At the same time, a cartel is in a much better position to conduct such a fight and drive competitors out of business than is a single individual concern.

Now, those pre-war cartels were very successful. We have heard it said, and believe it to be so, that if the German Government had been less inclined to war and more patient, the German method of competition would have made Germany the commercial leader of the world by this time. But, of course, the war came and Germany lost. She lost territory, personnel, training, and methods of government which were effective in this case. It will take that country, and every other country in Europe, some time to reorganize and reestablish old connections and build up their trade again.

But the cartel idea is not dead, and when it came up at Geneva the conference said that there was no law which could control an international cartel; that no law could be made until cartels had demonstrated their usefulness or lack of usefulness, their dangers or their benefits. So national cartels were recognized as established facts and international cartels were considerably encouraged. The league in general terms said: "If a cartel does not raise prices internationally, if it does not discriminate against nations by charging a high price for a necessary commodity to be used in a further commodity, and thus drive that nation out of the competitive field on the further commodity, the cartel would be all right. That if it did not throw workmen out of employment it was all right. That if it did not work them too hard it was all right." But the curious thing about it was that the international cartels were discussed with the same arguments which we find took place in our own Congress when we reread the debates on the Sherman antitrust law—again showing that we have passed through much that seems new to many other nations.

Although the league reached no conclusion about cartels, yet nothing was done to discourage them. Cartels were then and there in process of formation. Last summer the "chemical cartel" was formed internationally. I met people in May who were interested in it and asked, "Have you signed? I see that German chemical stocks are rising." They answered, "No; we have not signed; but conversations are still going on." Later the great "chemical cartel" was formed.

The difficulty in forming cartels is that the initiators usually demand the greater share of the business. When the cartel divides the world's business, for instance, it may be suggested that Germany shall have 50 per cent, France 22 per cent, Holland 16 per cent, and Luxemburg 6 per cent, and so on. These percentages present great difficulties as to who will share and how much each will get.

Cartels divide up the countries on the theory that if you control production you can thus raise prices and prevent destructive competition. Back of the whole thing lies this idea: That the cartels will be better equipped to give successful combat to American industry. The strength of the cartel lies in its centralized control and in its ability to dump or to exercise the kind of competition which will force its competitors out of a neutral market. I believe it is their underlying hope that the increase in American exports may be checked, or in fact radically decreased by the efforts of these organizations.

I was astonished to learn that national cartels are so general that they cover almost all industries. International cartels are less so, but I am told that when the World War broke out there were some 600, and they have increased rapidly ever since.

Which is the proper method of doing business? Of the two systems, which will succeed? A concentrated body organized for international trade, like a cartel, or a concentrated body like the great corporations in the United States? Certainly the small fry must keep near the shore. I do not think the world has as yet demonstrated which is the best for humanity generally. That is a matter for discussion. It is trust and antitrust, and I think we may dismiss that question because we can not settle it here.

These international cartels have weaknesses, and that is the same thing that I have illustrated in the workings of the League of Nations. They are made up of human beings, and my observations confirmed my feeling that Europeans, both as nations and individuals, are not more generous nor less unselfish or high-minded than the American people.

We know there is a very large class of people in the United States who feel that anything our Government does is absolutely wrong. For instance, if we send an ambassador to Mexico who asks Mexico to protect American business interests there, some one is bound to rise and complain that it is not right; that we are trying to interfere with Mexican business and the Mexican Government. If we do not send an ambassador to look after these matters in Mexico, we are then charged with being a neglectful Government. If we go into Nicaragua because we want to protect Americans there, many in this country at once declare we are utterly wrong, are imperialistic, and have ulterior motives. They charge we are creating ill will for our Government, and that we ought to at once withdraw. If we try to do anything to protect Americans in China because there is no strong government in China and no one able to protect us there, some one jumps up and says we are brutal and are helping others to rob China of its independence.

THE TARIFF AND THE LEAGUE

Much of this unthinking criticism is directed at the American tariff. How many thousands of people in the United States think the American tariff is wicked, that it is a menace to peace, that it prevents the whole world from recovering from the war, and that we are ungenerous and unkind to Europe! How many of these critics, either Americans or Europeans, know that 60 per cent of all goods coming here are on the free list; that our imports are double those of any previous time in our history, and that more goods come in free to-day than the total of all imports under any previous law? Well, I found this ignorant criticism in Europe. I talked with a man from Finland who said: "Oh, Mr. Morrison, I wish to speak to you about your American tariff. It is hampering our development." I asked: "In Finland?" I said: "The American people are very friendly to Finland and are proud of the fact that you have organized a government upon the American model. That we are doing anything to upset the commercial relations between these two countries or do anything that is distasteful to Finland is a surprise to me. Please be specific." Now, gentlemen, that is the key to the whole situation—let the critics be specific. He said: "It is your tariff on lumber and wood pulp." I said: "Why, I am astounded that should affect you, because both are on our free list."

Then I met a Canadian, who said, "Your tariff is very, very bad." I said, "What makes you think so?" He said, "Lots of my friends in the lumber business in Canada are almost bankrupt." I said, "Wait a minute. Lumber is on our free list." He replied, "No; there is a duty of $2 per thousand." So I took my copy of our tariff act, and after reading it to him I said, "There is a duty on one kind of lumber, on planed tongued-and-grooved boards, of $2 per thousand. And the reason for that duty is because Canada charges us a duty of $2 per thousand feet. There is a clause in our tariff bill which says we will put lumber on the free list if the other nations permit our lumber to enter their markets free. In the case of Canada, I know that an application has been made to the Canadian Government to take that $2 per thousand feet off of that particular class of lumber. So you understand the moment your country takes off its tariff then our tariff falls. Your complaint is not against the United States. Go to Ottawa and have it corrected there." This is just another instance of foreign misunderstanding of our tariff.

In Europe they thoroughly believe that we have a tariff wall so high as to prevent anything from coming over here, and that it is almost impossible to export anything to us. None of them know the fact, as I stated a moment ago, that 60 per cent of all imports coming into the United States under our present tariff law are free, and that a tariff is put upon those commodities in which a large amount of labor is used in production, so as to keep our own people working instead of throwing our workmen and women out of employment and giving their jobs to the workmen in Europe. So there is a very strong sentiment, and it results in propaganda which is ever increasing. Indeed, much of this propaganda emanates right in Geneva from certain American organizations with altruistic ideals and supported by American philanthropy, who preach that our self-preservation by means of a tariff is "a menace to world peace." I have innumerable instances of that sort of matter in my possession. All the European nations have organized press bureaus which are sending alleged national opinions to our press, and, strange to say, criticisms of America and our policy get the headlines here in the States.

NATIONAL OPINIONS

And this brings me to this thought: These "national opinions" seem to come into our public prints as though they were the opinions of the peoples of these foreign governments. The propaganda is like this: "It is the consensus of opinion in Germany," or "English opinion is as follows," or "France thinks so and so." Who knows what France thinks? Who knows what the consensus of opinion is in Germany? Who knows what English public opinion is? Do we think we know because an Associated Press dispatch tells us this or that? There is no referendum. Somebody says, "France hates us." Shall we believe that? I think France loves us, and my opinion is as good as a reporter's. I think there is no lack of appreciation in France of the fact that we went "over there." They helped us in our struggle for independence and we came to them when they needed us most. Do you think the people of France hate us because of our tariff, of which ninety-nine out of a hundred Frenchmen never even heard?

But the propagandists say that France made this last attempt to raise duties against us because she wanted to get even with us on account of our protective tariff. You should know that all the European tariff walls are about as high as ours, and many exceed ours. There is not nearly as much on their free list as you would suppose.

Why should we accuse France of reprisal? How do we know what "France" thinks or why she acts? I was once told by a diplomat that if one could tell to-night what the French Government will think to-morrow morning he would surpass the greatest intellectual achievement of the century. Let us analyze this question of reprisal: Shall we say that France "thinks" this or that, and because of the American tariff she prefers to buy goods elsewhere? Is the American tariff as serious a menace to France as the German border line? Germany has been her hereditary enemy, and for generation after generation the French and the Germans have distrusted each other. On the other hand, can you tell me France has entirely forgotten our services to her and the friendly relations which have always existed? Is it because of our tariff or is it for some other reason she has made a reciprocity treaty with Germany, her worst enemy, and tried to raise her tariff against us? You may guess what an individual thinks, but no man can tell what a nation thinks. That is what I am coming to in this whole question of international relationship. France may think one thing or she may think another, but the individual in France who is engaged in the grain business "thinks" that if he can buy wheat from the Argentine one cent cheaper than he can in the United States, he is going to buy in the Argentine. And if he can buy wheat one cent cheaper in Russia than he can buy it in the Argentine or in the United States he is going to buy it in Russia.

We must not expect the individual business man to sacrifice his profits simply because he "thinks" what a wonderful, generous country the United States is, or will say, "How good it has been to us; I for one appreciate it, and therefore I am going to make the sacrifice."

We can take it as axiomatic that the purchasers in all European nations are going to buy what they can within their own borders, and if they must buy from other countries they will buy where they can buy cheapest, and nowhere else. And if they find there is something coming across their borders in serious competition with them, they will devise some means to protect themselves; a tariff, or a classification, or whatever may be necessary.

No matter what we do in America, whether we loan them money to start their industries—as we have done enormously, and thus helped them to build up competition against us—or whether or not we set aside a tariff duty, it is individual American initiative and ability that is going to determine whether we get foreign trade or not; and it is our competitive ability to produce at a lower cost and sell better goods or cheaper goods that will get us the business. Let us not adopt as a commercial principle the idea that we may expect gratitude in our business relations with the people of another country. One of the great philosophers put over his dressing table:

"Never expect gratitude. If it comes it is as a gentle rain from heaven, and it is as rare as a shower in the desert."

Quite apropos of this is a recent statement in Le Temps, a leading Paris paper, which refers to our "holier than thou" attitude, and adds: "At the feet of the Pharisees this attitude must be seriously considered, for they are only too willing to walk over those who prostrate themselves before them," and says further regarding America: "While waiting for a powerful war fleet under hasty construction she is blocking all the seas in order to hold the Old World at her mercy. She is throttling it with chains of gold."

This is a responsible French journal, and the information given is news to us all. I do not believe you knew our country was half as bad as this.

What we may do for the protection of American industry and the maintenance of our own standard of living is our own affair, and we can not look for gratitude whether we do or do not let down our tariff walls.

CARTELS AND THE TARIFF

And that brings me back to the question of cartels: With unorganized industry in the United States and organized trusts abroad when the opportunity occurs and there is any breach in our protective tariff walls, they are coming through. That is one of the great hazards of unorganized effort. Personally, I know of an instance before the war where a certain manufacturing industry was started in this country that had never been undertaken here before. At the end of one year the American manufacturer had demonstrated ability to produce the commodity economically, and at the price of $110 a ton it furnished a small profit. He was then visited by a representative of the foreign cartel, who said: "We want to be very friendly; we recognize the great ability with which you have mastered this industry, and we want to cooperate with you. Your price is $110 a ton. We will allow you 20 per cent of the business in the United States, we will take 80 per cent for ourselves, and will maintain that price." The answer of the American producer was: "I will not enter into any such combination. It is unlawful. I will go it alone and you can go, alone, to a certain very warm clime."

The foreign cartel immediately dropped the price to $60 a ton, much lower than the cost of production in the United States, and just before the war the price was dropped by the cartel to $52 a ton, because the manufacturer in this country was not only persistent but as a patriotic American as well, he kept on making it, even at a loss, because he had a deep pocket.

That is the warfare you will have to meet from the cartels. The strength of the cartel is in its unified effort; its ability to maintain prices in countries which are in the cartel, and to utilize resources thus acquired to drive competitors out of foreign markets including the markets of our own United States, which is the envy of the world.

A weakness of the cartel is also apparent: As soon as it becomes international there is the national feeling as well as the human equation—national pride, jealousy, and selfishness. I do not expect cartels in their present form to last indefinitely, but I do expect the idea to grow and superorganized aggregations to appear, and I think within a very few years we will have cartels of such sound foundation that they will be a distinct menace to American industry. It therefore behooves us, in view of the centralization in Europe, to remember that the greatest market of the world is in the United States; that our export business is from 7 to 10 per cent of the total volume of our production, and, essential as our exports appear to be, we can not afford to bring down our standard of living and throw labor out of employment here just to get us an export trade. We must not break those things down which have made our prosperity, because with wages paid here three or four or five times those paid in foreign countries, without some means to equalize this difference in cost we are in no position to defend ourselves.

I feel that the League of Nations may be useful; and on the Continent where wages are nearly on a level, where economic conditions are much the same and distances are shorter, perhaps there may be an actual breaking down of tariff walls there. Let us expect that, and let them work out their own salvation. But let us not deceive ourselves with the thought that we can make any nation grateful to us by anything we do in this country. The individual merchant decides the question of where to buy, and he will buy in the cheapest market.

So let us maintain the United States as we have it. Let us keep our high wage scale and our standard of living. Let us thus keep our prosperity. Let us continue to rationalize our industries and in many fields we shall be able to win the world's trade by giving better goods for less money; and at all times we can help Europe, because a prosperous America makes the best customer for all the nations of the world.

That the Secretary of Agriculture shall in his regulations under this act prescribe such tolerances as he may find necessary to allow in the capacities for hampers, round stave baskets, and splint baskets set forth in sections 1 and 2 of this act in order to provide for reasonable variations occurring in the course of manufacturing and handling. If a cover be used upon any hamper or basket mentioned in this act, it shall be securely fastened or attached in such a manner, subject to the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, as not to reduce the capacity of such hamper or basket below that prescribed therefor.

SEC. 4. That no manufacturer shall manufacture hampers, round stave baskets, or splint baskets for fruits and vegetables unless the dimension specifications for such hampers, round stave baskets, or splint baskets shall have been submitted to and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, who is hereby directed to approve such specifications if he finds that hampers, round stave baskets, or splint baskets for fruits and vegetables made in accordance therewith would not be deceptive in appearance and would comply with the provisions of sections 1 and 2 of this act.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful to manufacture for sale or shipment, to offer for sale, to sell, to offer for shipment, or to ship, hampers, round stave baskets, or splint baskets for fruits or vegetables, either filled or unfilled, or parts of such hampers, round stave baskets, or splint baskets that do not comply with this act: Provided, That this act shall not apply to Climax baskets, berry boxes, and till baskets which comply with the provisions of the act approved August 31, 1916, entitled "An act to fix standards for Climax baskets for grapes and other fruits and vegetables, and to fix standards for baskets and other containers for small fruits, berries, and vegetables, and for other purposes" (39 U. S. Stat. L. 673), and the regulations thereunder. Any individual, partnership, association, or corporation that violates this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500: Provided further, That no person shall be prosecuted under the provisions of this act when he can establish a guaranty signed by the manufacturer, wholesaler, shipper, or other party residing within the United States from whom the hampers, round stave baskets, or splint baskets, as defined in this act, were purchased, to the effect that said hampers, round stave baskets, or splint baskets are correct, within the meaning of this act. Said guaranty, to afford protection, shall contain the name and address of the party or parties making the sale of the hampers, round stave baskets, or splint baskets to such person, and in such case such party or parties making such sale shall be amenable to the prosecution, fines, and other penalties which would attach in due course under the provisions of this act to the person who made the purchase.

Upon request the person entitled shall be permitted to retain or take possession of the contents of such hampers or baskets, but in the absence of such request, or when the perishable nature of such contents makes such action immediately necessary, the same shall be disposed of by destruction or sale, as the court or a judge thereof may direct. If such hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, or parts thereof be found in such proceeding to be contrary to this act, the same shall be disposed of by destruction, except that the court may by order direct that such hampers, baskets, or parts thereof be returned to the owner thereof or sold upon the payment of the costs of such proceedings and the execution and delivery of a good and sufficient bond to the effect that such hampers, baskets, or parts thereof shall not be sold or used contrary to law. The proceeds of any sale under this section, less legal costs and charges, shall be paid over to the person entitled thereto. The proceedings in such seizure cases shall conform as near as may be to the proceedings in admiralty, except that either party may demand trial by jury of any issue of fact joined in such case, and all such proceedings shall be at the suit and in the name of the United States.

SEC. 7. That this act shall not prohibit the manufacture for sale or shipment, offer for sale, sale, or shipment of hampers, round stave baskets, splint baskets, or parts thereof, to any foreign country in accordance with the specifications of a foreign consignee or customer not contrary to the law of such foreign country; nor shall this act prevent the manufacture or use of banana hampers of the shape and character now in commercial use as shipping containers for bananas.

SEC. 8. That it shall be the duty of each United States district attorney to whom satisfactory evidence of any violation of this act is presented to cause appropriate proceedings to be commenced and prosecuted in the proper courts of the United States in his district for the enforcement of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe such regulations as he may find necessary for carrying into effect the provisions of this act, and shall cause such examinations and tests to be made as may be necessary in order to determine whether hampers, round stave baskets, and splint baskets, or parts thereof, subject to this act, meet its requirements, and may take samples of such hampers, baskets, or parts thereof, the cost of which samples, upon request, shall be paid to the person entitled.

SEC. 10. That for carrying out the purposes of this act the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with State, county, and municipal authorities, manufacturers, dealers, and shippers, to employ such persons and means, and to pay such expenses, including rent, printing publications, and the purchase of supplies and equipment in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as he shall find to be necessary, and there are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary for such purposes.

SEC. 11. That sections 5 and 6 of this act shall become effective at but not before the expiration of one year following the 1st day of November, next, succeeding the passage of this act.

PRISON-MADE GOODS

The bill (S. 1940) to divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I wish to briefly state my objections to S. 1940, entitled "A bill to divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts of their interstate character in certain cases," which has been favorably reported with an amendment by the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The report opens with a significant statement:

The penitentiary problem is a problem for the State. The factors that enter into its adjustment are so many and so varied as to make it essentially a State problem, and no Federal impediment should stand in the way of any State which seeks to determine its own prison affairs and the regulation of the sale of prison products.

Such impediment now exists, and it is only for the removal of the impediment that this legislation is designed.

It goes on to state that the proposed legislation is supported by three great elements of society—namely, the American Federation of Labor, the manufacturers, and the General Federation of Women's Clubs; discusses the "State use" and "State-use plans"; mentions the opposition of prison contractors; deplores uncontrollable abuses; and closes with the gracious announcement, in the form of an amendment, that two years have been given for the readjustment of present systems.

In speaking of the character of the bill the report says:

Briefly, the bill divests convict-made products of their interstate character upon their arrival in the State of their destination and permits the laws of that State to become operative with respect to the sale and distribution of such products within the State. It is simply an enabling act.

The bill does not prohibit the transportation of convict-made goods. It does not force the enactment of any State legislation. It does not alter or in any way interfere with any existing law in any State, nor does it interfere with the management of any State penal institution.

I propose to show by a brief analysis of the bill that this is not a proper subject for legislation by Congress; that its enactment would be unconstitutional and void; and that the effect of its passage, if legal, would be a far-reaching and unjustifiable invasion of the rights of the sovereign States.

In defining the powers of Congress the Constitution of the United States provides, among other things, that—

The Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes. (U. S. Constitution, Art. I, sec. 8, cl. 3.)

It is now considered an elementary proposition of law that this grant of express power to Congress was absolute and exclusive in its nature and, therefore, I will not take the time of the Senate to discuss it. The object of the provision as shown by numerous constructions of the clause in decisions by the Supreme Court of the United States was to place the regulation of interstate commerce under the control of Congress to prevent unfair discriminations against the commerce of one State by another State, and to encourage and foster free and unrestricted intercourse of trade among the several States.

However, we all know that laws are supposed to be founded upon reason and are subject to common-sense interpretation. It was held in the case of Stoutenburg v. Hennick (129 U. S. 141) that Congress could not delegate to the District of Columbia the power to regulate commerce between the District and the States; but, on the other hand, it was decided in the Interstate Commerce Commission cases that Congress had authority, under its sovereign and exclusive power to regulate commerce, to create a commission for the purpose of taking over certain of its duties in reference to this subject.

It has also been generally accepted that it is within the power of Congress to permit the exercise of the power to regulate interstate commerce by the States in certain instances. In this connection I might state that sections 4278 and 4279 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to nitroglycerine and other explosives, are grants of power by Congress directly to any State, Territory, District, city, or town to prohibit the introduction of such substances into its limits for sale, use, or consumption therein, and this principle is supported by the opinion of the Supreme Court in Ex parte Jervey, 66 Federal, 960.

Following the decision in Leisy v. Hardin (135 U. S. 100), Congress provided in an act of August 8, 1890 (26 Stat. 313):

That all fermented, distilled, or other intoxicating liquors or liquids transported into any State or Territory or remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein shall, upon arrival in such State or Territory, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory enacted in the exercise of its police powers to the same extent and in the same manner as though such liquids or liquors had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise.

This act was held to be valid and constitutional in In re Rahrer (140 U. S. 561), the court saying:

Congress has not attempted to delegate the power to regulate commerce, or to exercise any power reserved to the States, or to grant a power not possessed by the States, or to adopt State laws. It has taken its own course and made its own regulation, applying to these subjects of interstate commerce one common rule, whose uniformity is not affected by variations in State laws in dealing with such property.

And goes on to further say:

No reason is perceived why, if Congress chooses to provide that certain designated articles of interstate commerce shall be governed by a rule which divests them of that character at an earlier period of time than would otherwise be the case, it is not within its competency to do so.

It is peculiarly interesting to note the striking similarity in the wording of the above-quoted act and the language employed by the court in construing the same with S. 1940, the bill which we have under discussion, and which reads as follows:

That all goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined, wholly or in part, by convicts or prisoners, except paroled convicts or prisoners, or in any penal and/or reformatory institutions, transported into any State or Territory of the United States and remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage, shall upon arrival in such State or Territory be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory to the same extent and in the same manner as though such goods, wares, and merchandise had been manufactured, produced, or mined in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced in the original package or otherwise.

Section 2 provides that—

This act shall take effect two years after the date of its approval.

It is therefore apparent that upon the foregoing statements of law the proponents of S. 1940 base their claims for its validity. This contention can not be sustained for various and obvious reasons.

In the first place, the business of manufacturing is not commerce. In Kid v. Pearson (128 U. S. 20) the Supreme Court of the United States says:

No distinction is more popular to the common mind or more clearly expressed in economic or political literature than that between manufactures and commerce.

The legal definition of the term "commerce" as given by the Supreme Court in County of Mobile v. Kimball (102 U. S. 671, 702), and reiterated in Kid v. Pearson (supra), is as follows:

Commerce with foreign countries and among the States, strictly considered, consists in intercourse and traffic, including in these terms navigation and the transportation and transit of persons and property, as well as the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities.

Compare this statement with the following declaration in the same case:

Manufacture is transformation * * * the fashioning of raw materials into a change of form for use. The functions of commerce are different. The buying and selling and transportation incidental thereto constitute commerce; and the regulation of commerce in the constitutional sense embraces the regulation, at least, of such transportation.

The distinction is important and can not be overly emphasized, for it may clearly be seen that the power to regulate commerce does not infer nor imply the power to regulate manufactures.

In fact, the absence of an express grant of power to Congress to regulate manufactures plainly shows that this right was wisely reserved to the people and the several States under the tenth amendment to the Constitution.

Now, the obvious and proximate effect of the enactment into law of the bill under discussion—S. 1940—whatever may be the motives actuating its advocates, will be to permit certain States to regulate and control the legitimate manufacture of wholesome and useful articles in other States through the medium of restrictions and embargoes on interstate commerce.

Unlike the instances of "explosives," "intoxicating beverages," and other articles of like nature deemed by reason of inherent qualities to be dangerous or injurious to the safety, health, and good morals of a community, thereby falling within the class of police power restrictions, S. 1940 is not a measure protesting against the character of the articles sought to be affected thereby, but, on the other hand, and admittedly so, objects solely to the class of labor employed in the manufacture of the goods. In other words, articles of the same kind are proposed to be classified and discriminated against according to the method of origin and not nature. Brooms made by convicts may not be sold, while brooms made by other than convicts may be sold, and likewise with other goods, wares, and merchandise.

In United States v. Knight Co. (156 U. S. 1) the Supreme Court has this to say:

> Commerce succeeds to manufacture and is not a part of it. The power to regulate commerce is the power to prescribe the rule by which commerce shall be governed, and is a power independent of the power to suppress monopoly.

Thereby holding that commerce was separate and distinct from the business of manufacturing.

In International Paper Co. v. Massachusetts it was held that the manufacture of paper is not commerce. (246 U. S. 135.)

The mining of coal or ore is not interstate commerce, and the Supreme Court of the United States has so held in United Mine Workers v. Coronado Co. (259 U. S. 344) and the Oliver Iron Co. v. Lord (262 U. S. 172).

See also Crescent Oil Co. v. Mississippi (257 U. S. 129).

How, then, if Congress has not the power to regulate manufactures, can it, by passing this bill, divest itself of nothing and at the same time confer something upon the different States? Congress has not this power to give; it has never had this power to give, and surely no one will assert that any State under our form of government has the right to regulate or control the manufactures, mining, and other industries of another State. It is a simple proposition in arithmetic. Nothing subtracted from nothing leaves naught, and naught added to naught gives nothing.

It may be argued where, then, does the power rest? It certainly does not belong to Congress and the right abides in each of the several States.

Once an article is manufactured, mined, or produced and becomes the subject of interstate commerce, of course, the constitutional power of Congress immediately attaches, as has been pointed out, to prevent discriminations by the States.

The question is, Can Congress, by act, designate certain articles as being subject to discriminatory legislation by the States because of the method of their production, and, at the same time, allow other articles of the exact nature to enjoy the privileges and immunities of interstate commerce? The answer is "no," for to admit the affirmative of this proposition would give to Congress the right to regulate the manufactures, mining, and other producing interests of the States and deprive them of this valuable and necessary power.

The Supreme Court in United States v. Knight Co. (156 U. S. 1) says:

> It is vital that the independence of the commercial power and of the police power, and the delimitation between them, however sometimes perplexing, should always be recognized and observed.

There is another feature of this proposed legislation, and an important one, to which I desire to call special attention. In his admirable work, Watson on the Constitution, page 532, he has this to say:

> Closely akin to the question of regulating manufacturing is the question whether Congress can forbid the hauling of a commodity by a carrier of interstate commerce which was manufactured in a State, for instance, by women or children under a certain age, as has recently been maintained. This question is of far-reaching effect, and if such power exists in Congress it would result in the most complete invasion of the sovereignty of the States by the General Government which has ever been accomplished under the Federal Constitution.

In Hammer v. Dagenhart (247 U. S. 251) it was held that the child labor law can not be sustained on the theory that Congress has power to control interstate commerce in the shipment of child-made goods in States where the evil of child labor has been recognized by local legislation and the right to employ child labor has been more rigorously restrained than in the State of production.

See also Bailey v. Drexel Furniture Co. (259 U. S. 20), in which an act imposing a tax on child-labor-made goods was held unconstitutional.

I hope that I have made my objections to S. 1940 clear.

In the first place, I frankly believe that the proposed law would be held unconstitutional and void by the Supreme Court for the reasons which have been assigned.

In the second place, the bill is analogous to the proposed child-labor legislation and constitutes an unwarranted and dangerous invasion of the rights of the sovereign States.

In the third place, it seeks to do indirectly that which can not be done directly and is intended to circumvent the Constitution of the United States.

In the fourth place, Congress can not change the nature of things by act. Frequently acts are passed to alter the records and show that a man was not a deserter from the military or naval forces, but the act of Congress does not alter the fact that he was a deserter. Interstate commerce is interstate commerce and Congress can not alter that fact.

In the fifth place, the enactment of this bill would result in much confusion and controversy between the States. One State will lay an embargo against the goods of another and this will result in reprisals. There is no saying where it would eventually lead to.

I therefore ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I ask the Senator if he will withhold the objection for a moment?

It was reported favorably by the House committee, passed by the House, and has been reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs. I hope that we may substitute the House bill for the Senate bill and that the House bill may be put upon its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. I have not seen the House bill, but I notice on page 2 of the report on the Senate bill an adverse recommendation; that is, it is equivalent to that. I read from the report:

> The bill (S. 151) is identical with the bill (S. 3033), Sixty-ninth Congress, which was referred to the Bureau of the Budget, and in regard to which the Navy Department is informed that the proposed legislation was in conflict with the financial program of the President.

I ask the Senator to let the bill go over until Thursday evening, when I shall be very glad to cooperate with him.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. May I ask the Senator if he will in the meantime have the goodness to read the full report? I think he will agree with me that it is a meritorious bill.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator objecting to the bill withhold his objection long enough for me to have a couple of amendments to the bill passed on, to which there will be no objection and which will relieve most, if not all, of the objections to the bill when they are examined later. After that is done, then we can pass it over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the objecting Senator withhold his objection?

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I am bound to object to the bill. I was not the only Senator who objected, however. There were several who interposed an objection.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not intend to try to pass the bill to-night. I understand it will lead to some debate, but I want to offer two amendments to which there can be no possible objection, and then I am going to ask that it go over.

Mr. BRUCE. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a committee amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Instead of the committee amendment I am going to offer another amendment. The reference in the committee amendment is not quite right. It ought to be as follows——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate should disagree to the committee amendment first.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to offer it in lieu of the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That may be done.

Mr. NORRIS. Instead of the committee amendment insert the following words:

> United States Code, title 28, section 41, paragraph 1.

That makes the proper reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. I now offer another amendment to which there will be no objection because it narrows down the effect of the bill and will leave it so there will be no objection whatever, I believe. It affects the diverse citizenship jurisdiction of the court. It takes away everything except that one.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I am bound to say I think it will be a little premature to take up the amendments now to limit the jurisdiction of district courts of the United States. I am frank to say that I have received more letters making objection to this bill than with reference to any other bill on the calendar.

Mr. NORRIS. When this amendment is agreed to, if the Senator will then examine the bill I feel as confident that he will favor it as that I am in favor of it myself. I think it will remove any possible objection except from one class of people.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that he have his amendment printed and lie on the table before the Senate acts upon it, in order that it may be examined in connection with the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, I will do that. I will not offer it at all if there is objection. I realize that it takes unanimous consent, but in order that Senators may understand it, let me say that the bill takes away certain jurisdiction of the Federal courts. The amendment narrows down to one particular thing the jurisdiction that it takes away so that those who object to the bill will find it less objectionable, of course, when the amendment is agreed to. They can still object to the bill after that. Of course, as soon as the amendment is agreed to, I will ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table, and without objection the bill as already amended will go over.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no, Mr. President. I ask Senators to withhold their objection to see if we can not adopt the amendment. There can not possibly be any objection to it, because those who object to the bill now taking away jurisdiction will have less objection when a part of their objection is entirely removed.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. I think I may say to the Senator from Maryland, because I brought up the objection to the bill in the first place, that the bar association of my city is very much opposed to it. However, I can see no objection to the adoption of the amendment. That completes the bill, but it is still on the calendar. It is not passed in any sense, but is still before us.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator tenders the amendment, and now the Senator from New York indicates that by the adoption of that amendment it would complete the bill other than the final vote upon it. Some of us might want to offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska. It does seem to me it would be better to have the bill go over and have the amendment printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the objection to be maintained on the part of the objecting Senators, and the order of the Chair already entered is that the amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a resolution and statement of the committee on jurisprudence and law reform of the American Bar Association in connection with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution and statement referred to are as follows:

RESOLUTIONS AND STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE ON JURISPRUDENCE AND LAW REFORM OF THE AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION IN OPPOSITION TO SENATE BILL 3151

To the Senate of the United States:

The within resolutions and statement in relation to Senate bill 3151 are transmitted to the Members of the Senate by direction of the committee on jurisprudence and law reform of the American Bar Association.

HENRY W. TAFT, Chairman.

Resolution of the executive committee of the American Bar Association, adopted at a meeting on April 24, 1928, in Washington, D. C.

Whereas there have been introduced in the present Congress of the United States certain bills which, in the judgment of the executive committee, are inconsistent with the advancement of the science of jurisprudence and the promotion of the administration of justice and uniformity of legislation and of judicial decision throughout the Nation, as defined by the constitution of the American Bar Association; and

Whereas the executive committee is of opinion that it is the duty of the association, acting through its proper committees, to oppose the passage of all bills intended to diminish the powers and to limit the jurisdiction of the Federal courts: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the committee on jurisprudence and law reform be, and it hereby is, authorized in the name of the association to oppose the passage of any bills intended to diminish the powers and to limit the jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

Resolution of the committee on jurisprudence and law reform of the American Bar Association, adopted at a meeting held in Washington, D. C., on April 26, 1928

Pursuant to the authority conferred by the preambles and resolution of the executive committee of the American Bar Association, adopted at its meeting on April 24, 1928, authorizing the committee on jurisprudence and law reform in the name of the association to oppose the passage of any bills intended to diminish the powers and to limit the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, the said committee on jurisprudence and law reform unanimously adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the committee on jurisprudence and law reform of the American Bar Association, in behalf of said association and in its name, opposes the passage of Senate bill 3151, by which it is sought to deprive the United States district courts of the larger part of their jurisdiction in common-law and equity cases, conferred upon them by paragraph (1) of section 24 of the Judicial Code (sec. 41, U. S. C.), being the most important part of the jurisdiction conferred by that section and that most frequently exercised;

Resolved further, That the reasons for the committee's opposition to Senate bill 3151 are set forth in a statement hereto annexed;

Resolved further, That the chairman of the committee be authorized to cause the said preambles and resolutions, together with the said statement, to be printed in convenient form and sent to each Member of the United States Senate.

STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE ON JURISPRUDENCE AND LAW REFORM OF THE AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION IN OPPOSITION TO SENATE BILL 3151

Senate bill 3151, introduced by Senator NORRIS and favorably reported to the Senate Judiciary Committee, seeks to amend paragraph (1) of section 24 of the Judicial Code (sec. 41, U. S. C.) by taking from the United States district courts jurisdiction at common law or equity in the following cases, viz:

1. Where the suit is between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States;

2. Where the matter in controversy exceeds $3,000, exclusive of interests and costs; and

(a) Arises under the Constitution or laws of the United States or treaties made or which shall be made under their authority;

(b) Is between citizens of different States; or

(c) Is between citizens of a State and foreign States, citizens or subjects.

As a result of the proposed amendment litigants would be forced in all of the above cases to resort to State courts having jurisdiction.

By the judiciary act of September 24, 1789, establishing the judicial courts of the United States, the Federal courts were given jurisdiction in all cases specified above, except those of citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States and those relating to controversies arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States. In the latter cases jurisdiction was conferred by the act of March 31, 1875.

A

During the fiscal years of 1927 there were commenced in the district courts of the United States, exclusive of admiralty and bankruptcy cases, 19,340 private suits. On June 30, 1927, there were there pending in that court undetermined 29,870 of suits of that character (Rept. of the Attorney General, 1927, p. 81). Most of these suits are of a kind in which the district courts would not have jurisdiction if the Senate bill 3151 should become law.

In the annotated copy of the United States Code, under section 41 (Judicial Code, sec. 24), there are over 400 pages of annotations to paragraph (1), most of which relate to litigation of which the district court would be deprived if the bill objected to were passed. Under all of the rest of the 28 paragraphs of that section dealing with other heads of jurisdiction there are only 200 pages of annotations.

The annotated copy of the code also shows that under the first paragraph of section 41 (Judicial Code, sec. 24) 955 subjects have been dealt with by the courts—the number of decisions upon each subject varying—while under all the other paragraphs of the section the subjects, excluding admiralty, number only 194. The pecuniary importance of the business of the district courts is indicated by the fact that in the year 1927 judgments were rendered for the plaintiffs for an aggregate of $92,310,602.85 and for the defendants of $4,913,158.38.

If the Norris bill should become law, the greater portion of the litigation indicated by the above figures would be withdrawn from the Federal courts, and there would probably be no further need for the present judicial establishment. Special courts would be able to deal with admiralty and patent causes, while government causes would be committed to special tribunals—the first step toward a system, alien to Anglo-Saxon ideas of civil liberty, of having one kind of law and procedure governing the rights of individuals among themselves and another controlling rights growing out of their relations to the Government. The benefits of the harmonious and consistent body of law built up in the Federal courts during a period of 140 years would thus be largely lost and the systems of 48 States substituted, often inharmonious and inconsistent.

B

There has been built up by the Federal courts during a period of 140 years, and especially during the last 40 or 50 years, which have been marked by an unprecedented development in agriculture, industry, and transportation, a great body of Federal jurisprudence. The decisions relating to interstate commerce and to due process of law under the fifth and fourth amendments of the Constitution alone constitute a body of law of vast importance to the growth and prosperity of the country. Federal jurisprudence relating to these and other matters owes little to the decisions of State courts, while the Federal courts are constantly contributing to its development. Indeed, the interpretation of the Federal Constitution and statutes has become so associated in the minds of the American public with the Federal courts that to transfer it to the State courts would give a rude shock to the bench, the bar, and the business interests of the country, because it would seem to be a sinister attack upon one of our institutions heretofore regarded as the keystone of the constitutional system.

Apart from considerations based on this historical background there is something essentially unfair and contrary to the spirit of our national system of government in forcing a litigant claiming that a State statute is void under the Federal Constitution to resort in every case to the courts of the very State which has enacted the legislation and presumably in response to a sentiment prevailing among its citizens. And the prejudice such a litigant would naturally suffer under such circumstances will be enhanced where the claim of unconstitutionality depends upon issues of fact which must be settled under the rules of evidence and procedure of the State court, often quite different from those prevailing in the Federal courts. The settlement by the trial court of matters resting in its discretion, the settlement of findings of fact, the making up of the record on appeal, and the limitations upon the power of the highest State appellate court to review the findings or conclusions of the trial court—all of these matters may, and not infrequently do, combine to present in the Supreme Court a case in quite a different aspect from that which would result from the uniform methods and procedure prevailing in the Federal courts; and they might conceivably defeat a litigant in fairly presenting a question of constitutionality to the Supreme Court.

A striking illustration of what might have happened if the Norris bill had been law is afforded by the case of Pierce v. Society of Sisters (the Oregon school case, 268 U. S. 510), where an injunction was granted by the district court to restrain the enforcement of a State statute—an initiative measure adopted by the people—requiring parents to send their children to the public schools. The district court held that the statute was in violation of the fourteenth amendment, as it was an unreasonable interference with the liberty of parents in bringing up their children. It was charged among other things that the object of the law was to destroy parochial schools, and it was argued in support of the law that the voters might have been alarmed "at the rising tide of religious suspicion." Here is a typical case where a plaintiff, forced to bring a suit in a State court, would be seriously handicapped in an atmosphere of hostile public opinion based on religious prejudice and where the supporters of the State law would avail of every procedural expedient to prevent their opponents from securing a review in the Supreme Court.

Many other cases will occur to an experienced lawyer. We mention a few by way of illustration.

In Truax v. Raich (239 U. S. 33) a suit was brought to restrain the officers of the State of Arizona from enforcing what was alleged to be an unconstitutional statute. The suit was heard before three judges under the provisions of section 266 of the Judicial Code (U. S. C. 380). The statute was adopted under the initiative provision of the constitution of the State and presumably reflected the prevailing sentiment of the people of the State. It was assailed and held to be unconstitutional as being repugnant to the fourteenth amendment in that it denied to aliens equal protection of the laws, by restricting the number of them who could be employed in a business to 20 per cent of the entire number of employees. The plaintiff was a cook in a restaurant, dependent on his employment for his livelihood, but being an alien was excluded by the terms of the statute. Obviously, he fared better in the Federal court than he would have in a State court.

Contracts for the future delivery of cotton, involving immense sums of money, are made in Illinois, New York, Louisiana, and other States. Several States, notably Georgia, have passed laws declaring that such contracts are gambling contracts. On the other hand, the courts of New York and Louisiana, and the Supreme Court of the United States, take the opposite view. If, therefore, a resident of Georgia incurs an indebtedness to a New York, Louisiana, or Illinois resident upon a transaction in cotton futures, and the latter is forced to go to Georgia to collect it, the courts of that State will reject his claim, and he can only collect by resorting to the Federal court.

In case of the insolvency of great railroad or industrial corporations having property and operating in a number of States, with different receivers, complications arise even in the Federal courts, as they did in the Northern Pacific receiverships. But the difficulties would be infinitely greater if such corporations were forced to have their affairs liquidated in the courts of a dozen States. Neither Congress nor the Supreme Court could grant relief, and the confusion thus created would involve enormous waste of values and great delay in the resumption of normal business, which would in turn affect the welfare of hundreds of thousands of employees dependent for their livelihood upon a resumption of the business of the bankrupt concerns. In some jurisdictions ancillary receivers decline to transmit assets to the receivers in another jurisdiction until creditors in their own localities are fully paid; and the tendency to take this attitude is greater in the State courts than in the Federal courts.

C

Human nature has not changed since Justice Story, speaking for the Supreme Court in Martin v. Hunter (1 Wheat. 304), said that the Constitution had presumed that—

"State attachments, State prejudices, State jealousies, and State interests might sometimes obstruct or control, or be supposed to obstruct or control, the regular administration of justice. Hence, in controversies between States; between citizens of different States; between citizens claiming grants under different States; between a State and its citizens or foreigners; and between citizens and foreigners, it enables the parties, under the authority of Congress, to have controversies heard, tried, and determined before the national tribunals."

It will be observed that the opinion of Justice Story is not predicated alone upon the actual existence of "attachments, prejudices, jealousies, and interest" but upon the supposition that they exist; and that supposition continues unchanged.

It was to avoid discrimination based on such conditions as these that Federal courts were authorized by the Constitution, and lawyers as well as laymen who have given attention to the subject will agree that the following expression is as true now as it ever was, viz:

"The exercise of this jurisdiction [i. e., Federal] tends to promote confidence and commercial intercourse between the citizens of the several States of the Union by furnishing them a comparatively impartial tribunal wherein to adjudicate and enforce the controverted and unsatisfied claims growing out of such intercourse." (Judge Deady, Goldsmith v. Peters, 36 Fed. Rep. 484, 487; aff'd. 147 U. S. 150.)

A man would be blind to conditions in different parts of this country who did not realize that attachments, prejudices, and jealousies and differing social, economic, and political views continue to influence (if sometimes unconsciously) lawyers, judges, and jurymen, when they are called upon to adjudicate upon the rights of citizens from distant States. It is not necessary to charge an unjust point of view in fellow Americans living in different parts of the country. But that marked differences of outlook and opinion exist which influence both legislation and judicial proceedings, especially when the interests of nonresidents are involved, is undeniable.

The commissioners on uniform State laws, appointed by governors of the several States, have been attempting to bring about uniformity in the laws of the several States, and have been successful in certain subjects of legislation; but in many cases where local traditions, prepossessions, and prejudices have resulted in prevailing views on economic, social, or industrial conditions the States have refused to be influenced by the desirability of uniformity. Some States indulge themselves freely in experimental legislation, which is a reflection of dominant local sentiment. Such legislative tendencies do not afford much assurance that a person from a distant brought into a State court will always obtain the same kind of justice as that available to him in a Federal district court.

In contrast with the uncertainties created by the varying conditions existing in the State courts, the necessity for uniformity in the decisions and procedure of the district courts, creates in the judges a sense of judicial responsibility and an esprit de corps which can never exist in the judges of 48 State courts beyond the influence of a unified administration of Federal jurisprudence. This was anticipated by the framers of the Constitution as was pointed out by Chief Justice Taney in Ableman v. Booth, 21 Howard 506. He said:

"But the supremacy thus conferred on this Government could not peacefully be maintained, unless it was clothed with judicial power, equally paramount in authority to carry it into execution; for if left to the courts of justice of the several States, conflicting decisions would unavoidably take place, and the local tribunals could hardly be expected to be always free from the local influences of which we have spoken. And the Constitution and laws and treaties of the United States, and the powers granted to the Federal Government, would soon receive different interpretations in different States, and the Government of the United States would soon become one thing in one State and another thing in another."

Federal district judges, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, have the same salary and hold office during good behavior. They frequently sit in States and districts far removed from their home districts. They are generally men of high character and wide experience, and have made a study of our Federal system. State judges, on the other hand, sit only in their home States and, frequently, only in their own counties; their terms of office and salaries vary; some are elected, some appointed, and some are subject to recall. Uniformity in their experience, capacity, legal learning, or judicial temperament is not to be expected.

D

The development of the sparsely settled portions of this country has been made possible by the investment of capital by security holders residing not alone in the more populous centers, such as Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, and San Francisco, but, and especially since the war, in every part of the country. Investments have been made, not alone in the securities of the great systems of railroads, but in industrial projects having plants, works, and mines in States other than those where the security holders themselves reside. Billions of both Eastern and Western capital have also been invested in Western banks, trust companies, mortgage companies, and have been loaned on farm mortgages, livestock, cotton, and crops of all kinds. When nonresident investors learn that they must in an emergency depend on the State courts to protect their interests the confidence which has for generations been based upon the security afforded by the right to resort to the Federal courts will be seriously impaired; and a serious blow will be directed at the financial structure which has been built up in a long course of years. And this blow will be reflected not alone in the contraction of investments and loans, but in the increase in the rates of interest, especially on farm mortgages.

E

1. The report of the Judiciary Committee recommending the passage of the Norris bill lays stress upon the jurisdictional limitation as to amount involved. That amount was originally $500 and has been changed by statute from time to time. There is ample power in Congress to change it again. The subject is irrelevant to a discussion of the highly important matter of emasculating the long-established jurisdiction vested in the Federal courts.

2. Another argument used by the committee in its report is embodied in the statement that a nonresident "is given a choice that the resident does not have"; that is, for example, that a resident of New York can go into the State of Pennsylvania and there sue in either the State court or the Federal court. But it is equally true that a resident of Pennsylvania can go into the State of New York, and he there has the choice as to which tribunal he will resort to. In other words, any so-called privilege is reciprocal.

3. The committee also says that "It is a practice becoming more or less common in many States for corporations to be incorporated in one State while they do business in another, and it is believed that this often occurs simply for the purpose of being able to have the choice of two tribunals in case of litigation."

If there are such cases, they do not occur with such frequency as to justify the drastic change proposed by the bill. In most cases the choice of a State in which to incorporate is dependent upon much more important considerations than the creation of a diversity of citizenship. What generally determines the place of incorporation is the taxation system of a State, the stock and bond structure permissible under its laws, and the general liberality, workability, and fairness of its corporation laws. Furthermore, in the case of railroad lines running through a dozen States, it is necessary that one of the States shall be selected as the place of incorporation, and it follows that the corporation can not avoid being a nonresident in all of the other 11 States. And the same is the case with a great industrial corporation like the United States Steel Corporation, which was incorporated in the State of New Jersey, but has plants and mines in probably a dozen other States, in which it or its subsidiary companies could resort to the Federal courts.

4. The committee asserts that corporations can "make litigation so expensive that their antagonists in the lawsuits frequently submit to unjust and unreasonable demands rather than go to the expense of litigating their rights in the United States courts."

Under the present practice an appeal may be taken to the circuit court of appeals, and thence to the Supreme Court, and in some cases (as in suits provided for in sec. 266) directly to that tribunal. The expense of this process would generally be far less than would be involved in the State courts, where, after a trial in the court at nisi prius, an appeal would perhaps lie to an intermediate appellate tribunal, thence to the highest court of the State, and thence by a writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States—a circuitous and expensive process.

F

In view of the foregoing considerations and the opposition which has been manifested to the provisions of Senate bill 3151, it would seem suitable that the bill be recommitted to the Judiciary Committee, in order that hearings may be had.

The bill (S. 1794) establishing additional land offices in the States of Montana, Oregon, Idaho, and South Dakota was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not object to the bill, but I shall be very glad to have the Senator explain it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the bill is before the Senate, I want to be heard.

Mr. BRUCE. I feel bound to object to the bill, though very reluctantly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator refer to 634, the bill to limit the jurisdiction of district courts of the United States?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has gone over under objection maintained by the Senator.

Mr. BRUCE. I saw the Senator from Nebraska on his feet.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I am about to speak on the bill, although another bill is technically before the Senate. I am entitled to five minutes on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to call Senators' attention to just what the bill does. Senators are objecting to it because they have received objections from attorneys. The bill, as introduced and as reported by the Judiciary Committee, took away from the district courts of the United States certain matters of jurisdiction. Among a number of things that it deprived the courts of jurisdiction over was jurisdiction of cases arising by reason of diverse citizenship. The objection comes, I conceive, mostly from that ground, but there are other objections, because it includes other things of which it deprives the courts of jurisdiction.

All my amendment would do would be to restore the bill to such form as to relieve it of all points except that one, so that anyone objecting to the bill certainly can not object to the amendment because it narrows its scope. I realize the objection would have still been made, but I wanted to put it in such shape that it would be confined to one thing alone. If the amendment was agreed to, the only thing it would apply to would be to diverse citizenship, and the only thing that it would eliminate from the law would be the following words:

Is between citizens of different States,

I want Senators to know just exactly what the bill does, and then they can understand what is attempted by the bill. I am not expecting the bill to pass to-night; but I wanted to have it so thoroughly understood that there would not be any further controversy, at least, as to what the bill did.

These are the words that this bill would take out of the present statute:

Is between citizens of different States,

That is all. Those words would be eliminated and the statute would be just the same as it is now. The amendment would narrow it down to those words; and I can not possibly see how anyone who objects to the bill would possibly object to the amendment, because it makes it nearer the present law than it is now.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. DALE. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska a question?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. DALE. In connection with that bill, if an insurance company had a great many cases, as they do have in all the States of the Union, would they not be excluded from the Federal courts and be compelled to bring their cases in each separate State?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; an insurance company incorporated in the State of Vermont, which took out a policy in the State of Nebraska, under the laws of Nebraska, and did business in Nebraska, would have to go into the Nebraska courts to settle its controversies. That is what would happen. There is not anybody that I know of that objects to the bill except insurance companies, railroad companies, and large corporations who want to go into a State and do business under its laws, but refuse to go into its courts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont having yielded the floor, and the time of the Senator from Nebraska having already expired——

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask that the colloquy we have had to-night be printed at one place in the RECORD. The other day the Senator from Nebraska and I had a running colloquy all the afternoon, and I think I have had a hundred letters with reference to it. This is an important matter. I include in my request that the amendment suggested by the Senator from Nebraska be printed in the RECORD, so that all the information may be there for the benefit of our various constituents, because we shall have hundreds of letters about this matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The amendment proposed by Mr. NORRIS is as follows:

On page 1, line 4, after the figures "41" and the comma, insert "title 28," and on the same page, line 8, after the word "sue," strike out the period and insert a comma and the following words:

or between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants from different States; or where the matter in controversy exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value of $3,000, and (a) arises under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority, or (b) is between citizens of a State and foreign States, citizens, or subjects. No district court shall have cognizance of any suit (except upon foreign bills of exchange) to recover upon any promissory note or other chose in action in favor of any assignee, or of any subsequent holder if such instrument be payable to bearer and be not made by any corporation, unless such suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover upon said note or other chose in action if no assignment had been made. The foregoing provision as to the sum or value of the matter in controversy shall not be construed to apply to any of the cases mentioned in the succeeding paragraphs of this section.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I simply want to ask the Senator a question. As I understand, this does away with the jurisdiction of the district courts based on diversity of citizenship.

Mr. NORRIS. That is all it does.

Mr. BRUCE. Then, that makes it, to me, insuperably objectionable.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly. I am not trying to controvert that. I want to confine it to that. The amendment does not affect that. That is still left. I expect that the Senator will oppose it, and a good many other Senators who will be moved by those who like to go into a State and do business under the laws of that State, but who will not submit themselves to the courts of that State, who want to drag the citizens of the State into the Federal court and make their litigation expensive, and thus wear them out, even though they may have a good defense, with expensive litigation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will restate the next bill on the calendar.

ADDITIONAL LAND OFFICES IN MONTANA, OREGON, IDAHO, AND SOUTH DAKOTA

The bill (S. 1794) establishing additional land offices in the States of Montana, Oregon, Idaho, and South Dakota was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill was considered on April 13 and amended.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. CUTTING] proposed an amendment to this bill yesterday. He had it printed. It is lying on the table. During his absence I propose that amendment on his behalf.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, after line 17, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 8. That an additional land district is hereby created in the State of New Mexico to embrace lands described as follows:

Beginning at the southeast corner of the State of New Mexico and running thence north on the east line of said State to the base line of the public-land survey in said State; thence west on said line to the range line between ranges 8 and 9 east; thence south on said range line to the first standard parallel south; thence west on said line to the range line between ranges 8 and 9 east; thence south on said line to the second standard parallel south; thence west on said line to the range line between ranges 8 and 9 east; thence south on said line to the third standard parallel south; thence east on said line to the range line between ranges 8 and 9 east; thence south on said line to the south line of the State of New Mexico; thence east on said line to the point of beginning, and that Roswell, within said district, is hereby designated as the site for the land office thereof.

On page 4, line 5, after "Idaho," insert "New Mexico."

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if this bill is restoring land offices that have heretofore been abolished by the department as not necessary?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That, I may say, is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. JONES. Do these amendments contemplate restoring all those that are abolished?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No. In my State there were 10, and every one of them was abolished but 2, and the bill contemplates the restoration of 4 of them.

Mr. JONES. Making six in all?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Six instead of 10.

Mr. JONES. I think this bill should go over.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. This bill has heretofore passed the Senate, and was discussed at some considerable length. A very grievous wrong was done, in the judgment of every member of the committee which had this matter under consideration, by this sweeping law. The result is that homesteaders in the State of Montana are obliged now to travel a distance of 500 miles in order to do business at the land office, a distance greater than from this city to the city of Boston.

Mr. JONES. If this were confined to the State of Montana, I do not think I should object to it. I know something about the distances out in our country. We have one land office in the State of Washington, and people travel about 350 miles where they have to travel; but, according to the department, it is not necessary for them to go to the place where the land office is.

As I said to the Senator, if this were confined to the State of Montana, which I know is a State of very great size, I do not think I should object to it; but it seems to be covering and really providing for the restoration of a great many of these offices that the department, after very careful investigation, found were not necessary, and their abolition was in the interest of economy. It is their contention that it does not affect the efficiency of the service.

I want to say, further, that we objected very strenuously in our State to the abolition of all the offices except one. I have not had a single complaint from my State, however, since the offices were reduced to one—not one. Apparently, the service is going on just as satisfactorily as before.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ODDIE. Just a word on this matter. One of the most important land offices in the United States, located in Nevada, was abolished, and it is included in this bill.

Mr. JONES. I yield the floor.

Mr. BRATTON obtained the floor.

Mr. ODDIE. Will the Senator from New Mexico yield for just one second?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. ODDIE. One of the most important land offices in the country was in the State of Nevada. It was abolished by the department. The department made a serious and blundering error in abolishing that office. It was an uneconomic, a ridiculous, and unbusinesslike piece of business to abolish it. It has caused serious loss and inconvenience to a large number of our citizens, and nothing was gained by it.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senator is speaking in my time, and I am under the five-minute rule, I shall ask him to speak in his own time.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I beg the Senator's pardon. I was not conscious of the fact that he had the floor first.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. CUTTING] has just come into the Chamber. If I may have his attention for a moment, I shall state for his information that on his behalf I have just proposed the amendment reestablishing the land office formerly located at Roswell, N. Mex., and was about to explain for the information of the Senator from Washington that this office was discontinued by the department some time ago. I am told by my colleague that a representative of the department has made a careful survey of conditions, and recommends this amendment in the strongest language. People in the State of my colleague and myself necessarily travel immense distances to transact their business with the land office. Oil has been discovered in the southeastern part of the State, where much Government land is situated. Under the present situation many persons interested have to travel to the office situated at Las Cruces, which is a distance in some cases of I should say 200 to 250 miles. The department recommends a restoration of the office formerly located at Roswell. My colleague so informed me to-day. This is my colleague's amendment. I offered it during his absence.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, if I may say a word——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I agree with the statement of the Secretary of the Interior that the expense of administration of these lands can be reduced by the abolition of these offices. That is true enough; but the effect is to turn over the cost and expense of it to the homesteader who takes up the land, instead of its being borne by the General Government. That is the operation of this thing. As a matter of fact, it does not save one dollar to anybody.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do.

Mr. NORBECK. I call the attention of the Senator from Montana to the fact that some of these offices were self-supporting and putting a revenue in the Treasury, when they were abolished.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Undoubtedly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington maintain his objection?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I recognize the situation in Montana. I doubt the wisdom of establishing six offices there, especially in view of the experience in the State of Washington; but I know that the Senator knows the condition there even better than I do, and I know that he would not ask for the establishment of these offices if he did not think it was for the benefit of the settlers.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. We have abolished four now.

Mr. JONES. Yes; I know. Six is quite a good many. I will withdraw my objection under the circumstances, though I doubt the wisdom of it very much.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if we are going to have an additional number added to this bill, I shall object to its being considered.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. METCALF. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

HOWARD UNIVERSITY

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, in connection with Order of Business 680, House bill 279, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the minority views of the House Committee in reference to this bill. In addition thereto, I should like to call attention to Claflin College at Orangeburg, Allen University, and Benedict College at Columbia, and South Carolina State Normal, Industrial and Agricultural College, all of the State of South Carolina; and I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the minority views of the House committee will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MINORITY VIEWS

The one object of this bill is to give authority of law by which the Congress may continue to appropriate money from the Federal Treasury for the purpose of improving and maintaining Howard University for negroes, in the city of Washington.

THE SITUATION, PAST AND PRESENT

For nearly a half century the Congress has been annually appropriating to this institution in amounts ranging from $10,000 to more than $500,000. These appropriations have been pure gratuities. Howard is in no sense a Government institution. Again, all these appropriations have been illegal for the reason that no law authorizing them has ever been passed. In committee hearings January 27, 1926, Mr. CRAMTON, of Michigan, says, "We are not authorized to report items of appropriations that are not authorized by law." There is no need, however, for any argument to prove that all the $5,000,000 which the Congress has in the past years appropriated to this institution has been appropriated illegally. The present bill is an admission of that fact. Furthermore, when a point of order has been made against this item in the Interior Department appropriation bill, the Chairman has always sustained the point, and no proponent of the bill has ever questioned his decision.

THE QUESTION NOW INVOLVED

This bill simply proposes that we now legalize this policy which has been pursued regardless of law for so many years. Thus we would fasten this university upon the Federal Government for permanent support, and establish finally the governmental policy of sustaining one university for one race by Federal funds, while the hundreds and thousands of schools for that race and all other races are left to State, county, or municipal support, or to private philanthropy. Such a policy is unfair, unwise, and unjust. There are many other large colleges or universities for the education of the Negro race—Tuskegee of Alabama, Hampton of Virginia, Wilberforce of Ohio, Fiske of Tennessee, Southern and Straight of Louisiana, Clark and Spellman of Georgia, and many others. These are meeting the demands for the education of the Negro race in pretty well all sections of the country and are supported without Federal aid. Is it right that the friends and constituents of these institutions should now be taxed for the Federal funds to constantly enlarge and maintain this one university for one race in one locality? It is not a question of negro education, nor a question of the needs of education in any way. It is the question of permanently establishing this unsound paternalistic governmental policy.

THE NEED DOES NOT JUSTIFY IT

Throughout the North most of the colleges are open to students of both races. In the South every State maintains one or more institutions for higher education of negroes, and every State has a number of negro colleges maintained by church or private philanthropy. A Washington newspaper has just published a statement that there are 500 institutions for negro education above the high-school grades. In almost every Southern State there comes nearer being college room for all the negro pupils that are really prepared to enter college than for all of the white pupils that are thus prepared.

THE INCREASING DEMANDS OF HOWARD

In the committee hearings on January 27, 1926, Doctor Scott, secretary and treasurer of Howard, said:

"In addition to the $197,500 authorized by the last Congress for a gymnasium, armory, and athletic field, other dormitories for young men and young women must be provided to meet the needs of the rapidly growing student body. Adequate buildings must also be erected for schools of medicine, law, and religion. There is need for an administration building, so that the space now occupied by these offices may be released for classrooms for the collegiate department."

In the same hearings Doctor Durkee, then president of Howard, speaks of the $370,000 appropriated by Congress for a new medical building. Meantime we have been called on for $150,000 for a new dormitory, and the pending Interior bill calls for $180,000 for a new chemistry building. From the above quotation from Doctor Scott it would seem that these demands for new buildings are to continue and doubtless to enlarge indefinitely. The question now before the Congress is, Shall we by passing this bill commit the Government permanently to this program?

Are we to go on for ever appropriating Federal funds for the erection of new and costly buildings to meet the growing demands of this institution? No doubt it is fine for Howard to have all these good buildings and some $200,000 more each year for running expenses. Yet almost every Member of the Congress has in his own State or district some struggling college which is just as much in need of funds and buildings. Many a struggling college in our own districts, dependent on church or private philanthropy, would feel greatly enriched to receive just one gift as large as one of the annual amounts that this Congress is asked to give to Howard University. The demand of Howard for this year is $390,000. Hardly a Member of the House but can think of some worthy struggling college back in his home State that would be relieved of an unspeakable burden, and immensely promoted in usefulness by one gift of that amount. Then shall we go on from year to year making these large donations to one university for negroes in the city of Washington while the constituents of our home schools pay the taxes and struggle on in poverty with their own institutions? Some Members of this House have expressed a hesitancy as to their vote on this bill because of the answer they may have to make to their negro voters back home. It might be well for some to consider the answer to be made to their white constituents who are struggling so hard to maintain institutions for the education of their own young people.

The plea is made that Howard is a necessity for the purpose of preparing physicians, dentists, etc., for the service of the Negro race. In a very large part of the South that is not a necessity, because the white physicians and dentists do practice for the negroes, and the negroes seem to prefer them. But finally, if Howard must be supported for any reason, we submit that it should be done with District funds, just as other cities all over the Nation give large funds for great institutions of learning because of the advantages material and otherwise which such an institution brings to the town in which it is located.

B. G. LOWREY,
M. C. TARVER,
RENE L. DE ROUEN.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will withhold his objection, I wish that the Senate might find it in its heart to pass this bill. We have been beating the devil around the stump for a long time with these appropriations for Howard University.

Here is an establishment which is dedicated to the purpose of educating colored students. Here is a place where they have the facilities for those who are seeking education to go, with their own people in it; and we have always found ways of making the appropriation. If this bill were to pass, we could then, in an orderly and proper way, without subterfuge, make the appropriations which we are bound to make anyway.

I wish the Senator might find it in his heart to consent to the passage of this bill.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, if you will give the negro colleges in South Carolina the same amount of money I will agree to it. Otherwise I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, just a word. Has the Senator introduced a resolution or offered an amendment to the bill?

Mr. BLEASE. No; but when the bill comes up I am going to do it.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me suggest to the Senator that he present the amendment that he has in mind. I am not sure but that, so far as I am concerned, I should be glad to support the amendment.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I do not think there is a State in the American Union that has the same or better facilities for educating the colored people than South Carolina has. We pay a 3-mill constitutional tax for their free school education. Every man pays that tax. We have some of the very best colored institutions in this country.

One of them is maintained entirely by the State of South Carolina, with an appropriation of over $100,000 each year. If every State will do that there will be no necessity for the Government to have to pay for this institution. If you will give to the State colleges for colored people of my State what we are asked to give to this District of Columbia institution, I have no objection; but I shall never consent for my State to pay a 3-mill constitutional tax to educate these people, to which I do not object, and keep up these other institutions by State appropriations, and then sit here and vote to give away the money of my people to other States that do not do anything to try to help their colored people. We are educating ours. We are taking care of them, and we are keeping them in their places by that education.

As the Senator suggests, I will offer an amendment, and it will get two votes, probably—mine and his.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BLEASE. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask unanimous consent that Senate Report No. 672 may be printed as a part of the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report (No. 672) submitted by Mr. COUZENS, from the Committee on Education and Labor, on April 2, 1928, is as follows:

(Report to accompany H. R. 279)

Your Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred H. R. 279, a bill to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Howard University, in the District of Columbia," approved March 2, 1867, by authorizing Federal appropriations to aid in the construction, development, improvement, and maintenance of said university, having considered said bill reports favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

A bill similar to H. R. 279 was reported favorably by the Committee on Education and Labor in the last session of Congress.

Howard University was incorporated under the act of March 2, 1867. The first Federal appropriation for its aid was granted March 3, 1879. Since that date the Federal Government has made annual appropriations to assist the university. However, since the establishment of the Budget system items recommended by the Budget and approved by the Committee on Appropriations of the House have been subject to a point of order and invariably have been stricken out on the ground that such appropriations are not authorized by existing law. This bill would relieve that situation. Even after the items are stricken out in the House the Senate invariably reinserted them in the bill and they were approved in conference.

The university has an attendance of about 2,000 students, who are required to pay tuition and provide their own living expenses. The university has been thoroughly investigated by the college rating board of the Maryland and Middle States district and is rated in class A.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 8298) authorizing acquisition of a site for the farmers' produce market, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRUCE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 10885) to amend sections 23 and 24 of the general leasing act approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat L., 437), was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

MAY GORDON RODES AND OTHERS

The bill (S. 126) for the relief of May Gordon Rodes and Sara Louise Rodes, heirs at law of Tyree Rodes, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator who objected to the immediate consideration of this bill will withhold his objection for one moment. It will be observed that it is in behalf of the widow and daughter of the deceased; and it was through his genius and his patented rights that our Government during the Great War was saved something over $17,000,000.

It is true that the testimony, as the record shows, claimed upon the one side that a just allowance would be on the basis of $1 per thousand of lumber sawed through or by the patented method of the deceased, whereas others testified that the value would be, perhaps, considerably less; wherefore the committee, which held long and patient hearings, reached the conclusion that instead of $141,000, as claimed according to one side of the controversy, the claim should be allowed for $35,750.

I am saying this in the hope that as between now and the coming on of this case again, Senators who have objected to it may read the report prepared by the subcommittee, written by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER], and then agree that this just claim, as I think it is, should be recognized, and this bill passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2505) granting increase of pension under the general law to soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and their dependents, for disability incurred in service in line of duty, and authorizing that the records of the War and Navy Departments be accepted as to incurrence of a disability in service in line of duty, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I am not going to ask that this bill be taken up to-night, because it calls for quite a little explanation, and there are several changes to be made in it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 25) to declare the 11th day of November, celebrated and known as Armistice Day, a legal holiday, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1729) extending the classified civil service to include postmasters of the third class, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

MEDICAL RELIEF TO RETIRED OFFICERS AND MEN OF COAST GUARD

The bill (H. R. 11022) to extend medical and hospital relief to retired officers and enlisted men of the United States Coast Guard was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. JONES. Who objected?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The junior Senator from Utah.

Mr. JONES. Will the Senator withhold his objection for just a moment?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. JONES. I think if I read a brief extract from the report he will withdraw his objection.

The Secretary of the Treasury says this:

The officers and enlisted men of the Coast Guard while on active duty receive medical attention and hospitalization from the Public Health Service. However, as soon as an officer or enlisted man is retired from active duty, either because of physical disability in line of duty or incident to service, or after having served the Government faithfully and honorably for the greater portion of his life, the Public Health Service is at present without the necessary legislative authority to extend him, in his retired status, the facilities of the marine hospitals or outpatient offices under the jurisdiction of that service. The bill, if enacted into law, will permit the extension to these retired officers and enlisted men of a privilege to which they are justly entitled, a right analogous to that accorded to retired officers and enlisted men of the Navy at naval hospitals and dispensaries. There is a pressing need for this proposed legislation, and the department urges its passage as a meritorious measure.

I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. KING. I will state what has been my objection to this bill. It will be the opening wedge, as I see it, and give the same advantages to every employee of the Government. If the Coast Guard can be differentiated from all other employees of the Government and put in the same category with officers of the Army and the Navy and the Marines, there might be some excuse for it.

Mr. JONES. The Senator knows that when there is a war the Coast Guard goes into the Navy.

Mr. KING. That is true; yet I can see but little difference between the Coast Guard employees and those engaged in the Customs Service, because most of the work of the Coast Guard relates to the enforcement of prohibition or the prevention of smuggling. The activities are rather those of civil-service employees of the Government.

Mr. JONES. No; before the acts to which the Senator has referred were passed we had the Coast Guard, and its work was largely in rescuing people in danger, especially at sea. It is a very dangerous occupation. Now, under the law, when we get into war, it automatically goes into the Navy.

Mr. KING. Yes; I know that.

Mr. JONES. It seems to me the Senator will be justified in withholding his objection to this bill. It has passed the House and is very strongly recommended by the Secretary.

Mr. KING. Is there a unanimous report?

Mr. JONES. There is a unanimous report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator maintain his objection?

Mr. KING. I withdraw the objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after the word "and," to insert the word "retired," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter retired officers and retired enlisted men of the United States Coast Guard shall be entitled to medical treatment at marine hospitals and out-patient offices of the Public Health Service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to extend medical and hospital relief to retired officers and retired enlisted men of the United States Coast Guard."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 742) to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PUBLIC PRINTER AND DEPUTY PUBLIC PRINTER

The bill (H. R. 6669) fixing the salary of the Public Printer and of the Deputy Public Printer, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the salary of the Public Printer shall be $10,000 per annum and the salary of the Deputy Public Printer shall be $7,500 per annum.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CROMWELL L. BARSLEY

The bill (H. R. 6152) for the relief of Cromwell L. Barsley was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 2, to strike out the words, "be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act," and to insert, "accrue or be allowed on account of the passage of this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Cromwell L. Barsley, who was a member of Company D, Fifth Regiment United States Volunteers, and Thirty-fourth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, and Company D, Nineteenth Regiment Infantry, United States Army, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company I, Nineteenth Regiment Infantry, United States Army, on the 23d day of December, 1907: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall accrue or be allowed on account of the passage of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to have an explanation in regard to this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator reporting the bill is not at the present time in the Chamber.

Mr. KING. Let it be passed over temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

Mr. STEPHENS rose.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I hope the Senator from Utah will not object to the bill. Was the Senator from Mississippi about to make an explanation?

Mr. STEPHENS. I was about to respond to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was just about to state that in the report of the major general with respect to this bill, really the report of the Secretary of War, I find that there was a court-martial in the case of this soldier, and he was dishonorably discharged from the service. If there are any reasons why he should be restored, I should be glad to withhold the objection.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, this soldier enlisted in 1899, and served loyally and faithfully in the Philippine campaign. He came back and reenlisted, and was sentenced to dishonorable discharge for the crime of stealing two turkeys.

Mr. STEPHENS. One turkey.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I myself never stole two turkeys, but I do not believe that is an essentially heinous crime that ought to offset the service of one who served with distinction in actual hostilities. The committee was unanimous in its belief that the sentence of dishonorable discharge was too severe. Surely, after this delay, the Senate would not be going too far to recognize the honorable service and overlook that offense.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I think the Senator has overlooked one little circumstance connected with the action of the committee in this case. It is true that this bill was reported favorably by the committee, but it was reported with an amendment. The committee was willing, in other words, that the sentence of dishonorable discharge should be canceled, but the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BLEASE], who is a member of the committee, informs me that the committee was unanimous in thinking that this soldier should not be allowed any back pay, pension, or pecuniary compensation of any sort.

The effect of the amendment is just that. In other words, the committee took the view that because of this soldier having been sentenced to imprisonment for nine months, and having been dishonorably discharged from the Army, as a matter of grace, as a matter of clemency, if his object is simply to have the record of his dishonorable discharge canceled, that should be done, but it was wholly unwilling that he should be allowed any back pay or any pension or any pecuniary compensation of any kind.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that the committee canceled the order of dishonorable discharge?

Mr. BRUCE. Yes; the bill does with this amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Did they find that the man was not amenable to punishment?

Mr. BRUCE. Oh, no. In view of his age, in view of the fact that he had been a soldier for some two years, and had been twice honorably discharged, the committee was willing, if the object of the man was really to establish his moral reputation, as well as it could be reestablished under the circumstances, that the bill should effect a cancellation of the sentence of discharge; but they thought that the man having been formally convicted of theft by a court-martial, and having been sentenced to imprisonment for nine months, and having served a term of imprisonment of six months, and having been dishonorably discharged from the Army, he should not be placed upon the same footing as an irreproachable soldier.

Mr. BORAH. If I had my way about it, I would give him his money.

Mr. BRUCE. That may be, but while the Senator——

Mr. SWANSON. I call for the regular order. This case was discussed for half an hour at the last call of the calendar.

Mr. BRUCE. I agree entirely with the committee. I am perfectly willing that this sentence of dishonorable discharge should be canceled, if that will afford any relief.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia demands the regular order, which is the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia will not object to the bill passing as it stands?

Mr. SWANSON. I am not objecting to its passage. This bill was discussed for half an hour, and interrupted the calendar. We will have Thursday night for bills of this kind, bills which are to be debated, and I will not consent to this bill taking up this entire session when it ought to come up on Thursday. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia objects, and the bill will be passed over.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If we will all agree to sit down without further discussion, will not the Senator withdraw his objection?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia withdraws his objection on condition that no further discussion ensue. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. BRUCE. I simply ask——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unanimous-consent agreement is violated, and the regular order will take place.

Mr. BLACK. May I make a request of the Senator from Virginia? Suppose we vote on this bill——

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection to voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Just a moment. We are not going to enter into unanimous-consent agreements to do something, and then have them violated within the next 30 seconds, as long as the present occupant of the chair is in the chair.

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection to voting. All I ask is the regular order. Let a Senator say whether he objects or does not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BRUCE. I have no objection at all to the amendment being disposed of, and to the bill being brought to a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When a bill comes up, a Senator is entitled to five minutes, if it comes up without objection.

Mr. SWANSON. I am willing to give the five minutes, but not an hour.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Question!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I inquire if this man's offense consisted only of stealing two turkeys; is that all?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is all.

Mr. NEELY. What is the personnel of the committee that decided that he should have been dishonorably discharged for stealing two turkeys?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The committee did not decide it; the court-martial decided it. The committee is trying to give him a position on the records of the Army substantially equal to an honorable discharge. He deserves it for service in the Spanish War and the Philippine campaign, and we who now discuss it are in substance denying him that relief.

Mr. BRUCE. He was in the Army for only about two years. There is no evidence that he was a brave soldier and, as far as I know, no evidence that he was ever in action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This time is being charged to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1995) placing certain employees of the Bureau of Prohibition in the classified civil service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

NATIONAL GUARD STATE STAFF OFFICERS

The bill (H. R. 239) to amend section 110 of the national defense act by repealing and striking therefrom certain provisions prescribing additional qualifications for National Guard

State staff officers, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, that bill has been agreed upon by the adjutants general of the National Guard. It simply puts the staff officers of the guard on the same basis as the staff officers of the Regular Army. It allows them the same privileges and fixes the same qualifications as are fixed for staff officers of the Regulars. I hope there will be no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator maintain his objection?

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following provisions, to wit, "nor to any State, Territory, or District, or officer or enlisted man in the National Guard thereof, unless and until such State, Territory, or District provides by law that staff officers, including officers of the finance, inspection, quartermaster, and medical departments hereafter appointed shall have had previous military experience and shall hold their positions until they shall have reached the age of 64 years, unless retired prior to that time by reason of resignation, disability, or for causes to be determined by a court-martial legally convened for that purpose, and that vacancies among said officers shall be filled by appointment from the militia of such State, Territory, or District," contained in the last paragraph of section 110 of the national defense act as amended by the act approved September 22, 1922 (42 Stat. L. 1036), be, and the same are hereby, repealed and stricken therefrom, so that said paragraph when so amended will read as follows:

"Except as otherwise specifically provided herein no money appropriated under the provisions of this or the last preceding section shall be paid to any person not on the active list, nor to any person over 64 years of age, nor to any person who shall fail to qualify as to fitness for military service under such regulations as the Secretary of War shall prescribe."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRACTICE OF HEALING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 3936) to regulate the practice of the healing art to protect the public health in the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask who objected to this bill?

Mr. NORRIS. I thought the Senator from New York objected.

Mr. COPELAND. No; I did not object. Does anyone object?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thought some Senator objected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will not the Senator explain the bill?

Mr. COPELAND. This bill has occupied the attention of the committee on the District of Columbia for two years, and after great tribulation we have an agreement with all the various systems and cults of practice in this city. The bill provides that every applicant shall apply to a commission, and then go before a basic science committee for an examination in the fundamentals of medicine. Then, if qualified by that basic science committee, the applicant goes before a committee of his own school of practice; and then, if he passes, he gets a license to practice in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CARAWAY. I would like to ask a question as to the nature of this examination by the basic science committee.

Mr. COPELAND. They examine in anatomy, bacteriology, chemistry—the fundamental subjects.

Mr. CARAWAY. If they want to practice the healing art, they must pass that examination whether they are going to be chiropractors or——

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Are dentists included?

Mr. COPELAND. No; it relates only to practitioners of some branch of medicine.

Mr. CARAWAY. How about undertakers?

Mr. COPELAND. Undertakers are exempt.

Mr. CARAWAY. They ought not to be.

Mr. BRUCE. May I call the attention of the Senator from New York to the fact that I have offered two amendments to this bill relating to chiropractors? The chiropractors of Maryland and other States in the Union think that this bill prescribes no proper standard at all for the qualifications of chiropractic. The chiropractors in the city of Washington accept the bill as it stands; but, so far as I know, it is not the case with the members of that profession anywhere else in the United States. I have offered amendments calculated to create real standards of professional proficiency, and with those amendments I have no objection to the bill.

CROMWELL L. BARSLEY

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I endeavored a few moments ago to get the floor with reference to the bill of the young man who was charged with stealing the turkeys. I think it is not right that that bill should be further held up. This young man served between five and six years as an honorable soldier. He served in the Philippine Islands. He was arrested and charged with the crime of stealing two turkeys from his own company. If every soldier who ever stole a turkey had served nine months in prison and been dishonorably discharged, and had that held up against him for the remainder of his life, there would not be many of them left to serve in the Army.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator was a soldier himself, was he not?

Mr. BLACK. I was a soldier for about two years.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Did the Senator ever know of a soldier who would not steal anything to eat when he was hungry?

Mr. BLACK. If he did not, he would be a very unusual soldier.

Mr. BRUCE. I have never had any conception that standards of conduct in the Army were so low.

Mr. NEELY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I do not yield at all. This turkey matter has been a subject of talk here on this floor, and we have talked about it until one would think the man had committed burglary and grand larceny and murder and robbery and every other crime in the decalogue. As a matter of fact, I am opposed to the committee amendment, although I am a member of the committee. I do not believe that we should deprive this man, after all these years, of anything that might be coming to him in the way of pension or compensation. I think we ought to go back and take up this bill. I think if we do not, we ought to have some more discussion of it. Is it such an awful thing for a soldier to steal a turkey that we have to hold up our hands in holy horror for the remainder of his life—and stealing a turkey from his own company? It was probably just a question whether he would steal it or the company cook would steal it. It was a turkey that belonged to his own company, and here we take the time of the Senate from time to time and object and object to giving a man that which he ought to have when he served between five and six years honorably in the Army as a soldier, fought for this country, risked his life, and now we hold up this price of a turkey and say it is so great and that we have not time to pass on his case, and that we will not give him that which he ought to have after all these years have passed by.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland is now speaking on Calendar No. 768, to regulate the practice of the healing art in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLACK. That is what I spoke on, Mr. President.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I want to say that the very mild view that the Senator from Alabama takes of theft reminds me of a thing that happened in my boyhood in southside, Virginia. A colored man came back from church, and somebody asked him what sort of a sermon had been delivered. He said, "A very good sermon, except a reference to chicken stealing brought a sort of coolness over the meeting." The Senator seems to take the same lenient view of theft that the old colored acquaintance of mine did.

Who is to be the judge of what constitutes crime on the part of a soldier, pray? To what tribunal is that question left by the law? It is left to the superior officers of the soldier.

In this case it was a court-martial, and that court-martial determined that under all the circumstances of the case, many of which, of course, can not well be brought to our attention, that soldier had been guilty of a heinous offense, and the sentence of the court-martial was that he should be imprisoned for nine months and that he should be dishonorably discharged from the Army. That was the result. No matter what effort may be made to belittle the importance of this offense, that was the conclusion reached by that court-martial in the deliberate discharge of its duty.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. BRUCE. If the Senator is speaking on another bill, and not speaking in my time——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator must be speaking in the time of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BRUCE. I am sorry, I can not yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland declines to yield.

Mr. BRUCE. I am compelled to decline to yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I want to ask a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland declines to yield.

Mr. BRUCE. There is no evidence, so far as I know, that the soldier had ever been in action.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I want to ask a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. BRUCE. There is no evidence that this soldier was a soldier of exemplary character in any respect. It is fair to infer that in all probability he had a very poor general reputation, because we can almost see that by reading between the lines. But, be that as it may, the fact was that the court-martial came to the conclusion that he had been guilty of theft, and that he had been guilty of theft under circumstances sufficiently heinous to justify them in sentencing him to prison for nine months and having him discharged dishonorably from the Army.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Maryland has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, I am not going to take much time. I merely desire to say——

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent that next Thursday, when we meet for the consideration of contested bills, the first bill that shall be taken up promptly at 8 o'clock and disposed of by 8.20, granting 10 minutes to each side, shall be this turkey bill. [Laughter.] I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

Mr. BRATTON and Mr. JONES. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, I am going to say just a word or two.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. STEPHENS. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. We have a unanimous-consent agreement to take up the calendar under Rule VIII Thursday night. When this bill is reached that night, if there is objection, a motion can be made to proceed to its consideration.

Mr. STEPHENS. Pardon me just a moment, anyway.

Mr. CURTIS. I do hope that Senators will let us complete the call of the calendar for unobjected bills to-night. If we put in all our time discussing one or two bills there will be no others passed. I think Senators ought to let the bill go over because there is objection to it.

Mr. STEPHENS. I am going to say just a word or two.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor.

Mr. BRUCE. I object. If we are going to discuss the bill under Rule VIII Thursday night, I object to discussing it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor in his own right and it can not be denied him.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, before I say what I rose to say, I desire to state in answer to the Senator from Kansas that I have been here five years and I have never objected to the consideration of any Senator's bill. I have not occupied much of the time of the Senate on private bills or other bills.

I rose to say, in answer to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE], when he spoke of the character of that man, that if the Senator would go down to the city of Vicksburg, where that poor fellow, weak and feeble and almost unable to walk the streets of the city, now lives, he would find that the best people of that community are the friends of this man.

He would find that Cromwell L. Barsley stands as high in his own community as the Senator from Maryland does in his. I rose, Mr. President, merely to repudiate the statement or the charge or suggestion that this is a man of poor reputation, a man of bad character. I hope we will discuss the matter further at another time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

PRACTICE OF HEALING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will restate Order of Business No. 768.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 3936) to regulate the practice of the healing art to protect the public health in the District of Columbia.

Mr. DILL. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] to object to the bill?

Mr. BRUCE. I have no objection if the amendment is adopted. So far as I know there is no objection to it.

Mr. DILL. I objected.

Mr. COPELAND. Will not the Senator let us consider it?

Mr. DILL. Not to-night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

LIABILITY IN BREACHES OF FIDUCIARY OBLIGATIONS

The bill (H. R. 6844) concerning liability for participation in breaches of fiduciary obligations and to make uniform the law with reference thereto was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following provisions concerning liability for participation in breaches of fiduciary obligations, and to make uniform the law with reference thereto, shall be in force in the District of Columbia, namely:

"SECTION 1. Definition of terms: (1) In this act unless the context or subject matter otherwise requires:

"'Bank' includes any person or association of persons, whether incorporated or not, carrying on the business of banking.

"'Fiduciary' includes a trustee under any trust, expressed, implied, resulting or constructive, executor, administrator, guardian, conservator, curator, receiver, trustee in bankruptcy, assignee for the benefit of creditors, partner, agent, officer of a corporation, public or private, public officer, or any other person acting in a fiduciary capacity for any person, trust, or estate.

"'Person' includes a corporation, partnership, or other association, or two or more persons having a joint or common interest.

"'Principal' includes any person to whom a fiduciary as such owes an obligation.

"(2) A thing is done 'in good faith' within the meaning of this act when it is in fact done honestly, whether it be done negligently or not.

"SEC. 2. Application of payments made to fiduciaries: A person who in good faith pays or transfers to a fiduciary any money or other property which the fiduciary as such is authorized to receive, is not responsible for the proper application thereof by the fiduciary; and any right or title acquired from the fiduciary in consideration of such payment or transfer is not invalid in consequence of a misapplication by the fiduciary.

"SEC. 3. Registration of transfer of securities held by fiduciaries: If a fiduciary in whose name are registered any shares of stock, bonds, or other securities of any corporation, public or private, or company or other association or of any trust, transfers the same, such corporation or company or other association, or any of the managers of the trust, or its or their transfer agent, is not bound to inquire whether the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in making the transfer, or to see to the performance of the fiduciary obligation, and is liable for registering such transfer only where registration of the transfer is made with actual knowledge that the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in making the transfer, or with knowledge of such facts that the action in registering the transfer amounts to bad faith.

"SEC. 4. Transfer of negotiable instrument by fiduciary: If any negotiable instrument payable or indorsed to a fiduciary as such is indorsed by the fiduciary, or if any negotiable instrument payable or indorsed to his principal is indorsed by a fiduciary empowered to indorse such instrument on behalf of his principal, the indorsee is not bound to inquire whether the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in indorsing or delivering the instrument, and is not chargeable with notice that the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary unless he takes the instrument with actual knowledge of such breach or with knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounts to bad faith. If, however, such instrument is transferred by the fiduciary in payment of or as security for a personal debt of the fiduciary to the actual knowledge of the creditor, or is transferred in any transaction known by the transferee to be for the personal benefit of the fiduciary, the creditor or other transferee is liable to the principal if the fiduciary in fact commits a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in transferring the instrument.

"SEC. 5. Check drawn by fiduciary payable to third person: If a check or other bill of exchange is drawn by a fiduciary as such, or in the name of his principal by a fiduciary empowered to draw such instrument in the name of his principal, the payee is not bound to inquire whether the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in drawing or delivering the instrument, and is not chargeable with notice that the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary unless he takes the instrument with actual knowledge of such breach or with knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounts to bad faith. If, however, such instrument is payable to a personal creditor of the fiduciary and delivered to the creditor in payment of or as security for a personal debt of the fiduciary to the actual knowledge of the creditor, or is drawn and delivered in any transaction known by the payee to be for the personal benefit of the fiduciary, the creditor or other payee is liable to the principal if the fiduciary in fact commits a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in drawing or delivering the instrument.

"SEC. 6. Check drawn by and payable to fiduciary: If a check or other bill of exchange is drawn by a fiduciary as such or in the name of his principal by a fiduciary empowered to draw such instrument in the name of his principal, payable to the fiduciary personally, or payable to a third person and by him transferred to the fiduciary, and is thereafter transferred by the fiduciary, whether in payment of a personal debt of the fiduciary or otherwise, the transferee is not bound to inquire whether the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in transferring the instrument, and is not chargeable with notice that the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary unless he takes the instrument with actual knowledge of such breach or with knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounts to bad faith.

"SEC. 7. Deposit in name of fiduciary as such: If a deposit is made in a bank to the credit of a fiduciary as such, the bank is authorized to pay the amount of the deposit or any part thereof upon the check of the fiduciary, signed with the name in which such deposit is entered, without being liable to the principal, unless the bank pays the check with actual knowledge that the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in drawing the check or with knowledge of such facts that its action in paying the check amounts to bad faith. If, however, such a check is payable to the drawee bank and is delivered to it in payment of or as security for a personal debt of the fiduciary to it, the bank is liable to the principal if the fiduciary in fact commits a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in drawing or delivering the check.

"SEC. 8. Deposit in name of principal: If a check is drawn upon the account of his principal in a bank by a fiduciary who is empowered to draw checks upon his principal's account, the bank is authorized to pay such check without being liable to the principal, unless the bank pays the check with actual knowledge that the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in drawing such check, or with knowledge of such facts that its action in paying the check amounts to bad faith. If, however, such a check is payable to the drawee bank and is delivered to it in payment of or as security for a personal debt of the fiduciary to it, the bank is liable to the principal if the fiduciary in fact commits a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in drawing or delivering the check.

"SEC. 9. Deposit in fiduciary's personal account: If a fiduciary makes a deposit in a bank to his personal credit of checks drawn by him upon an account in his own name as fiduciary, or of checks payable to him as fiduciary, or of checks drawn by him upon an account in the name of his principal if he is empowered to draw checks thereon, or of checks payable to his principal and indorsed by him, if he is empowered to indorse such checks, or if he otherwise makes a deposit of funds held by him as fiduciary, the bank receiving such deposit is not bound to inquire whether the fiduciary is committing thereby a breach of his obligation as fiduciary; and the bank is authorized to pay the amount of the deposit or any part thereof upon the personal check of the fiduciary without being liable to the principal, unless the bank receives the deposit or pays the check with actual knowledge that the fiduciary is committing a breach of his obligation as fiduciary in making such deposit or in drawing such check, or with knowledge of such facts that its action in receiving the deposit or paying the check amounts to bad faith.

"SEC. 10. Deposit in names of two or more trustees: When a deposit is made in a bank in the name of two or more persons as trustees and a check is drawn upon the trust account by any trustee or trustees authorized by the other trustee or trustees to draw checks upon the trust account, neither the payee nor other holder nor the bank is bound to inquire whether it is a breach of trust to authorize such trustee or trustees to draw checks upon the trust account, and is not liable unless the circumstances be such that the action of the payee or other holder or the bank amounts to bad faith.

PAYMENT OF BANK DEPOSITS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (H. R. 6856) relating to the payment or delivery by banks or other persons or institutions in the District of Columbia of deposits of money and property held in the names of two or more persons, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when a deposit shall have been made or shall hereafter be made in, or any collection item shall have been placed or shall hereafter be placed with, any bank, trust company, savings bank, building association, or other banking institution including national banks, transacting business in the District of Columbia, or when any shares of stock shall have been issued or shall hereafter be issued by any building association, transacting business in the District of Columbia, in the names of two or more persons, including husband and wife, payable to either, or payable to either or the survivor or survivors, such deposit, or in any part thereof, or any interest or dividend thereon, and such collection item or its proceeds, or any interest or dividend thereon, or such shares of stock issued by a building association or any interest or dividend thereon, may be paid or delivered to either of said persons whether the other or others be living or not; and the receipt or acquittance of the person to whom such payment or delivery is made shall be a valid, sufficient, and complete release and discharge of the bank, trust company, savings bank, building association, or other banking institution, including national banks, for any payment or delivery so made.

SEC. 2. That when a safety deposit box or vault shall have been hired or shall hereafter be hired from any bank, trust company, savings bank, building association, or other banking institution, including national banks, or any other corporation, transacting business in the District of Columbia, in the names of two or more persons, including husband and wife, with the right of access being given to either, or with access to either or the survivor or survivors of said persons, or property is held for safe-keeping by any such bank, trust company, savings bank, building association or other corporation or banking institution, including national banks, for two or more persons, including husband and wife, with the right of delivery being given to either, or with the right of delivery to either or the survivor or survivors of said persons, any one or more of such persons, whether the other or others be living or not, shall have the right of access to such safety deposit box or vault and to remove the contents thereof, or any part of such contents, or to have delivered to him or them, the property so held for safe-keeping, or any part thereof, and in case of such removal or delivery the said bank, trust company, savings bank, building association, or other corporation or banking institution, including national banks, shall be exempt from any liability for permitting such access or removal or for the delivery to such person or persons.

SEC. 3. Whenever a writ of attachment shall be served on any bank, trust company, savings bank, or other banking institution, including national banks, or on any other corporation, association, or person as garnishee, and such garnishee holds a credit or property for two or more persons, including the person whose credit or property is sought to be attached, or holds a credit or property for any person as agent or trustee or in any other representative capacity without designation of the principal or beneficiary, such credit or property shall not be subject to withdrawal by any person, but shall be held by the garnishee until the attachment shall have been dismissed or otherwise disposed of by the court. If the credit or property is condemned, payment or delivery thereof as ordered by the court shall be a complete discharge of the garnished from all liability to any person in respect of said credit or property. The provisions of this section shall not be construed to apply to a credit or property of a partnership.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SURVEY FOR NICARAGUAN CANAL

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) authorizing an investigation and survey for a Nicaraguan canal was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection just a moment? I want to make a brief statement.

Mr. KING. I am familiar with it, and I am opposed to the proposition entirely.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Regular order!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. EDGE. I still think the Senator should be courteous enough to allow me to make a statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey is speaking on the next bill, Calendar 791, Senate bill 2097, the regular order having been demanded.

Mr. EDGE. I am not averse to speaking on it if I am allowed to make the statement which I would like to make.

Calendar 785, Senate Joint Resolution 117, is a joint resolution which, in my judgment, is very important and should be disposed of at this session. It does not commit the Government to any constructive engineering work in the slightest degree. It simply provides for the accumulation of information which must necessarily be accumulated either this year or next year or some other year before we can consider what is definitely known to be a proposition we must consider, to wit, the enlargement of the Panama Canal or the building of another canal.

Just why any Member of the Senate or Congress would object to securing the information, which is absolutely essential, is beyond my understanding. We are not committing ourselves to the building of any canal. We are simply endeavoring to find out what is necessary from an engineering standpoint if we meet the commercial obligation which the enlarged business of the Panama Canal suggests we must meet.

It is information that sooner or later we must procure. Just why we should not permit the engineering board of the War Department to attempt to bring down to date a survey which was made some 25 years ago, and give us the information necessary to decide as business men whether we will enlarge the Panama Canal or whether we will build another canal, I repeat, is beyond my understanding.

I can not understand why we should be denied that information. We must get it and can get it in only one way, and that is to investigate. We do not commit ourselves to a single constructive act. We simply say to the War Department, "Use your Corps of Engineers, investigate the Panama Canal, investigate the possibility of a Nicaraguan canal for which we have spent $3,000,000 to have the privilege of using if we want it, and report back to Congress whether either of them is advisable from a professional engineering standpoint." That is all the resolution provides. I can not understand why Congress would not want to get the information. We can not get it in any other possible manner.

I wish to announce that on Thursday night I shall move to bring this measure before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Jersey a question?

Mr. EDGE. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will not be here Thursday night. I am leaving the city to-night. As I understand it, the Senator is willing to present my amendments and accept them so far as he can.

Mr. EDGE. I am entirely prepared to accept the amendments which have been presented by the Senator from Tennessee, which add to the resolution the authority that the President may negotiate with the countries of Costa Rica, Honduras, and Salvador in order to provide, if necessary, for certain private rights in order that if Congress decides to build a canal it can be done, and if Congress desires to do it we will then be in possession of the necessary information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from New Jersey has expired.

The bill (S. 2097) to provide for the protection of municipal watersheds within the national forests was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from New Jersey a question.

Mr. EDGE. I shall be glad to answer if I may be permitted to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in the time of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLAINE. I shall ask the question, and then grant the Senator from New Jersey the balance of my time in which to answer.

Mr. EDGE. I thank the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLAINE. How many additional marines will it be necessary to send to Nicaragua to protect the Americans who go down there to make the survey?

Mr. EDGE. I am very glad to have the three and one-half minutes to answer that question, if I may be permitted to do so without being called to order.

In my judgment, if the Government of the United States takes advantage of the Bryan-Chamorro treaty, for which we paid $3,000,000 in order to have a right of way across Nicaragua, and proceed in a businesslike way to get the information necessary, to ascertain whether the construction of a canal is feasible, is practical, or is advisable, it will be a type of diplomacy that perhaps will result very similarly to the type of diplomacy resulting when we constructed or completed the construction of the Panama Canal.

We have not had any difficulty with Colombia or Panama since we started and completed the Panama Canal. We seem to have a community of understanding and interest with Colombia and Panama. If we consider the construction, which is all the resolution contemplates, or the possibility of building a Nicaraguan canal, with Costa Rica, Honduras, and Salvador all interested in it and all interested in having it done, in my judgment, we will find a type of common sense and practical diplomacy which will solve a great many of our political problems that we have been worrying about a great deal here in the last few weeks.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to ask the Senator from New Jersey to give me back, out of the time which I gave him, sufficient time to ask him another question.

Mr. EDGE. I am glad to do so.

Mr. BLAINE. I assume the statement the Senator has just made is correct, that if the proper kind of diplomacy were employed in Nicaragua there would be no necessity for sending marines.

Mr. EDGE. I am not discussing the marines. I am discussing a practical, common sense, commercial proposition. We will find the situation in a very few years to be that the Panama Canal will not take care of our commerce and traffic. We must either increase the facilities of the Panama Canal or build another canal, which in ordinary common sense is a pretty good thing to do anyway.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. EDGE. I would like to have another Senator give me a moment. Will the Senator from Tennessee ask me a question and give me a moment?

Mr. SWANSON. I object. I demand the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The clerk will state the next bill on the calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3458) to create the reserve division of the War Department, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Over.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, the objections that have been made to the bill come from the inclusion of the reserve officers' training corps and citizens' military training camps.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1624) to authorize the payment of additional compensation to the assistants to the engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1625) to fix the salaries of the members of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1945) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes, approved July 11, 1916, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3554) to authorize the Public Health Service and the National Academy of Sciences to investigate the means and methods for affffording Federal aid in discovering a cure for cancer, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] asked me to request that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

UPPER MISSISSIPPI GAME REFUGE

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 200) to amend section 10 of the act entitled "An act to establish the upper Mississippi River wild life and fish refuge," approved June 7, 1924, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment. I will ask that the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. Amend by adding a new paragraph on page 2, after line 3, as follows:

Provided, however, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall not grant any exclusive privilege to any person for the trapping or taking of fur-bearing animals on any of the land purchased hereunder, nor shall he grant any privilege of trapping or taking of fur-bearing animals until the person to whom such privilege is granted shall first have complied with the laws relating to trapping of the State wherein the land is situated.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not press the amendment, not that there is anything wrong with it. I have had a letter from the Agricultural Department, to whom the amendment was referred, in which they state it is in line with their policy. But I am hopeful the amendment will not be agreed to, because the bill has to go back to the House, and I do not think they will take it in any other form than that in which they sent it here. I have not the letter with me; but if the Senator will withdraw the amendment, I will have the letter printed in the RECORD to-morrow.

Mr. BLAINE. I understand the Senator from South Dakota to say that the Department of Agriculture states in the letter to which he refers that the department has no objection to the policy proposed by the amendment, and that in the future the department will adhere to the policy proposed by the amendment, but that the department fears that if the amendment is pressed at this time and adopted, the Senate amendment going to the House for concurrence might defeat the legislation, and that it becomes important to them to have the additional right, as conferred by the measure under consideration, in order to increase the acreage of the Mississippi River wild life and fish refuges. I appreciate that such a letter has not the effect of law, but I assume and believe the department will in good faith hereafter refrain from issuing special privileges to special individuals. If the Senator will insert the letter in the RECORD, I wish it might be placed immediately following the discussion on the amendment which I have offered, so that there will be a continuity as to the bill, the amendment, and my remarks for future reference. Under those circumstances I shall be glad to comply with the request of the Senator from South Dakota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin withdraws his amendment, and without objection the joint resolution will be placed on its passage.

The joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 10 of the act entitled "An act to establish the upper Mississippi River wild life and fish refuge," approved June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. L. 650), as amended by joint resolution of March 4, 1925 (43 Stat. L. 1354), be, and the same is hereby, amended by substituting in lieu of the proviso therein contained the following: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall not pay for any land or land and water a price which shall exceed an average cost of $10 per acre: Provided further, That this provision shall not apply to any land or land and water heretofore acquired or contracted for under the provisions of this act."

Mr. NORBECK. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Secretary Jardine in support of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., May 7, 1928.

Hon. PETER NORBECK,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: Reference is made to your letter of May 4, transmitting copy of Senator BLAINE'S proposed amendment to H. J. Res. 200, amending section 10 of the act entitled "An act to establish the upper Mississippi River wild life and fish refuge," approved June 7, 1924.

Senator BLAINE'S amendment, proposed as a new paragraph, page 2, after line 3, is understood to read as follows:

"Provided, however, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall not grant any exclusive privilege to any person for the trapping or taking of fur-bearing animals on any of the land purchased hereunder, nor shall he grant any privilege of trapping or taking of fur-bearing animals until the person to whom such privilege is granted shall first have complied with the laws relating to trapping of the State wherein the land is situated."

We have no objection to this amendment in itself, as it contains nothing whatever that counters with what will be our policy in the administration of the upper Mississippi River wild life and fish refuge, but would appreciate it if the Senator would not press his amendment, as it would mean that the resolution would have to be referred back to the House and there might be some delay that would prevent favorable action on the resolution so near the end of the session, and it is extremely urgent that this resolution be approved by the Congress in order to enable us to proceed advantageously with our land-acquisition program.

You are, I think, already familiar with the reasons why it is so urgent that the average price limit be raised from $5 to $10 per acre. We have now reached the point in our purchase work where, unless the average limit is raised, our purchase work must practically come to an end, as the most of the lands within the lower-priced ranges have been purchased or are under purchase agreement.

Sincerely,

W. M. JARDINE, Secretary.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LATIN-AMERICAN HIGHWAY MATTERS

The bill (S. 1718) to authorize the President to detail engineers of the Bureau of Public Roads of the Department of Agriculture to assist the governments of the Latin-American Republics in highway matters, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] asked me to request that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

J. C. PEIXOTTO

The bill (S. 1433) for the relief of J. C. Peixotto was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission shall be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to waive the statute of limitations in the application filed by J. C. Peixotto, a former employee in the medical and utilities division of the War Department at Fort McPherson, Ga., the provision of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, in order that he may receive the same consideration as though he had applied within the specified time required by law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARKETING OF PERISHABLE AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

The bill (S. 1294) to suppress unfair and fraudulent practices in the marketing of perishable agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am sorry to object to this bill, I will say to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], but a number of my constituents are not in sympathy with the bill and I want to find out what is the ground of their objection. I do not intend to be disagreeable about it and keep it forever from being considered, but I would like to have it go over until I can do that.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that the amendments which have been proposed by those who are not favorable to the bill as it stands are now in process of being agreed upon and I presume we will make time by permitting the bill to go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1762) granting consent to the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Bay of San Francisco from Rincon Hill to a point near the South

Mole of San Antonio Estuary, in the county of Alameda, in said State, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ODDIE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 391) to regulate the use of the Capitol Building and Grounds was announced as next in order.

Mr. DILL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

LAKE CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE

The bill (H. R. 10643) authorizing the Gulf Coast Properties (Inc.), its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Lake Champlain at or near Rouses Point, N. Y., was announced as next in order.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from New York to this bill. There are some matters connected with it that were under consideration.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, is this the so-called bridge bill?

Mr. DALE. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. I am quite content to be recorded in the negative, without offering any further opposition.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS

The bill (H. R. 10159) granting pensions and increase of pensions to widows and former widows of certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from South Dakota whether this is a House bill or a Senate bill?

Mr. NORBECK. This is the House bill. It passed the House carrying a rate of $40 a month, made no change in the marriage date, but limited it to those who had reached the age of 75 years.

Mr. KING. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments proposed by the committee will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 2, line 1, before the word "years," to strike out "75" and insert "72."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 5, after the words "rate of," to strike out "$40" and insert "$50."

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah and I have an agreement that the rate of $50 will be cut to $40, to conform to the House bill. I therefore suggest that that amendment be rejected.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendments were, on page 2, line 12, before the word "month," to strike out "next," and in the same line, after the word "month," to insert "next."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? Did the committee give consideration to the proposal to change the marriage date?

Mr. NORBECK. Yes. I will say that the present marriage date is approximately 40 years after the close of the war. For 20 years or 23 years the question of changing the date has been before the committee regularly; and every committee, as far as I know, has held consistently to the idea that it should not be changed. There are bills introduced at every session to bring it up to date. It has been contended by some that a woman who married a soldier 60 years after the war ended should be given a pension of $50 a month; but the committee does not agree to that.

Mr. JONES. That is not the contention generally. Of course, these widows might desire a pension of $50 a month, but there are mighty few of them who get it under the law as it is now. It is contended by many, however, that those who marry a soldier who may be 75 or 80 years of age—that happens sometimes, and I think very properly—to take care of him, to look after him, are entitled to some consideration. I wanted to find out whether or not the committee had given that proposition careful consideration, and had come to the conclusion not to make the change.

Mr. NORBECK. I think the committee was unanimous against those changes.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. The senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] stated on the floor of the Senate the other day that the widow of one of the Presidents of the United States was not paid any pension because she married him after he was President of the United States. Are we paying pensions to widows of soldiers who married these soldiers after the war?

Mr. NORBECK. Yes; but we are holding down the limit.

Mr. BLEASE. Then I object to the bill, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. NORBECK. I desire to give notice of my intention to move to take up this bill on Thursday evening.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2475) to create a prosperity reserve and to stabilize industry and employment by the expansion of public works during periods of unemployment and industrial depression was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, that bill will take some time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3845) to prohibit predictions with respect to cotton or grain prices in any report, bulletin, or other publication issued by any department or other establishment in the executive branch of the Government, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 11074) to promote the agriculture of the United States by expanding in the foreign field the service now rendered by the United States Department of Agriculture in acquiring and diffusing useful information regarding agriculture, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

EMPLOYMENT OF MINORS WITHIN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (H. R. 6685) to regulate the employment of minors within the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let that go over.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, was objection raised to House bill 6685?

Mr. KING. Yes; the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] objected.

Mr. CAPPER. I wish the Senator would withhold his objection until I can state, just in a minute or two, that there is no measure on this calendar affecting the District of Columbia for which there is more universal support than this measure, known as the child labor bill. Every civic organization in the city, the District Commissioners, the Board of Public Welfare, the Board of Education, the Central Labor Union, all the commercial and trade organizations in the city, were represented at the hearing before the Committee on the District of Columbia, and urged the passage of this measure.

The present child labor law is much below the standards of all the States. It was passed over 20 years ago. In that time there have been very great changes in the child-labor legislation of the country, and the District of Columbia is out of line with the progressive legislation of all the States.

I hope, therefore, that the Senator who offered the objection will withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida maintain his objection?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like an opportunity to look into the bill. My understanding was that we had a very good child labor law in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAPPER. We have not, Mr. President.

Mr. McNARY. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 814) to rearrange and reconstruct the Senate wing of the Capitol was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3089) to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

WILLIAM H. CHAMBLISS

The bill (S. 2274) for the relief of William H. Chambliss was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will not the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. KING. I will withhold it.

Mr. EDGE. This is the first time this bill has been reached. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] is the chairman of the subcommittee of the Claims Committee which considered it. The bill is simply proposing a compromise settlement for a captain in the merchant marine who unquestionably, and without any voice raised against his claim, is entitled to payment for having been held up by the Shipping Board for 10 or 12 years with his license to act as a master or captain, and not being permitted to take out a ship. Having accumulated back salary, as I recall, in the neighborhood of $30,000 or $40,000, after careful review and investigation of the circumstances, the committee made a unanimous report to pay him $10,000.

I should be very glad if the Senator from Alabama, who has given a great deal of time to this matter as the chairman of the subcommittee, would give any further explanation that the Senator from Utah might desire.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have read the report very carefully. There are probably some appealing reasons for some relief. There is a contradiction of testimony. A full examination was made by the Shipping Board after this beneficiary returned to the United States, and they supported the view that he was properly refused permission to return with his ship.

Concede for the moment that he was improperly discharged. He was discharged; and there is no reason why he should have remained inactive all these years upon the theory that he was still in the employ of the Government.

I shall be perfectly willing, when we can have some little time, to discuss the bill. We have not time now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 4174) to establish a woman's bureau in the Metropolitan police department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection just a moment? Can we take up this bill at some other time when we can discuss the matter? What is the attitude of the Senator about it?

Mr. KING. Undoubtedly, before we adjourn, it will be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PUBLIC LANDS IN ARKANSAS

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 114) authorizing assessments by levee, drainage, and road districts upon unreserved public lands in the St. Francis levee district, State of Arkansas, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Whereas in the improvement by reclamation and otherwise of swamp lands in the State of Arkansas by the St. Francis levee district and by drainage and road districts, great benefits have accrued to lands now owned, or formerly owned, by the United States; and

Whereas under the laws of Arkansas, improvements by all such districts are paid for from the proceeds of special assessments levied on the basis of the benefits accruing to the lands affected, and it has been the practice of the various districts to levy such special assessments upon entered public lands of the United States and to collect such assessments from each entryman when he becomes entitled to a final certificate for the lands; and

Whereas this long-established and equitable practice has been challenged by litigation, and decisions have been rendered invalidating all assessments for benefits accruing to public lands before issuance of final certificate therefor, for the reason that the United States had not given its consent to such assessments upon its lands; and

Whereas the result of the inability of the districts to collect such assessments is to confer the benefit upon owners who have made no compensation therefor, and to place a correspondingly greater burden upon the owners of lands who have paid the assessments, thus unjustly compelling the latter to bear the expense of improving the public lands for the benefit of those who later receive them from the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That all unentered, unreserved public lands, and all entered lands for which no final certificates have been issued, within the boundaries of the St. Francis levee district, State of Arkansas, shall after the approval of this act be subject to inclusion in and assessments by the St. Francis levee district and drainage and road districts, such assessments to be made, and to be enforced as a lien, in the same manner as provided in the case of drainage assessments and enforcement of liens therefor by drainage districts upon certain public lands, in the act entitled "An act authorizing local drainage districts to drain certain public lands in the State of Arkansas, counties of Mississippi and Poinsett, and subjecting said lands to taxation," approved January 17, 1920.

SEC. 2. The United States consents to any assessments made prior to the approval of this act by the St. Francis levee district and drainage and road districts, upon any unreserved public lands within the boundaries of the St. Francis levee district (whether or not entered at the time the assessment was made and whether or not final certificates or patents therefor had been issued prior to the approval of this act), if such assessments were made in conformity with the constitution and laws of the State of Arkansas as in force at the time. In the case of lands still beneficially owned by the United States, such assessments shall constitute a lien upon such lands, to be enforced in the same manner as liens for assessments authorized by section 1.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLARENCE CLEGHORN

The bill (H. R. 5981) for the relief of Clarence Cleghorn was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUISE M. CAMBOURI

The bill (S. 363) for the relief of Louise M. Cambouri was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I see that this claim was allowed by the Accounting Office. Was a further examination made, and the validity of the claim established?

Mr. HOWELL. It was; and the Comptroller General advises that the bill should be paid.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of," to insert "$251.26," and at the top of page 2 to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That no part of the amount appropriated in this bill in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys on account of services rendered or advances made in connection with said claim. Any person or persons violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to Louise M. Cambouri, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $251.26, in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States on account of services rendered in the translation and verification of letters and documents for the United States Veterans' Bureau, prior to the cancellation of a contract dated May 13, 1926, claim for payment having been disallowed by the General Accounting Office on April 20, 1927.

SEC. 2. That no part of the amount appropriated in this bill in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys on account of services rendered or advances made in connection with said claim. Any person or persons violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Gallagher, administrator of the estate of Charles Gallagher, deceased, of New York, the sum of $23,387.03, being the amount found due by the Court of Claims for loss and destruction of his schooner Nimrod and cargo, during the Civil War while he was under military orders, within military lines, and executing military commands, as reported to Congress in Senate Document No. 56, Fifty-eighth Congress, third session, Congressional Report No. 1303, filed in the Senate December 5, 1904.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, what became of Senate bill 1633?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was passed.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and have it put back on the calendar. I want to look into it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT TO COPYRIGHT LAW

The bill (H. R. 6104) to amend sections 57 and 61 of the act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyright," approved March 4, 1909, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Patents with an amendment, on page 2, line 16, after the word "regulations," to insert "as," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 57 and 61 of the act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyright," approved March 4, 1909 (sec. 57 and sec. 61, title 17, U. S. C.), be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

The consolidated catalogues and indexes shall also be supplied to all persons ordering them at such prices as may be determined to be reasonable, and all subscriptions for the catalogues shall be received by the Superintendent of Public Documents, who shall forward the said publications; and the moneys thus received shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and accounted for under such laws and Treasury regulations as shall be in force at the time.

For every additional certificate of registration made, $1. For recording the notice of user or acquiescence specified in section 1, subsection (e), $1 for each notice of not more than five titles. SEC. 2. This act shall go into effect on July 1, 1928.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3874) authorizing appropriations of funds for construction of a highway from Red Lodge, Mont., to the boundary of the Yellowstone National Park near Cooke City, Mont., was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

APPOINTMENT OF MIDSHIPMEN BY VICE PRESIDENT

The bill (S. 2802) to provide for the appointment of five midshipmen each year at large by the Vice President of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 5, after the word "law," to strike out "five."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee if it is deemed necessary, in view of the recent bill passed authorizing further appointments of cadets at Annapolis, to provide for further appointments.

Mr. HALE. I do not think it is exactly necessary, Mr. President; but the committee felt that the Vice President, who has the right to appoint cadets to West Point, should have the same right at the Naval Academy. We have simply given him the same right that any Senator would have.

Mr. KING. The point I am making is whether or not we are overloading the officers, both of the Army and the Navy, by appointing too many to Annapolis and to West Point.

Mr. HALE. I do not think so.

Mr. KING. It seemed to me that we were.

Mr. HALE. I do not think it will overload us at all.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Maine whether a Senator has power now to appoint more than three appointees to West Point and the Naval Academy?

Mr. HALE. At the present time only three, Mr. President; but the appropriation bill for the coming year authorizes four.

Mr. BRUCE. Then he will have power to appoint four after this year?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I think we all received notices that we have the power to appoint the extra one now.

Mr. NEELY. No; upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. DILL. The bill has already passed.

Mr. HALE. Under the law as it at present exists, we have a right to appoint five; but appropriations are only made sufficient to take care of three at the present time. The appropriation bill for the coming year provides for four.

Mr. DILL. But the Bureau of Navigation less than 10 days ago sent out notices stating that the extra appointee might be named to take the examination on June 13.

Mr. HALE. They probably thought the bill would go through before that time.

Mr. DILL. I know that I received such a notice.

Mr. HALE. They were simply anticipating. Of course, they will have to call that off if the appropriation bill does not go through.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Maine a question.

Mr. McNARY. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BARKLEY. I notice that this bill provides that the Vice President may appoint five midshipmen each year. Inasmuch as the four-year term for graduation at Annapolis would apply to these midshipmen as well as those appointed by the Senators and Representatives, that would give the Vice President 20 midshipmen in the Naval Academy. Is that what is intended?

Mr. HALE. The bill gives the Vice President the same power to appoint midshipmen that Senators now have.

Mr. BARKLEY. But that is not what this bill says. It says he shall have the right to appoint five for each year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Kentucky that there are other amendments to come which cover that point.

Mr. McNARY. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are other amendments not yet agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. JONES. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine if this is the situation—that under the general law now the Vice President appoints a certain number to West Point?

Mr. HALE. He does, now.

Mr. JONES. And he never has had the right to appoint to the Naval Academy?

Mr. HALE. He has not.

Mr. JONES. This simply extends that right to him?

Mr. HALE. It does.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The remaining amendments proposed by the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, in line 5, after the word "appointed," to strike out "each year."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 6, after the words "United States," to insert "equivalent in number to those allowed for each United States Senator."

The amendment was agreed to.

As amended the bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter there shall be allowed at the United States Naval Academy, in addition to those allowed by existing law, midshipmen appointed at large by the Vice President of the United States, equivalent in number to those allowed for each United States Senator.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the appointment of midshipmen at large by the Vice President of the United States."

APPRAISAL OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENT PROPERTY

The bill (H. R. 5746) to authorize the appraisal of certain Government property and for other purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALARIES OF PUBLIC PRINTER AND DEPUTY PUBLIC PRINTER

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] was unavoidably detained. He has telephoned me asking that I request that Order of Business No. 737, House bill 6669, be put back on the calendar.

Mr. BINGHAM. What is that bill?

Mr. KING. Order of Business No. 737, House bill 6669.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a bill fixing the salary of the Public Printer and of the Deputy Public Printer. What is the Senator's request?

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent that it be restored to the calendar as not having been passed. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed, and that it be restored to its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. BINGHAM. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

DUTY OF NAVAL OFFICERS ON AIRSHIPS

The bill (H. R. 5465) to amend section 1571 of the Revised Statutes to permit officers of the Navy to count duty on airships as sea duty was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

DUTY OF NAVAL OFFICERS AS FLEET AND SQUADRON ENGINEERS

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 11) to investigate the problem of the control of aircraft for seacoast defense was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, may we have a brief explanation of this concurrent resolution?

Mr. HALE. I have just had word that the War Department would like to have the concurrent resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be passed over.

DATE OF PRECEDENCE OF CERTAIN STAFF NAVAL OFFICERS

The bill (H. R. 21) to provide for date of precedence of certain officers of the staff corps of the Navy was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Maine if House bill 21 is the bill known as the running mate bill, to which there was so much objection a year or two ago?

Mr. HALE. No; this has nothing to do with that matter. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] reported the bill. He will explain it.

Mr. KING. It is the bill with respect to taking precedence, and so forth. If it is the so-called running mate bill that was under consideration when I was a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, I want to object to it.

Mr. HALE. The bill simply seeks to correct the date of precedence in the Navy of two officers who were originally appointed ensigns in the line of the Navy upon graduation from Annapolis.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is already passed.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, the bill provides that any officer transferred to the Navy staff shall take precedence of the officer of the line immediately above him at the time of the transfer, which officer shall be assigned as his running mate for promotion purposes.

Mr. HALE. There are only two officers involved in this. As I explained, under existing law at the time of transfer when these two officers transferred from the line to the staff corps they were given precedence in accordance with their rank and with their date of entrance into the staff corps; thereby losing the precedence they took upon the date of their commission in the line upon graduation from Annapolis. By this bill they will be restored to and placed in the same position for pay purposes based on promotion as the other members of their class of the Naval Academy, the class of 1923.

These are the only two officers involved, as since the time of their transfer from the line to the staff legislation has been enacted—the act of June 10, 1926—whereby hereafter when a line officer is transferred to a staff corps he shall retain the rank and date of commission held by him at the time of such transfer.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. This simply gives these officers the same privilege as all officers enjoy by law.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 11134) to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, in behalf of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

SETTLEMENT OF ACCOUNTS IN THE NAVAL SERVICE

The bill (H. R. 10276) providing for sundry matters affecting the naval service was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, this is an act, according to the title, providing for sundry matters affecting the naval service. That does not give very much information. I would like to have some brief explanation as to what the bill provides for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The attention of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs is invited to the inquiry.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, Captains Smith and Hutchins in their accounts have had certain small sums disallowed by the General Accounting Office in the audit of their accounts; the small sums represented alleged losses in the accounts because of fluctuation of exchange while they were serving as naval attachés at Pekin, China. Both these officers were following the instructions of the Navy Department then in effect, and the alleged loss was the direct result of such procedure. That takes care of two.

Mr. JONES. That is all right.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 4179) to amend the corrupt practices act by extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. STEPHENS. I think that is a matter that will bear some discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

EXTENDING PROVISIONS OF REVISED STATUTES TO HAWAII AND ALASKA

The bill (S. 2069) to extend the provisions of section 1814 of the Revised Statutes to the Territories of Hawaii and Alaska was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to be advised of the object of this bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the only object of that bill is to permit the Territories of Hawaii and Alaska to have the same privilege which the States now have of paying for two statues to go into Statuary Hall. The bill was introduced at the request of the Legislature of Hawaii, and it is unanimously reported by the committee.

Mr. KING. Very well.

Mr. FLETCHER. There are some amendments to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There seems to be some confusion with reference to the amendments. The bill was reported in the first instance by the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs with amendments, and then was sent to the Committee on the Library, which now reports it with amendments, but the print of the bill at the desk seems to contain no amendments whatever.

Mr. JONES. I want to ask the Senator whether or not the committee took into consideration the fact that possibly at some time in the future these Territories might become States, and in the meantime the Territories would put two statues in Statuary Hall, and the States would have no privilege of doing so. The Senator may think that is rather remote.

Mr. BINGHAM. The time is so remote and the event so unlikely to happen, and the desire of the Territories, being that their distinguished men should be recognized in this way, the committee saw no objection. The amendment which the Committee on Territories put in was changing the reference to section 1814 of the Revised Statutes to the section of the Code, but it later appears that the Code is not the law yet, nor will it be for four or five years, and therefore that amendment was not pressed.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, it does seem to me that this hasty method of filling up Statuary Hall is not wise. We put a great many statues there in a few years, and nobody will know why they were put there.

I think one of the most striking things I remember reading was about Themistocles, the greatest of the Greeks, a genius in war and peace. Athens never erected a monument to him, and somebody asked him once why Athens did not erect a monument to him. He said, "I would rather have people ask that question, than ask why they did erect a monument to me."

As to half the monuments in Statuary Hall, people may ask, "Why did they put those monuments there?" In the cases of most of the old States it took 20 or 30 or 40 or 50 years before they had the privilege of filling the places to which they were entitled. It is not wise to hurry this matter on behalf of the Territories, and I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3770) authorizing the Federal Power Commission to issue permits and licenses on Fort Apache and White Mountain Indian Reservations, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] asked that this go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2330) authorizing reconstruction and improvement of a public road in Wind River Indian Reservation, Wyo., was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

FEDERAL BUILDING IN HARTFORD, CONN.

The bill (S. 4035) authorizing conveyance to the city of Hartford, Conn., of title to site and building of the present Federal building in that city was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in consideration of the fact that the site of the present Federal building at Hartford, Conn., was originally donated to the United States for Federal uses, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey by quitclaim deed to the city of Hartford, Conn., title to said site and the Federal building thereon, upon completion and occupancy of the new Federal building authorized to be constructed in said city.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT DEFIANCE HISTORICAL MUSEUM

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 82) providing for the erection of a public historical museum on the site of Fort Defiance, Defiance, Ohio, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Whereas on the 9th day of August, 1794, Gen. Anthony Wayne, a gallant and distinguished soldier of the Revolutionary and Indian Wars, erected a fort at the confluence of the Maumee and Auglaize Rivers, known as Fort Defiance; and

Whereas the original site of old Fort Defiance is now preserved as a public park of 3 acres, wherein the State of Ohio has expended $26,000 to construct a concrete retaining wall, and a further appropriation by the State of Ohio is available for landscaping and beautification of site; and

Whereas the site is one of national as well as local significance: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed (1) with the approval of the proper official of the State of Ohio, to select a site in the public park maintained by the State of Ohio on the site of Fort Defiance, at Defiance, Ohio, and (2) to construct thereon, as a memorial to Gen. Anthony Wayne, a public museum suitable for housing a collection of historical relics which is already available; but such museum shall not be constructed until the State of Ohio has made adequate provision for its care and maintenance, and the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, suspend all construction under this act until the State of Ohio has made available a sum equal to that hereinafter authorized to be appropriated, to be used in the construction of such museum.

SEC. 2. The plans for such museum shall be subject to the approval of the National Commission of Fine Arts.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 92) to provide for a monument to Maj. Gen. William Crawford Gorgas, late Surgeon General of the United States Army, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution had been reported from the Committee on the Library with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital is authorized and directed to select a site on public grounds of the United States in the District of Columbia, and to contract for the erection thereon, at a cost not to exceed $50,000, of a monument to Maj. Gen. William Crawford Gorgas, late Surgeon General of the United States Army, commemorative of the services rendered by him to humanity. The site chosen and the design of such monument shall be approved by the National Commission of Fine Arts and the Joint Committee on the Library.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANT, LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

The bill (H. R. 10544) to abolish the office of administrative assistant and disbursing officer in the Library of Congress and to reassign the duties thereof, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ETHNOLOGICAL RESEARCHES

The bill (S. 1855) to provide for cooperation by the Smithsonian Institution with State, educational, and scientific organizations in the United States for continuing ethnological researches on the American Indians, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution is hereby authorized to cooperate with any State, educational institution, or scientific organization in the United States for continuing ethnological researches among the American Indians and the excavation and preservation of archæological remains.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,000, which shall be available until expended for the above purposes: Provided, That at such time as the Smithsonian Institution is satisfied that any State, educational institution, or scientific organization in any of the United States is prepared to contribute to such investigation and when in its judgment such investigation shall appear meritorious, the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution may direct that an amount from this sum equal to that contributed by such State, educational institution, or scientific organization, not to exceed $2,000, to be expended from such sum in any one State during any calendar year, be made available for cooperative investigation: Provided further, That all such cooperative work and division of the result thereof shall be under the direction of the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in reference to this bill, it should be indefinitely postponed. Substantially the same bill has already been passed. I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to that fact.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

DISTRICT JUDGE, NORTHERN DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS

The bill (S. 4183) authorizing filling of a vacancy occurring in the office of district judge for the northern district of Illinois created by the act entitled "An act for the appointment of an additional circuit judge for the fourth judicial circuit, for the appointment of additional district judges for certain districts, providing for an annual conference of certain judges, and for other purposes," approved September 14, 1922, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a vacancy occurring at any time in the office of district judge for the northern judicial district of Illinois created by the act entitled "An act for the appointment of an additional circuit judge for the fourth judicial circuit, for the appointment of additional district judges for certain districts, providing for an annual conference of certain judges, and for other purposes," approved September 14, 1922, is authorized to be filled.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TENNESSEE RIVER BRIDGE, KENTUCKY

The bill (S. 4059) authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Tennessee River, at or near the mouth of Clarks River, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Tennessee River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near where Clarks River empties into the Tennessee River, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. SEC. 2. The Calhoun Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, is authorized to construct, maintain, and operate such bridge and the necessary approaches thereto as a railroad bridge for the passage of railway trains or street cars, or both, or as a highway bridge for the passage of pedestrians, animals, and vehicles, adapted to travel on public highways, or as a combined railroad and highway bridge for all such purposes; and there is hereby conferred upon the said Calhoun Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, if the same is constructed as a highway bridge only, either the State of Illinois, any political subdivision thereof, within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation, in accordance with the laws of such State governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of 20 years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interest in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion cost, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 4. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the State of Illinois or by any municipality or other political subdivision or public agency thereof, under the provisions of section 3 of this act, and if tolls are charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the date of acquiring the same. If such bridge is constructed as a combined railroad bridge for the passage of railway trains or street cars, and a highway bridge for the passage of pedestrians, animals, and vehicles, then the right of purchase and condemnation conferred by this act shall apply to a right of way thereover for the passage without cost of persons, animals, and vehicles adapted to travel on public highways; and if the right of purchase or condemnation shall be exercised as to such right of way over the bridge, then the measure of damages or compensation to be allowed or paid for such right of way shall be a sum equal to the difference between the actual fair cash value of such bridge determined in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of this act, and what its actual fair cash value so determined would have been if such bridge had been constructed as a railroad bridge only. If the right of purchase or condemnation conferred by this act shall be exercised as to the right of way over such bridge, then that part of the bridge which shall be purchased or condemned and shall be thereafter actually used for the passage of pedestrians, animals, or vehicles, shall be maintained, operated, and kept in repair by the purchaser thereof.

SEC. 6. The Calhoun Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, shall, within 90 days after the completion of such bridge, file with the Secretary of War and with the highway department of the State of Illinois a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and at the request of the highway department of the State of Illinois shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of construction, financing, and promoting such bridge. For the purpose of such investigation the said Calhoun Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, shall make available all of its records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 3 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The Calhoun Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized and empowered to fix and charge just and reasonable tolls for the passage of such bridge of pedestrians, animals, and vehicles adapted to travel on public highways, and the rates so fixed shall be the legal rates until the Secretary of War shall prescribe other rates of toll as provided in the act of March 23, 1906; and if said bridge is constructed as a railroad bridge, or a joint railroad and highway bridge, as provided in this act, the said Calhoun Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix by contract with any person or corporation desiring the use of the same for the passage of railway trains or street cars, or for placing water or gas pipe lines or telephone or telegraph or electric light or power lines, or for any other such purposes, the terms, conditions, and rates of toll for such use; but in the absence of such contract, the terms, conditions, and rates of toll for such use shall be determined by the Secretary of War as provided in said act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 8. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the Calhoun Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Pennsylvania proposes the following amendment:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Leon P. Chesley, late of One hundred and twenty-first Company, United States Coast Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator why there is so much discrimination between the beneficiary under his amendment and so many of the others.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The reason this particular claimant was denied relief was that previously, in a past Congress, a special bill had passed for his relief. He is very old, very much crippled, and in dire need of this relief. Therefore I would like to see this go on as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator what military service this man rendered?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. He is a veteran of the Civil War. This is an increase on account of his excessive disability.

Mr. KING. He has an honorable record?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. He has an honorable record.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will pardon me, but I would like to ask him a question about the case where he offered an amendment to a pension bill. Under existing law I do not understand why the beneficiary of the amendment would not receive a pension of $50 a month under the existing law.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I understand that he does not. Thirty dollars is the maximum he would get.

Mr. KING. Under the general law he would be entitled to $50, unless there is some reason why it was disallowed.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I do not know of any special circumstances. I suggest that the Senator let this go on, and I will agree to cut it out in conference if there is any reason why that should be done.

Mr. KING. I am sure the Senator will discover that he would receive the compensation indicated, unless there was some legal objection.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If I misstated the facts, I shall join with the Senator in asking the conferees to cut it out.

S. S. Inspector on January 30, 1920.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3569) to equalize the pay of certain classes of officers of the Regular Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have had a number of letters making objection to the bill.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I think it is perhaps another bill relating to something else about which the Senator has had letters. The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] is here. I would be glad to have him explain the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the bill merely gives to several hundred captains and majors in the Army the same promotion pay as is given all other officers in the same rank. They were omitted, it is presumed by oversight, when the bill was passed in 1920. These few hundred captains and majors are not receiving as much pay by $100 or $150 a month as all other officers of the same rank.

Mr. KING. I am unable to understand how that could have occurred.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It was an oversight. They were left out and were not mentioned in the Army pay bill when all the others were taken care of, or when the advanced pay was provided for. These officers were admitted in 1920 as emergency Army officers.

Mr. KING. Does it mean that there are a number of persons from civilian life who entered the Army and who are now in the Army, and that they want the same pay as regular West Point officers who have been in the Army for many years and perhaps have attained their number of years of service, when in the same grades there are emergency officers who reached those grades after a few months of service?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No. The circumstances are these: The pay bill of 1922 provides that the pay period into which these officers shall be placed shall be determined by the length of their commissioned service plus an allowance of 14 years for officers of a particular age. It has been held by the Comptroller General that although that credit for commissioned service applies to the original pay bill in which they are placed, it does not help them in the subsequent increment or subsequent pay period in which they would be entitled to be placed by further service. It gives them a constructive credit at the beginning of their service, but denies them the same constructive credit in the calculation of their pay periods from then on. It puts them in exact relation with those officers with whom they ranked at the beginning of their service.

It is the result of a technicality that did not occur to anyone in Congress or in the department at the time the officers began their service. It will go very far toward relieving the discontent among the emergency officers who were taken in in 1920. It merely carries on the constructive credit for service that they were given at the beginning of their term.

Mr. KING. I want to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if the War Department, after full consideration of the bill, has reported favorably or adversely? My understanding is it would cost a very large sum of mony—about half a million dollars, or perhaps more. That is not a primary objection or a sufficient objection if it is a proper bill.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The War Department reports that the additional cost will be $1,173,000 a year and reports against it. At the same time I do not want to say that without saying I believe it is fair and that I hope, if not to-night, at some time, it will be passed.

Mr. KING. I confess I do not understand the bill. I would like an opportunity to read the report and get the views of the War Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

SALARIES OF PUBLIC PRINTER AND DEPUTY PUBLIC PRINTER

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I understand that Calendar 737, the bill (H. R. 6669) fixing the salary of the Public Printer and of the Deputy Public Printer was passed in my absence. I had spoken to at least three Senators about objecting to it in my absence.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think that was reconsidered a while ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection was made to its reconsideration.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought it would be objected to when it was called. I had understood from at least three Senators that they would object for me, but it was passed and some one objected to its reconsideration. I now ask unanimous consent that the vote by which it was passed be reconsidered and the bill take its place on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, there was no objection when the bill was reached on the calendar.

Mr. HARRISON. That may be true. The Senator did not understand me. I had spoken to two or three Senators who were opposed to the bill, as I was opposed to the bill. I could not be here when the matter came up in the regular course, but I understood it would be objected to by the other Senators to whom I had spoken. It was not objected to, and I therefore request that it be reconsidered. Is there objection to my unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BINGHAM. Will not the Senator let the request go over until to-morrow?

Mr. HARRISON. No. I want to get it acted on and the bill placed back on the calendar to-night.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator can submit his request to-morrow.

Mr. HARRISON. I can state the reasons why I am opposed to the bill, but I do not want to take up the time of the Senate by doing that to-night, because it would prevent the passage of some other legislation. I may say to the Senator that if he objects to my request for reconsideration, there will be nothing else passed to-night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair interject the suggestion to the Senator from Mississippi that he make his motion to reconsider, which will prevent transmission of the bill to the House.

Mr. HARRISON. Do I understand the Chair objects to my unanimous-consent request?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No. The Chair was trying to offer some first aid to the injured. If the Senator enters his motion to reconsider he secures substantially the benefits which he attempts to secure by his unanimous-consent request.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that, but I want the matter reconsidered and the bill placed on the calendar. I am not making an unreasonable request of the Senate. I object to very few bills here. I can object to more bills. I am opposed to this bill at this particular time. I want it to take its place on the calendar again. I ask unanimous consent that the votes by which it was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered, and that the bill be restored to the calendar. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered. The bill is restored to its place on the calendar.

WARRANT OFFICERS OF THE REGULAR ARMY

The bill (S. 3459) to amend an act of Congress approved March 4, 1927 (Public, No. 795, 69th Cong.), to provide for appointment as warrant officers of the Regular Army of such persons as would have been eligible therefor but for the interruption of their status caused by military service rendered by them as commissioned officers during the World War, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection until I make a statement?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It has been held that these noncommissioned officers, who would be entitled to be appointed warrant officers, are prohibited from appointment if, as a matter of fact, their services as noncommissioned officers were interrupted during the World War by their temporary service as commissioned officers. In other words, they can not receive the appointment to which they would otherwise be entitled if they were more than ordinarily meritorious and were temporarily used as commissioned officers. The additional cost to the Government will be very slight. It is a long-deferred recognition of good service to very loyal noncommissioned officers. I hope the Senate will be willing to pass it.

Mr. KING. I observe the report of the Secretary of War states that the Director of the Budget has been consulted and advises that the proposed legislation is in conflict with the financial program of the President. There must be a considerable amount of expense attached to it or it would not meet with the disapproval of the President.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The additional cost will be $6,387.20 a year. The recommendation of the War Department is that if the proposed legislation should be enacted into law it will correct an injustice done to a small class of men who served faithfully during the World War and are yet debarred from reaping the benefits to which they would have been eligible by reason of long and faithful service had they not accepted temporary commissions as officers. Then, having in every way argued in favor of the bill, the Secretary of War winds up with the curt statement that it is in conflict with the financial program of the President. It may be that it is, but it is certainly a long-deferred recognition due to a very faithful group of noncommissioned officers.

Mr. KING. There ought to be some harmony in the executive departments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah withdraw his objection?

Mr. KING. I do.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment on page 1, line 5, to strike out the word "person" and insert the word "persons," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to appoint as warrant officers of the Regular Army any persons whose commissioned service in the Army during the World War, added to their service as quartermaster clerk, amounted to 12 years or more of service prior to June 4, 1920, and who were not eligible for appointment as field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, under the provisions of the act of August 29, 1916, because of the interruption of their 12 years' requisite service as quartermaster clerks to render commissioned service in the World War: Provided, That for the purposes of this act the period of commissioned service during the World War prior to June 4, 1920, be deemed equivalent to a like period of detached service away from permanent station or duty beyond the continental limits of the United States: Provided, That in determining length of service for longevity pay and retirement they shall be credited with and entitled to count the same military service as authorized for warrant officers, and all classified service rendered as clerks in the Military Establishment: Provided further, That the limitation in the act of June 30, 1922, on the number of warrant officers, United States Army, shall not apply to the appointees hereunder.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDGAR TRAVIS, SR.

The bill (S. 652) for the relief of Edgar Travis, sr., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments on page 1, line 7, after the word "have" to insert the words "enlisted in said company on April 1, 1863, and to have," and in line 9, after the word "service," to insert the words "of the United States as a private," and in line 10, after the word "company" to insert the words "on December 26, 1864," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Edgar Travis, sr., late of Company I, Sixth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have enlisted in said company on April 1, 1863, and to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of said company on December 26, 1864: Provided, That no pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 8988) for the relief of Milton Longsdorf was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we have passed to-night a number of House claims bills, one after the other. I am not going to object to any of them, but my understanding is, and I want to state this for the information of all concerned, that there are over 100 bills which have passed the Senate involving meritorious and just claims, hanging fire in the body at the other end of the Capitol, without even being reported out of committee. It is almost time to serve notice on somebody that they can not expect us to pass their bills sent to us by the House and have them continue to refuse to act on bills which the Senate sends to them. I merely wanted to say that much.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 3241) for the relief of Seymour Buckley was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BILL INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

The bill (S. 1690) for the relief of Lewis W. Crain was announced as next in order. The bill had been reported adversely from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

ENSIGN JACOB E. DEGARMO

The bill (H. R. 9148) for the relief of Ensign Jacob E. DeGarmo, United States Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Ensign Jacob E. DeGarmo, United States Navy, a lieutenant, junior grade, on the retired list of the Navy: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall entitle Ensign Jacob E. DeGarmo to any back pay or allowance.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the bill from the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is to advance Ensign DeGarmo, United States Navy, one grade on the retired list of the Navy, thereby giving him retired rank, pay, and allowances that by general law should and would be his had the proper procedure and action been taken in his case.

The act of March 4, 1911, provides that if an officer of the Navy fails in his physical examination when eligible for promotion, and said physical disability shall be determined to have been contracted in the line of duty, such officer shall be retired with the rank to which his seniority entitled him to be promoted.

Ensign DeGarmo was eligible for promotion to the rank of lieutenant, junior grade, and was examined physically by a medical board to determine his physical fitness for promotion to that rank. He became eligible in 1923. He was not found physically qualified for promotion. Eight months later he was ordered to appear before a naval retiring board, not before a medical examining board, to determine fitness for promotion, and as a result of the findings of the retiring board he was placed on the retired list with the rank of ensign, whereas he should have been ordered before a medical board to determine fitness for promotion, and, if found physically unqualified for promotion, he would have been placed upon the retired list with the rank of lieutenant, junior grade, to which his seniority entitled him.

The bill seeks to give him the rank of lieutenant, junior grade, on the retired list to which, by the act of March 4, 1911, he is entitled. Under the regular procedure he should have been retired as a lieutenant, junior grade, instead of ensign, the rank in which he was retired. The department reported favorably on the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK A. GRAB

The bill (H. R. 1951) granting six months' pay to Frank A. Grab was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill has been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, after the word "death," to insert: "Provided, That the said Frank A. Grab establishes that he was actually dependent upon his son, Alfred Newton Grab, at the time of the latter's death," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of current appropriations, Pay of the Navy, 1927, to Frank A. Grab, father of Alfred Newton Grab, deceased seaman, United States Navy, who was killed in line of duty on February 7, 1922, at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate said Alfred Newton Grab was receiving at the date of his death: Provided, That the said Frank A. Grab establishes that he was actually dependent upon his son, Alfred Newton Grab, at the time of the latter's death.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ALEXANDER GINGRAS

The bill (H. R. 11978) granting six months' pay to Alexander Gingras, father of Louis W. Gingras, deceased private, United States Marine Corps, in active service, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, after the word "death," to insert: "Provided, That the said Alexander Gingras establishes that he was actually dependent upon his son, Louis Walter Gingras, at the time of the latter's death"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of current appropriations, Pay of the Navy, 1927, to Alexander Gingras, father of Louis W. Gingras, deceased private, United States Marine Corps, who died in line of duty on March 31, 1927, at Managua, Nicaragua, an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate said Louis W. Gingras was receiving at the date of his death: Provided, That the said Alexander Gingras establishes that he was actually dependent upon his son, Louis Walter Gingras, at the time of the latter's death.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE

The bill (S. 2440) to provide that four hours shall constitute a day's work on Saturdays throughout the year for all employees in the Government Printing Office was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over until we have a chance to discuss it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that objection for a moment?

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that he was kind enough to furnish me some data this afternoon which I have not had time to examine. I thought perhaps on Thursday evening we could take up the matter and discuss it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Very well.

Mr. KING. It seems to me there is some relationship between these and other employees of the Government.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes. May I take just a moment to state the difference? The difference is this:

The employees of the Government Printing Office work 48 hours a week. The employees of the executive departments work 42 hours a week. The employees of the Government Printing Office do not get 30 days' sick leave, as all employees of all the other departments get. They do not get that 30 days' leave. This will give them a half holiday on Saturday. It will give them a 44-hour week, the same hours per week that are enjoyed by all men in the printing trades all over the United States.

I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection. That is the only difference.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, on Thursday evening I shall be very glad to consider this bill. With the statement of the Senator, I am inclined to support it; but I should like to examine it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator objects, and the bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF TEACHERS' SALARY ACT

The bill (S. 4063) to amend certain sections of the teachers' salary act, approved June 4, 1924, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, what became of Senate bill 4063?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was passed.

Mr. KING. I had an amendment to offer to that bill, and I do not have it here to-night. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent to reconsider the vote whereby Senate bill 4063 was passed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be returned to its place on the calendar.

Welch shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as of the date August 31, 1864, as a private of Company I, Fifty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, Civil War: Provided, That no back pay, bounty, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

M. SELLER & CO.

The bill (S. 2304) for the relief of M. Seller & Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to refund to M. Seller & Co., Portland, Oreg., certain penalties in the amount of $7,147.80, being amount paid to the collectors of customs at Portland, Oreg., and Seattle, Wash., on April 28, 1927, in the respective sums of $4,749.40 and $2,398.40, said penalties being incurred under the customs laws in the entry of certain merchandise from Germany, at a less value than that returned upon final appraisement, such entry having been made without any intention to defraud the revenues of the United States or to conceal or misrepresent the facts of the case or to deceive the appraiser as to the value of the merchandise.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of that bill.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, the bill is my colleague's bill. I observe that he is absent for the moment from the Chamber.

This bill is for the relief of a firm doing business at Portland, Oreg., and Seattle and Spokane, Wash. It provides for the refunding of certain penalties exacted by the Customs Service upon goods that were erroneously misvalued and entered. The department felt that they were obliged to collect the penalties. They have stated, however, in the statement made to the committee which examined the bill that they had no doubt but that the declaration of value was made in good faith.

The committee believed in the light of 50 years of very law-abiding course of this firm in its dealings with the United States Government, in view of the fact that it had never encountered any penalty heretofore, that the statement of good faith upon the part of the department was a sufficient justification to allow the return of the penalties. I hope the Senator may not object to the bill.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator what is the recommendation of the acting official of the Treasury Department under whose jurisdiction this claim would come.

Mr. STEIWER. They made no recommendation, save to report that they had no doubt that the declaration of value was made in good faith. The reason why they made no recommendation was that they thought their recommendation might be construed as an attitude upon their part that would open up other claims; but I desire to suggest to the Senator that there probably will be no other claims where the circumstances are similar to this one.

I neglected to state, in the statement I made a minute ago, that in this particular case this importer had appealed to the Treasury Department for information as to its course in making the valuation, and made the valuation under the information supplied by the Treasury Department itself, which was erroneous, as it proved afterwards because the antidumping law had just been enacted, and both the agent of the Treasury Department and the importer were in error in their understanding of the law.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that many complaints have come to the attention of some of us, and I know the matter was considered when an investigation of the Internal Revenue Bureau was under consideration, as to the frequency with which goods were undervalued that were brought into the United States; and many manufacturers in the United States, those whose products come into competition with imports into the United States, have complained of the undervaluations; and many charges have been made. I think truthfully, that many of these importations were fraudulently undervalued. It would seem to me that we ought to be very careful in remitting these penalties.

Mr. STEIWER. The committee, if I may say so to the Senator, scrutinized this claim with that particular idea in mind. We thought, in view of the statement made by the Treasury Department that it was done in good faith, on account of 50 years of honest dealings with the Treasury, that the claimants were entitled to the presumption of good faith in this particular case.

Mr. KING. I shall not object.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PAN AMERICAN UNION

The bill (H. R. 12899) authorizing the erection for the sole use of the Pan American Union of an office building on the square of land lying between Eighteenth Street, C Street, and Virginia Avenue NW., in the city of Washington, D. C., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire what is the cost to the Government, if any? I thought we had a Pan American Union. Is this to authorize the construction of another building?

Mr. KEYES. Yes, Mr. President; this is to authorize the construction of an office building. The present building is not adequate for the activities of the Pan American Union at the present time. It is proposed to erect an office building across the street from the present Pan American Union Building, on a site now owned by the Government, and now occupied by the War Department. There is no expense at all to the Government, except that the Government will loan this site, but will retain the title to the land.

Mr. KING. Who will pay for the building?

Mr. KEYES. The Pan American Union.

Mr. FLETCHER. Have they not got ground enough where they are to construct their office building?

Mr. KEYES. There is room around the building, but architects are of the opinion that it would spoil the building that is there now to undertake to put an office building on the same lot.

Mr. FLETCHER. I thought possibly there was room back of that building.

Mr. KEYES. This would be back, of course, but it would be across the street. There is no objection to it, so far as I know; and the War Department, which occupies the proposed site, is perfectly agreeable to the use of the land for this purpose.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, if there is no objection, I should like to have inserted in the RECORD an address by Rev.

George E. Bevans, of Fairmount, W. Va., which I think is of some value.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is here printed, as follows:

BEVANS REVIEWS LEAGUE OF NATIONS IN ACTION—MINISTER WRITES ABOUT ORGANIZATION IN "LEAGUE OF NATIONS PRACTICAL"

"The League of Nations practical" is the subject discussed this week by the Rev. George E. Bevans, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, at Fairmount, W. Va. Doctor Bevans spent a week at Geneva last summer studying the League of Nations and attending the fourth annual Institute of International Relations arranged by the League of Nations Union (London) and the League of Nations Nonpartisan Association (New York). About 400 delegates were present from Great Britain and the United States.

In discussing the "League of Nations practical," Doctor Bevans says:

"Fifty-five years ago there was no association of nations to see that letters were safely and quickly delivered from one country to another. Mail traveled very slowly and on account of the difference in rates of postage it was difficult to send letters into foreign countries. In 1874 representatives from many nations met in Berne, Switzerland, and formed what was knowu as the Universal Postal Union. As a result of that union mail service was perfected between all nations and speed and safety of mail delivery was guaranteed by the governments of the world.

"Nine years ago there was no League of Nations established to help maintain peace and the most terrible war in all history had just come to a close. It was in January, 1920, that the first meeting of the League of Nations was called by President Woodrow Wilson in Paris to promote international good will and peace. But as early as 1914 definite plans had been formulating in the minds of leading statesmen in Great Britain, France, and America, to the end that after the World War ways and means must be provided to prevent another such holocaust of civilization. Hence, when the delegates to the Peace Conference met in Paris in 1919 there was a general understanding that some agreement would be made by the nations to prevent if possible future wars. Such an understanding was contained in the last of President Wilson's famous fourteen points, on the basis of which the allied nations signed the armistice with Germany, which stipulated that 'a general association of nations must be formed under specific covenants for the purpose of affording mutual guarantees of political independence and territorial integrity to great and small states alike.'

"The framing of the League of Nations covenant was the first work accomplished by the delegates at the Peace Conference in 1919. The introduction to this peace covenant reads as follows: 'The high contracting parties in order to promote international cooperation and security by the acceptance of obligations not to resort to war, by the prescription of open, just, and honorable relations between nations, by the firm establishment of the understandings of international law as the actual rule of conduct among governments, and by the maintenance of justice and a scrupulous respect for all treaty obligations in the dealings of organized peoples with one another, agree to this covenant of the League of Nations.'

"Such was the origin of the League of Nations, the story of its organization and accomplishments represents the dawning of a new day in world history. First, let us note the mechanics of the league and then appraise its success and failures. The league consists of an assembly, a council, and a secretariat. The assembly is composed of the rank and file of the nations of the earth. The underlying motive back of the league is that eventually every government will become a member. Such membership is not automatically accorded, however, but only as each nation, other than those nations which were charter members, makes definite application and agrees to certain requirements and guarantees and is favorably voted upon by two-thirds of the assembly.

"There were 28 of the allied and 13 neutral nations who were the first members of the leagues. One state, China, though it never signed the treaty of Versailles, containing the peace covenant, did sign the covenant and entered the league that way. Hence at the first meeting of the assembly of nations in 1920 there were 42 members represented. The assembly meets once a year on the first Monday in September. At the end of the seventh assembly in 1927 the membership of the league had increased to 50 nations. The most notable countries not in the league are the United States, Russia, Mexico, Turkey, and Egypt. All governments in the world with the exception of eight have been members of the league.

"It was quite fitting that the home of this new international organization should be centered at Geneva, Switzerland, the country which has not had a war in a hundred years and whose republican form of government is the oldest in existence. The assembly building at Geneva is a very plain-looking rectangular structure, much like a public hall in America, with a seating capacity of possibly 1,200. In the assembly each nation can have three representatives, nominated in most cases by the prime ministers of each country, and as all public questions are referred to committees and each nation has a member on each committee it is customary for the different States to have a group of experts to assist in the committee work. The unanimous vote of the assembly is required for any definite action.

"The work of the assembly consists in discussing six classes of questions, as follows: 1. Legal and constitutional questions. 2. The league's technical organizations (the economic, health, and transit commissions). 3. Disarmament. 4. The league's budget. 5. Humanitarian questions. 6. Political questions (including mandates). The assembly is independent of the council and corresponds roughly to a house of representatives. Its meetings are always of the open-forum type, where the freest public discussions are held. The assembly turns the white light of publicity upon all international questions and serves as a safety valve for the nations.

"The council is limited in numbers and corresponds to a cabinet in a government. It gives prominence and recognized leadership to the largest nations. In the council, Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, and Germany have permanent seats, and nine other members are elected by the assembly, the method being to elect three members each year for a period of three years. The council is somewhat like the Senate of the United States with its restricted membership, it meets at least four times a year, in March, June, September, and December, and almost always at Geneva in the famous glass room. In fact, the council has had 44 meetings in the seven years of its history and has developed a new method of handling problems of foreign affairs. The prime ministers, secretaries of foreign relations, and other leading statesmen thus are brought together frequently to talk informally about matters of international concern. English and French are the two official languages used at the league.

"The secretariat is chosen from 30 nations. It is something distinctively new in international cooperation and is the outstanding feature of the League of Nations. It has been called the international civil service and well deserves the confidence and praise which it has received from everyone acquainted with its work. There are from five to six hundred international employees in the secretariat and labor department of the league. They are all experts, skilled in the special line of work for which they have been selected. They keep their nationality, but their official allegiance and responsibility are to the league alone. They remain at Geneva all the year engaged in their technical work relating to the mandate countries, public health, social and labor problems, press publicity, legal matters, armaments, etc. Rarely do two members of the same nationality work together, the result being a new and valuable coordination of different racial points of view, produce better international understanding and better international relations. Men and women are equally eligible for this world work through the secretariat. The secretary general is elected annually by the league.

"The expense attachd to such international administration and service is by no means small and yet anyone who makes a study of the League of Nations would not begrudge the expenditures. The cost of the league, including the International Labor Organization and the Permanent Court of International Justice, amounts to $4,500,000 annually, which sum represents the cost of two hours of World War to the United States or one three-thousandths of the annual budget of France.

"The accomplishments of the league in the brief seven years of its history can be summed up as follows: First, the settlement of political disputes, such as the Vilna question, which had started a war between Poland and Lithuania in September, 1920, but, through the intervention of the League of Nations, fighting was ended. Second, the Aaland Islands question represented a struggle between Sweden and Finland for possession of the islands. The league appointed two impartial commissions of jurists of different nationalities, who visited the islands and countries involved and whose recommendations brought about satisfactory settlement of the difficulties. Third, the Upper Silesia question presented a problem of the division of that territory between Germany and Poland which would be acceptable to the two nations. The league by wise and tactful planning succeeded in making the new frontier 'a line of union rather than of division.' Fourth, the Yugoslav threat of Albania was the occasion of the invasion of Albanian territory by Yugoslav troops. The matter was brought before the council, the Albanian and Yugoslav representatives being present. Pledges were given to respect the frontier and the trouble died down. Fifth, the Memel dispute illustrates another type of league methods. The port of Memel on the Baltic was the prize sought both by Lithuania and Poland. A small commission of experts, with Mr. Norman Davis, a former Acting Secretary of State in the United States, as chairman, studied the dispute and submitted an agreement which settled the points at issue. Sixth, the Greco-Bulgarian dispute which started in October, 1925, an open warfare between the two countries, with Greek troops invading Bulgaria with artillery and airplanes and bombing towns and bridges. Bulgaria appealed to the league, fighting was stopped, and Greece had to pay over $200,000 damages to Bulgaria.

"Other examples of disputes settled by the league could be mentioned. Again and again embryonic wars have been prevented by the intervention of the league, which without such an international agency might have resulted in another continental or world war. In addition to settling political disputes, the League of Nations has accomplished an enormous amount of reconstruction work. International loans were arranged which saved Austria and Hungary from bankruptcy. One million four hundred thousand Greek refugees were kept from perishing and established in Greece by a loan of $50,000,000. Four hundred and twenty-seven thousand prisoners of war were exchanged and aided by the League of Nations. Various health centers have been established by the league. The white-slave traffic in women and children has been closely watched and studied. Obscene literature curtailed and two antiopium conferences fostered.

"In conclusion, the successes in international relations through conferences and by throwing delays into the war machinery have demonstrated that the League of Nations has developed a new technique, which, if perfected, will produce a new world order. The failures of the league are due to old national intrigues and racial jealousies. It is hard for old hatreds to die. Treaties will always be potential scraps of paper until the sense of moral obligation is universally developed.

"The League of Nations in the seven years of its history has dealt with minor political differences rather than major difficulties, though no dispute is so trifling that it can not become larger. As Hon. Elihu Root said, 'The spirit of international disputes is the main thing,' and it is the creation of that spirit which cooperation and interchange of thought and discussion between the nations of the earth at Geneva is accomplishing.

"The day can not be far distant when the United States, with the other indifferent countries, will pledge allegiance to a united states of the world, a league of nations which shall in truth become an open parliament of man. When the day dawns, 'the sword shall be beat into plowshares and the spears into pruning hooks, nations shall not lift the sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.' God hasten that day!"

McKee, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto, across Lake Sabine, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between a point at or near Port Arthur, Tex., and a point opposite in Cameron Parish, La., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon H. L. McKee, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State: Provided, That no part of the present Pleasure Pier on the east side of the Sabine-Neches Canal belonging to the city of Port Arthur and/or leased to the Port Arthur Chamber of Commerce and Shipping shall be condemned, nor shall the same be acquired or occupied by the said H. L. McKee, his heirs, legal representatives, or assigns, except upon terms and conditions to be stipulated by said city of Port Arthur and the Port Arthur Chamber of Commerce and Shipping.

SEC. 4. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Texas, the State of Louisiana, any public agency or political subdivision of either of such States, within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation or expropriation, in accordance with the laws of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of 10 years after the completion of such bridge, the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion costs, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

If such bridge and its approaches shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the States or public agencies or political subdivisions thereof, or by either of them, as provided in section 4 of this act, and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 15 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

McKee, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge, file with the Secretary of War and with the highway departments of the States of Texas and Louisiana, a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and upon request of the highway department of either of such States shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of cost so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge; for the purpose of such investigation the said H. L. McKee, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall make available all of his records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 4 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to H. L. McKee, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

McKee, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, a right of way not to exceed 100 feet in width across the spoil bank of the ship canal at such location, to be approved by the Chief of Engineers, as will provide a highway connection or connections between the bridge authorized by this act and any bridge or bridges that are or may hereafter be constructed across the ship canal, the United States to retain such free use of the right of way as does not interfere with the bridge approach: Provided, That no toll shall be charged for use of the approach to be built on United States property. The duration of such right of way shall terminate with the termination of the franchise granted by this act for the construction of the bridge and shall attach to and become a part of such bridge, and shall pass with the same in any transfer thereof.

SEC. 9. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE FOR REVISION OF CONVENTION OF 1914 FOR SAFETY OF LIFE AT SEA

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 131) providing for the participation by the United States in the International Conference for the Revision of the Convention of 1914 for the safety of life at sea was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have no objection to the consideration of this joint resolution, but I inquire why the appropriation is $100,000. In most of these measures it is either $25,000 or $50,000.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Because it will be necessary for the United States to send a delegation of not less than 11 persons to London for this purpose, with about 11 experts accompanying them. That was the size of the delegation in 1914. The United States has more tonnage and is more interested in this convention than any other nation, and it is necessary for her to be represented at all of the various subcommittee meetings that are held by the conference.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire an opportunity to look into this joint resolution. I ask that it go over to-night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

INDEMNITY TO GOVERNMENT OF FRANCE

The bill (H. R. 9043) to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the Government of France on account of losses sustained by the owners of the French steamship Madeleine as a result of a collision between it and the U. S. S. Kerwood, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I observe that the tort in this case, if there was one, was committed by the United States, so I have no objection.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It was a collision with an American transport.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the hour of 10.30 o'clock having arrived, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 9, 1928, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, May 8, 1928

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord and Master, Thy bountiful mercy is our hope and trust. We are here not in our own strength but through the loving-kindness and condescension of our Heavenly Father. Each day Thou dost set the marks of loveliness upon the face of Thy creation. Unto us do Thou send forth Thy light, that we may fulfill the measure of duty that is made plain to us. Enrich us with the fruitful joys of the Christian's faith; may they be our shield and our defense. Redeem our country from enmities and jealousies. Shadow it everywhere with the sweet, gracious sentiment of brotherhood. Teach us that the lasting treasure of life is the presence of Him who quiets all alarms and stills the soul with heavenly peace. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION AND SURVEY OF EASTCHESTER CREEK, N. Y.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the preliminary examination and survey of Eastchester Creek, N. Y.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, some time ago I introduced a bill, H. R. 9604. The object of this bill is to provide for a preliminary examination and survey of the Eastchester Creek to determine such improvements as may be necessary to meet with increasing transportation.

The Members of this House are not familiar with this creek I refer to, which is also known as Hutchinson River. It empties into Eastchester Bay, an indentation 3 miles long and 1,000 feet to 1½ miles wide, in the north shore of Long Island Sound, immediately east of Throggs Neck, 12 miles west of the Connecticut State line, and 21 miles by water east of the Battery, New York City. Its course is 9 miles slightly west of north from the head of the bay. The navigable section of the creek is tidal, is 100 feet to 1,000 feet in width, and extends about 2½ miles above its mouth. The approach through the bay is approximately 600 feet wide, with a controlling depth of 5 feet at mean low water. Four bridges cross the creek, two near the mouth, one a highway bridge and the other a railroad bridge, one highway bridge at Boston Post Road, and the other at Fulton Avenue.

There has been no permanent improvement proposed since 1910. Since that time transportation has increased from 800 to 1,000 per cent, and it would increase considerably more if this river was improved by deepening and widening the channel so that larger boats could enter it. At the present time the channel is supposed to be 5 feet deep at low tide, but if it is not dredged out frequently it is less than that.

I have been petitioned by a number of business men both in Westchester County and Bronx County to try and get some permanent improvement; among those are—

Hon. James Berg, mayor city of Mount Vernon, N. Y.
J. F. Mahlsted, president Mahlsted Lumber & Coal Co.
G. T. Macbeth, representing the Westchester Lighting Co.
John F. Fee, secretary and treasurer William J. Fee Coal Co.
William Hart Hussey, secretary H. B. Pruser Coal Co.
Theodore S. Trimmer, president T. S. Trimmer Coal Co.
Frank J. Howard, representing the Sylvestre Oil Co.
Frank Zeltray, representing the Beacon Oil Co.
Philip Levene, president Pelham Manor Coal & Transfer Co.
Joseph S. Yendell, representing the Excelsior Lubrication Co.
Roy J. Garofano, vice president Garofano Construction Co.
Alfred F. Barbaresi, of A. Barbaresi & Son, builders and contractors.
A. P. Brooks, president the Wilson & Adams Co.
C. O. Beck, manager the Bang Service Station (Inc.).
A. Aurisy, secretary Hutchinson River Supply Co. (Inc.).
Petrillo Bros. (Inc.), Eastchester Creek.
James V. Petrillo, secretary Carlo Petrillo Dock & Supply Co.
Harold Ferlard, manager Valvoline Oil Co.
Suburban Lumber Co., Boston Road, Eastchester, N. Y.
The Home News of the Bronx, which enters the home of nearly every family in that county.
The Mount Vernon Argus, Mount Vernon, N. Y.
The Pelham News, Pelham, N. Y.
Hon. Thomas H. O'Neil.
Hon. Robert L. Moran, county clerk Bronx County.
Hon. Albert G. Halberstadt, president Century Mills Paper Co.
Hon. John J. Hanley.
Hon. Thomas J. McDonald.
Hon. Christopher C. McGrath.
Hon. William A. Keating.
Hon. Edwin W. Fiske.
August Miller.
Paul A. Vaccarelli.
Joseph A. Carey.
R. J. Jennings, president Eastchester Creek Association.
Daniel V. O'Connell and Hon. Edward R. Koch.

I would like to impress upon this body the great necessity of this waterway. The river is bounded on the north by Westchester County and the south by Bronx County. If the river was widened so that large boats could navigate it would be a great benefit to over one quarter of a million people, and there is no part of our country to-day that is building so rapidly as the northern end of the Bronx and the southern end of Westchester County, which takes in Yonkers, Mount Vernon, Pelham, and New Rochelle. At the present time at low tide it is extremely difficult for three or four boats to use this creek at the same time, and if this improvement is made, it would lower the prices on building materials, oils, fuel, and all kinds of merchandise, and I believe that our Government owes the people of this section the improvement such as I am asking for. I hope that the Rivers and Harbors Committee will favorably report this bill and that prompt action will be taken on it by the House.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House who wish to do so may extend their remarks in eulogy of the late JAMES A. GALLIVAN.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that all Members who wish to do so may extend their remarks in eulogy of the late Representative GALLIVAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DIRECT MARKETING OF HOGS

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by answering the argument of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] on the packers and stockyards bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, on February 29 the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] addressed the House on the subject of the Capper-Hope bill and the direct marketing of hogs. I have studied this question and have some facts and figures that should be welcomed. These relate to certain statements made by the gentleman from Kansas.

Of primary importance was a question as to whether or not the bill introduced by the gentleman from Kansas would affect smaller packers. He was asked how the owner or the manager of a particular plant in Iowa, for example, was going to buy his hogs unless he buys them direct from a farmer. The gentleman from Kansas stated that his bill would not affect such a situation at all and that he did not think his bill would apply to towns with no public stockyards. The fact of the matter is the bill by its very language positively is applicable to so-called smaller packing plants owning private receiving yards. The same question came up during recent hearings before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and at the hearing Dr. Arthur W. Miller, chief of the stockyards and packers division of the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, indicated very definitely that the bill would apply to such plants. The bill positively would be applicable to all packing houses, small as well as large, owning pens where they receive livestock direct from farmers who have elected to sell their property direct to the packer. We have such plants in St. Louis, and they as well as farmers who have been selling to them would be very severely affected by the unique proposal advanced by the gentleman from Kansas.

In St. Louis there are no public stockyards. There are yards across the Mississippi in East St. Louis, Ill. The farmers of Missouri and near-by States sell large numbers of their hogs direct to the packing plants in St. Louis to their entire satisfaction. If the gentleman's bill should ever pass, the ultimate result of its effect would be that the farmers of Missouri would have to haul or send their hogs right by the doors of our St. Louis packers, take them across the river into Illinois at an added expense of hauling, bridge tolls, and marketing charges, and then the St. Louis packers would have to go over into Illinois, buy these Missouri hogs, and haul them back into Missouri again, paying a heavy switching charge, having the animals damaged, bruised, and crippled by additional handling and generally encountering a heavy increase in the cost of their operations. The producer would receive fewer net dollars, the manufacturer's cost would be increased, and if the money wasted in this fashion could be made up at all it would have to mean a greater cost of meat.

Moreover, it would be a serious question whether our St. Louis packers doing business under such conditions could compete successfully with some other packers not situated as they are. Our packers could not move, because you can not put a packing house on wheels. Even if you could put a packing house on wheels, what benefit would that be to the farmers of Missouri, who now get the greatest possible returns for their pigs by selling them to the nearest buyer in St. Louis? The prices, incidentally, are based on the public terminal markets' prices, grade for grade. The economic loss resulting from any bill such as the gentleman's would amount to something between $50 and $75 a car—a loss which would have to be stood largely by the farmer, partly by the packer, and partly by the consumer.

The fact is that under the bill introduced by the gentleman from Kansas the Secretary of Agriculture—and nobody knows how some future Secretary might interpret the proposed law for some particular class or locality—may post as a public yards any packer or any shipper or any feeder or any farmers, or all of them, if they own or operate private yards. Also, the bill provides that any farmer selling to a posted stockyards privately owned by a shipping association or packer may complain to the Secretary of Agriculture, whereupon the Secretary may hold a hearing on behalf of the discontented farmer in any way the Secretary desires. There is nothing in the bill to give the privately owned posted yards a guaranty that it will be cited for a hearing only when there is reasonable ground for a hearing. Some one might just imagine that he had a grievance and still throw the private yards into a hearing. If the shipper or shipping association manager were forced to go to such a hearing his work would absolutely cease while he was so occupied. When small organizations like the packers we have in St. Louis, various parts of the Corn Belt, and elsewhere as well, are forced to appear, their chief operating officers must stop their operating and productive work and busy themselves with preparing for and attending whatever hearing they might be called upon to attend.

The gentleman might also be interested in observing that a great majority of the farmers in the Corn Belt and in the West are unalterably opposed to his bill which, while it ostensibly is directed at preventing packers from buying livestock direct, actually would have the effect of preventing farmers, individually or collectively, as the case might be, from selling their livestock direct, and the testimony is that they have found it extremely profitable to do so inasmuch as by so doing they are able to market their stock in the most economical manner, saving themselves heavy marketing charges.

Among other organizations that have opposed this legislation is the Iowa Cooperative Livestock Shippers, which is a State federation of local cooperative shipping associations of Iowa. There are approximately 640 shipping associations in Iowa and those associations have about 100,000 members. They handle approximately 60,000 carloads of livestock a year, mainly hogs. The position taken by the Iowa Cooperative Shippers has been that this bill would restrict the number of outlets available for selling their livestock. There are in Iowa 19 so-called concentration yards owned by packers and 13 packing plants. Each and every one of these so-called concentration yards and 13 local plants purchases livestock direct from farmers or farmers' cooperatives. There are several plants, especially in such States as Iowa, Minnesota, and adjacent States that purchase 100 per cent of their livestock direct from farmers or from farmers' cooperatives. The farmers of various localities have found it profitable to sell direct to packers and they are against any legislation which would prevent them from continuing to do so. They are selling this year in one State alone more than 4,000,000 hogs direct to packers.

It may also be of interest to know that the American National Livestock Association, the Oregon Cattle Raisers' Association, the Nebraska Stock Growers' Association, the Utah Cooperative Livestock Exchange, the Wyoming Stock Growers' Association, the Texas Cattle Raisers' Association, the Fayette County (Ohio) Producers' Co. and a large number of other important cooperative and farmers' associations are opposed to the bill and to the idea embodied in it.

The opposition of the farmers' cooperatives and shipping associations has been so strong that, as was to be expected, proponents of this legislation have drafted amendments which purport to exempt them from the operation of the measure. That might be all very well, but such an amendment would not help the individual farmers, or even the cooperative associations, who desire to sell their own property to some packer a few miles away and to whom for years they have been selling hogs to their entire satisfaction; that is, getting the high dollar for the fruits of the farmers' own labor in raising the hogs for market. The best evidence that this system of marketing has been satisfactory to millions of individual farmers all over the United States is that they continue to sell their hogs this way and not a few who used to sell their animals entirely in the terminal markets are now following the practice of selling their animals direct to some conveniently located packing house. Some individual farmers have been selling their hogs this way for 30 or 40 years, and even if cooperative and shipping associations should be exempted from the operations of this bill, in so far as posting their yards and so on is concerned, the bill still would prohibit freedom of action on the part of farmers individually and collectively who want to sell their own hogs direct and packers who want to buy the farmer's hogs direct. If you eliminate a buyer, you at the same time affect sellers, because, obviously, you can not sell direct if somebody else is prevented from buying direct. Here is an arrangement that is mutually satisfactory to buyer and seller. Personally, I do not believe that Congress will ever even seriously consider abridging the individual's right of contract and freedom of action in any such manner as is proposed.

The gentleman made some other statements during the course of his remarks which were—unintentionally, I am sure—not quite accurate, or at least they were not complete.

The gentleman charged that packers who own private yards at terminal markets are depressing prices on those markets by buying a portion of their hog requirements direct from farmers or direct at their plants from farmers and their associations and cooperatives.

The fact that packers located at the terminal markets may have bought some of their hog requirements through private yards and, therefore, will need to buy fewer hogs on that particular market in no way tends to depress hog prices because the supply to be sold on the market has been reduced along with the demand. It is obvious that the reduction in the supply automatically offsets any reduction in demand.

The gentleman then infers that the present low level of hog prices is a result of manipulation of the livestock market. I have found some very interesting figures touching on this point; figures which show conclusively that the lower level of hog prices is a direct result of the lower prices which packers obtained for pork. For example, I have compared the price of fresh and cured pork products on the Chicago market on March 1 of 1928 with the prices of those same products on March 1, 1927. I have a table taken from official figures issued by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the United States Department of Agriculture. It shows interesting comparisons:

Pork prices at Chicago; fresh pork products

	Mar. 1, 1928	Mar. 1, 1927	Amount of decline	Per cent of decline
Loins 10/12	$13.75	$22.50	$8.75	39
Skinned shoulders	11.00	16.50	5.50	33⅓
Spare ribs	9.00	15.00	6.00	40
Boston butts	13.25	20.25	7.00	34

Cured pork products week ending February 25

	1928	1927	Amount of decline	Per cent of decline
Hams, smoked, regular No. 1 12/14	$22.00	$28.00	$6.00	21
Hams, smoked, skinned No. 1 16/18	20.00	28.50	8.50	30
Picnics, smoked 4/8	16.50	18.50	2.00	11
Bacon, No. 1 6/8	30.00	34.50	4.50	13
Backs, dry salt 12/14	11.00	14.25	3.25	23
Lard, refined	11.00	14.38	3.38	24

It will be noted from these tables that declines in the nine principal pork products have ranged from 40 to 11 per cent, with an arithmetical average decline of 26.5 per cent. In the case of four fresh-pork items shown the declines have averaged 36.6 per cent. Against this we have a decline of only 31 per cent in the price of hogs at Chicago on March 1, 1928, as compared with March 1, 1927, according to figures published by the Chicago Daily Drovers Journal. These figures show clearly, in my opinion, that the decline in hog prices is due to one thing—a parallel and equal decline in the price of pork.

In other words, regardless of the decline in the export demand and regardless of whether or not there has been an increase in the hog supply and hog marketings, hog prices went down because the consumer would not absorb our pork supply except at lower levels, which necessitated declines in wholesale pork prices as much as 8¾ cents per pound. It is unnecessary, I am sure, to point out that when a packer is forced to sell his meat at wholesale at drastically lower levels, a decline in hog prices is inevitable.

The gentleman from Kansas confessed he did not know whether there has been an increase in the supply of hogs. It is interesting to observe that during January, 1928, the receipts of hogs at the seven leading markets were 20 per cent greater than during January, 1927, and, furthermore, during February, 1928, receipts of hogs at these seven leading markets were 60 per cent greater than during February of last year. The aggregate increase for the two months over the same two months of last year was 38 per cent. Surely these figures indicate clearly that the supply of hogs coming to market has increased and furnishes in itself ample reason for a corresponding decrease in the prices which have been paid for those hogs.

Disregarding the present situation, however, the gentleman stated that the drop in the prices of hogs took place about seven months ago. That is true. Prices of hogs seven months ago were appreciably lower than they had been one year before that. According to figures published by the Drovers' Journal, the average hog price at Chicago during July, 1927, was 28 per cent below the price for July, 1926. The price in August, 1927, was 21 per cent below the price in August, 1926; but prices of pork products at that time showed even greater declines. The figures of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics for the week ending July 30, 1927, and the corresponding week of 1926 are shown in another tabulation.

Pork prices at Chicago

	Week ending July 30, 1927	Week ending Aug. 1, 1926	Amount of decline	Per cent of decline
Loins 10/12	$23.10	$25.40	$2.30	9
Skinned shoulders	12.00	18.50	6.50	35
Spare ribs	10.50	14.00	3.50	25
Boston butts	15.50	23.40	7.90	34
Regular smoked hams	22.00	37.00	15.00	60
Smoked picnics	17.00	24.50	7.50	30
Bacon	32.00	44.00	12.00	27
Dry salt backs	12.50	17.50	5.00	29
Refined lard	12.00	17.50	5.50	30

We see from this table that the decrease of 21 to 28 per cent in the price of hogs was accompanied by an equal decline in the wholesale prices of pork products. Thus, whether we look at the figures for a week ago or seven months ago, or any other time, we only find proof that the price of hogs is determined by what consumers are willing to pay for the amount of pork which those hogs produce. It was the lower price of pork, gentlemen, and not direct marketing or alleged market manipulation which has been responsible for the lower level of hog prices.

At another point the gentleman asks that producers be permitted to sell their hogs on a competitive and open market instead of one which is under the absolute "control" of the purchaser. The producer is entirely free to do this now if he so desires. Official figures issued by the United States Department of Agriculture show that two-thirds of the entire hog supply is marketed through the public markets, which always have been considered open and competitive. Furthermore, the one-third of the hog supply which is marketed direct to the packer is marketed in that way only because the producer chooses to market his hogs that way. If the producers were not satisfied with the prices and conditions which they obtain in selling direct, it is obvious that they would market all of their livestock through the public markets, or in some other way. No producer is compelled to send his hogs direct to any packer. He does so only because he chooses to do so.

The gentleman next turns his attention to the technique of country buying. He infers that packers select a favorite dealer in each town, authorize him to pay higher prices than the market in order to drive competitors out of business and thereby create a monopoly for themselves in that community. Then, the gentleman says, the packers apportion and divide territory so that they will not have to compete with each other. In this same connection, however, representatives of the United States Department of Agriculture point out that every Iowa county has from 2 to 14 outlets for its hogs, and all but 9 counties have 4 or more buying agencies.

The statement that packers apportion territory among themselves is unsubstantiated by the gentleman, probably because he can point to no instance of apportionment. If, however, the packers have attempted to apportion territory among themselves such fact would constitute no argument whatever in favor of additional legislation. Anyone with the slightest knowledge of the antitrust acts well knows that under the provisions of the Sherman Act any agreement by the packers to apportion territory is now and has been unlawful ever since the enactment of that law in 1891. Aside from this, however, section 202, Clause F, of the packers and stockyards act of 1921, reads as follows:

> It shall be unlawful for any packer to (f) conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person (1) to apportion territory for carrying on business in commerce, or (2) to apportion purchases or sales of any article in commerce, or (3) to manipulate or control prices in commerce.

We thus see that the laws of the United States now in full force and effect are ample to correct any situation such as the gentleman has described. All that he or those who are urging passage of this bill need to do in this connection is to bring the facts to the attention of the Secretary of Agriculture for the filing of complaint. No additional legislation whatever is necessary.

The gentleman then makes the statement that, as a result of what he describes as the selected shipper plan, the packers are enabled to get the best hogs in any territory without competition, with the result that the inferior hogs are shipped to the central markets and thus set the price for good hogs which are produced direct. The fact is that the packers do not make a practice of taking only selected hogs when they buy direct. In most cases they take entire droves which may contain hogs of all grades, with the result that there still is a plentiful supply of choice hogs being shipped to the central markets. Even when the packer does buy only choice grades direct he is obliged to pay the price for such grades which has been established on the central markets each day, and the law of supply and demand establishes a separate price for each grade and weight. Incidentally, hundreds of buyers are on each of the terminal markets, not just the buyers of packers who buy in the country. The prices of these different grades are readily available to producers through Government reports, radio, and newspapers, and by the telephone.

There is no justification, therefore, for the charge that direct marketing of choice grades of hog results in depressing the prices for the choice grades, The contrary is nearer the truth. Choice hogs are in great demand on all terminal markets. If some have been bought direct in the country, it would seem to follow that the supply on the terminal markets would be lessened, but the demand would be almost the same; hence the price should be higher than otherwise would be the case.

I find also a statement to the effect that there is no agency to guarantee the farmer fair grading and weighing on his direct shipments, since the packer himself fixes the grade, weight, and price. In commenting on this unfair inference I should like to point out that the very fact that farmers continue to market their hogs direct to packers, and in many cases have been doing so for 20 or 30 years, and that the fact that this practice has been increasing during recent years, indicates clearly that the grading, weighing, and pricing are satisfactory to the farmer, otherwise he would not market his hogs in that manner.

At another point the gentleman states that in a good many cases the producer of hogs who does not "stand in" with the packers can not sell his hogs at all. Surely any producer anywhere can ship his hogs to one of the public markets whenever he wishes and get them sold promptly regardless of whether he is or is not in favor with some packer. No farmer needs favors from some packer. The farmer has hogs and the packer must have his raw material. It is a business proposition purely and simply.

The next of the statements on which I wish to comment is one to the effect that the packer who has bought some of his hogs direct lays off the public market until later in the day, with the result that there is no competition all day and with the effect that hog prices are lowered. I should like to point out that the time of day in which the buying takes place in no way affects competition. The plain fact is, however, that hog prices are determined by the total supply of hogs and the total demand for hogs—as influenced by the demand from consumers of pork—and not by the time or place or method of purchase.

As a matter of fact, staying out of the market in the early part of the day is not a new practice nor one which can be attributed to direct marketing. It is merely a phase of buying and is directly comparable to the case where a market agency will hold its hogs at higher prices than the market during the first part of the day.

Staying out of the market is not, however, practiced to any extent. The bulk of the packers are willing to bid, and do bid, on hogs soon after they are yarded and presented for sale. There is occasionally a situation where buyer's and seller's views as to price do not immediately meet to the extent of promptly causing an active market, and sometimes things are dull for an hour or two while this adjustment is going on, but it does not take as long for buyer and seller to meet on the price of livestock as it does on many other articles; some are quicker; some are longer.

We do not believe there has been any reason for complaint in recent years because of lack of bids reasonably early in the morning from buyers, and even if there was less activity for longer periods it would have no bearing on the direct marketing problem.

The gentleman then quotes the Secretary of Agriculture to the effect that the direct marketing system will, in fact, if it has not already done so, impair and ultimately break down the open competitive public markets where livestock is bought and sold, and where prices are established. In this the present Secretary does not agree with his predecessor, Henry C. Wallace.

Direct marketing in no way imperils the existence of the central markets. It is obvious that the many packers who have enormous sums of money invested at the central markets are as interested as anyone alse in maintaining the markets at which they are established. Moreover, the great bulk of the buying is done through the central markets.

As for the suggestion that direct marketing already may have broken down the public markets, I think I need only call attention to the combined increase of 38 per cent in the receipts of hogs at the seven leading markets during January and February of this year as compared with the same two months of last year. From these figures it would seem that the open competitive markets were healthy and flourishing.

It is only fair to observe that charges which have been made from time to time against the packing industry have been quickly disproven by mere reference to official Government figures showing livestock prices, meat prices, and the rate of packers' profits.

In conclusion, I wish only to point out that producers of livestock and their representatives in Congress need not fear that direct marketing will bring about the downfall of the central markets, or that it will in any way affect adversely the price of hogs. What they should fear is the effect of unwise legislation which would restrict the processes of the packing industry, for such action would only curtail the outlets and marketing privileges of the livestock producers themselves. The Hope bill they should fear for an additional reason, namely, that even if amended it would tend to discourage cooperative direct marketing of livestock.

It is a fundamental principle of cooperative marketing and good marketing practice for individual farmers to get the produce of the farms to what is termed the farmer's consumer by the most direct route possible—passing by the door of the middlemen wherever possible or desirable. This is exactly what is being done now and increasingly developed in the marketing of livestock direct to packers. The economic saving by this method amounts to $50 or more per car of livestock marketed, some of this accruing to the producer and some to the packer. It also helps the consumer because it tends to decrease the spread between the farm and the table, a thing which for years has been recognized as being highly desirable for producers and consumers as well.

The packers in St. Louis who will be affected if this bill becomes a law number over 50. Many are in my district, and their existence practically depends upon their ability to purchase part of their kill direct.

Several thousand of my constituents who are now employed by these packers will also be affected if the business of their employers is curtailed.

Missouri has just completed a $90,000,000 good-roads program, the Federal aid being advanced in part to afford good roads for the farmer to bring his products to market by truck. Thousands are now saving freight rates by using these roads, and they will resent any attempt to prevent them from marketing their hogs direct to the packer where they receive the market quotations without any deductions for yardage, water, feed, and so forth.

FLOOD PROTECTION ON WHITE RIVER, ARK.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution 135 and consider the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution 135 and consider the same in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 135) making an emergency appropriation for flood protection on White River, Ark.

Whereas the disastrous floods of 1927 destroyed millions of dollars' worth of property along the White River, State of Arkansas; and

Whereas the efforts to hold the levees along that stream exhausted the entire resources of the levee districts; and

Whereas the funds to build said levees and keep them in repair is raised by a tax levied on the lands; and

Whereas the last dollar under the constitution these lands can be taxed for that purpose has been exhausted; and

Whereas the Government under the flood control act has assumed jurisdiction over these levees; and

Whereas these levees are now being threatened with destruction by a flood now raging on White River; and

Whereas there are no available funds appropriated to strengthen and hold these levees against the impending flood: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be required, to be expended under the direction of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army and the Mississippi River Commission to strengthen and hold levees on the White River in Woodruff and Monroe Counties, Ark.

SEC. 2. The Chief of Engineers of the United States Army or the Mississippi River Commission, or both, are hereby authorized to expend said sum, or so much thereof as may be required, to strengthen or hold said levees.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the preamble.

The question was taken, and the preamble was stricken out.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. REID of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the conference report on the bill (S. 3740) for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to call up the conference report on the bill (S. 3740) and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

And the House agree to the same.

Pursuant to House Concurrent Resolution No. 34, it is recommended that in the first proviso to section 10 the words "board created in section 1 of this act" be stricken out, and in lieu thereof the words "Mississippi River Commission" be inserted.

On No. 23: Strikes out the language, proposed by the Senate, and inserts the language, proposed by the House, with the additional provision that for levee work on the Mississippi River between Rock Island, Ill., and Cape Girardeau, Mo., the States or levee districts shall provide rights of way, pay one-third of the work, and maintain the levees when completed.

SECTION 7

On No. 24: Strikes out the words "below Cape Girardeau, Mo.," as proposed by the Senate, so that the emergency fund may be used for rescue work or repair or maintenance on any of the tributaries of the Mississippi.

On No. 25: Inserts the language, proposed by the House, which would authorize the emergency fund to be used to repair levees destroyed by the flood of 1927.

SECTION 8

On No. 26: Inserts the new paragraph at the end of the section, as proposed by the House, providing that the salary of the president of the Mississippi River Commission shall be $10,000, and the salary of the other members of the commission shall be $7,500.

SECTION 9

On No. 27: Strikes out the entire section, as proposed by the Senate, and inserts the language, proposed by the House, providing that the provisions of sections 13, 14, 16, and 17 of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, shall be applicable to all lands, waters, easements, and other property and rights acquired or constructed under the provisions of this act.

SECTION 10

On No. 28: Inserts the language, proposed by the House, providing that the surveys authorized by the river and harbor act of January 21, 1927, in addition to those set forth in House Document No. 308, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, shall be prosecuted as speedily as practicable.

On Nos. 29 and 30: Strikes out the language, proposed by the Senate, and inserts the language, proposed by the House, naming the tributaries for which flood-control projects shall be prepared.

On No. 31: Inserts the new paragraph at the end of the section, as proposed by the House, with the additional provisions that the flood-control projects on the tributaries of the Mississippi shall be submitted to Congress, and that the forestry investigation may be undertaken by such other agencies as the President may deem proper as well as by the Secretary of Agriculture.

SECTION 11

On No. 32: Strikes out the language, proposed by the Senate, and inserts the language, proposed by the House, to the effect that if the levee between Tiptonville, Tenn., and the Obion River, in Tennessee, is found feasible and is approved by the President, it shall be built.

SECTIONS 13 AND 14

On No. 33: Inserts the two new sections, proposed by the House, section 13 providing for a modification of the flood-control project on the Sacramento River, Calif., and section 14 providing that contracts for the sale of land shall contain a provision that no Member of Congress is interested in the sale.

The conferees have agreed to recommend that section 10 be amended to provide that the surveys of the tributaries shall be reviewed by the Mississippi River Commission instead of the planning board. This change is recommended in order to make this section consistent with the provision in section 1 that the planning board shall have no power or authority except to consider the engineering differences between the two plans for flood control on the lower Mississippi. This recommendation of the conferees was authorized by House Concurrent Resolution No. 34, adopted by the House and Senate on May 7, 1928.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. REID of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to yield to me for five minutes.

Mr. REID of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, first I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this flood control bill as now reported by the conferees is accepted, as I understand it, by the Attorney General and by those who were in the President's conference. They have agreed to it as a compromise, and to my mind it is a very satisfactory compromise, depending upon the legal interpretation that is to be had hereafter. I shall speak of one or two points which were in controversy and were discussed in the House quite fully during debate upon the bill. In section 3, it will be remembered, there is a provision relating to forcing waters across the Mississippi River by reason of levees constructed by the Government, and the consequent damage to those living on the opposite side of the river. In section 3 there has now been inserted this provision:

lands in such stretch of the river subjected to overflow and damage which are not now overflowed or damaged by reason of the construction of levees on the opposite banks of the river.

Any additional damage caused by the Government should be paid, so far as the damage is concerned. The only criticism that rises in my mind is whether or not the Government should buy the flowage rights instead of permitting the damage to be recovered by court action.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee rose.

Mr. FREAR. In just a moment. In section 4 the same result, apparently, is reached, to be determined by legal construction of the word "additional" inserted before "destructive flood waters." The chairman of the committee will correct me if I am not stating this correctly. That word provides, in effect, that in these flood ways, where they have been used heretofore for flood ways, no damage can be collected from the Government unless it is "additional" damage due to the construction of levees. Where the use of the flood ways creates additional overflow because of greater floods caused by the works, then the Government might properly be held responsible to the extent of providing land for such additional overflow or flowage rights. Actual damages to be recovered by court action would be preferable.

Those are the two principal provisions in controversy. Of course, the effect of this change is to strike out the enormous expenditure of two or three hundred million dollars for buying up whole flood ways that we have had in the bill heretofore.

Mr. BOX rose.

THE ADMINISTRATION PLAN ACCEPTED BY CONFEREES IS 100 PER CENT BETTER THAN THE SENATE BILL

Mr. FREAR. In just a moment. A third proposition which, to my mind, is important provides that benefits shall be charged or credited or offset against any damages, which is certainly proper and has been our contention at all times. The commission feature now in the bill is, of course, far preferable to that which was provided in the Senate bill, and the bill as presented to you by the conferees, as influenced by the advice of the President and his advisers, in my judgment is 100 per cent better than the bill as it came from the Senate. It is also far preferable to the bill that was discussed here in the House. As long as it is also acceptable to those who have the final say in its determination, I am satisfied with it. [Applause.]

A brief examination has only been afforded of all the amendments, but the conference report on the flood control bill in some respects presents an entirely different bill from that which passed the Senate unanimously or that which was afterwards reported to the House by the House committee and thereafter passed.

A VETO WOULD HAVE BEEN SUSTAINED. IT WILL NOT BE NEEDED NOW TO GET FAIR FLOOD LEGISLATION

In the week's discussion of the flood control bill when before the House different objectionable features connected with the bill were pointed out, apparently successfully, judged by the final vote of April 24 to recommit the bill and substitute the measure recommended by the Attorney General. On this motion 139 votes for recommittal with 28 pairs totaled 167 votes for the substitute proposal and gave positive assurance that in case of a veto of the flood control bill because of its objectionable features, such veto would be sustained by the House.

With that certainty the Executive, with the aid of the Attorney General and Chief of Engineers, has been able to secure modifications of the bill so that it is far less objectionable than the bill passed by the House as stated, and it is a vast improvement over the carelessly drawn bill passed by the Senate.

No attempt will be made to point out all of the important changes in a bill which it was predicted by Army engineers would cost the Federal Government from $1,000,000,000 to $1,500,000,000 as passed by the Senate, although a misleading amount of $325,000,000 was carried in the Senate bill.

NOT TO COST MUCH MORE THAN THE ARMY ENGINEERS' PLAN

Several specific amendments accepted by the conferees have been briefly referred to. Their adoption ought to materially reduce the cost estimate to an amount not far in excess of the $300,000,000 in round numbers estimated for the General Jadwin plan of flood control rejected in its local contribution features by both House and Senate bills.

A provision inserted in the Attorney General's substitute bill offered on the motion to recommit required that States or local interests furnish rights of way for flood-way levees and also a provision recommended by the Army engineer's plan for small local contributions are omitted from the conferees' bill. To that extent it is a departure from the policy heretofore adopted by the Federal Government. It also affords invitation for subsequent flood-control projects to evade contribution because of this precedent.

The following changes, however, in the original Senate and House bills are of vast importance, and in substance far overshadow the objections mentioned:

First. The amendment accepted by the conferees under section 1 now provides that the President shall determine the flood plans and other important questions which are to be submitted to him, and that the board temporarily formed for the purpose of recommending plans shall have no power or authority in respect to the project excepting to recommend to the President. This places responsibility with the Executive, and is a protection to the Government not afforded by the original bills, that left large powers to a mixed politically formed board.

Second. The commission or board, consisting of the Chief of Engineers, the president of the Mississippi River Commission, and a civil engineer, with duties confined to a submission of Mississippi River plans, is infinitely preferable to the commission provided in the Senate bill that, as stated, was reasonably certain to develop into a political commission in course of time. Proposals in other bills to have many millions of dollars of existing levee indebtedness assumed by the Federal Government through action by such commission affords an understanding of a danger that has been thus avoided.

$71,000,000 RAILWAY PAYMENT STRICKEN OUT

Third. The provision contained in section 4 of the Senate bill and also as reported in the House bill granting unlimited damages to public-service corporations has been stricken from the bill. The provision, urged by railway engineers before our committee, contemplated a payment by the Federal Government to their roads of over $71,000,000 for relocating their roads in the flood ways and elsewhere. That provision has been eliminated from the bill by the conferees.

Fourth. Under the House bill as passed by the House it was provided in section 3 that the Government should acquire absolute ownership of land or floodage rights where lands along the banks of the Mississippi River are damaged by the construction of flood-control works.

This provision as passed by the House might have included lands heretofore subject to flowage all along the river and would have occasioned heavy expense to the Government because of that fact.

As reported by the conferees, section 3 is now changed so as to provide liability only "for damages for lands not now overflowed." This amendment is not subject to reasonable objection, although the provision is subject to difficulties and possibly unnecessary expenditures because the Government will not be limited to "damages" to be collected by court procedure but upon proof of damages not heretofore suffered it may be the duty of the Federal Government to acquire absolute ownership or flowage rights to such lands.

The distinction between a remedy of damages and an alternative of purchasing flowage rights was discussed when the flood-control bill was before the House and also by the Attorney General's substitute, which limited relief for damages to damage suits.

Fifth. The main cause of contention throughout the debate of several days was section 4, which provided that the Government should provide flowage rights for 4,000,000 acres of land or for any additional or less amount required for the flood ways.

Army engineers have estimated these costs would reach from $25 to $75 per acre, and presumably would cost the Government through condemnation suits or purchase over $200,000,000 just for flowage rights in the flood ways. It was also disclosed that 17 per cent of the owners of flood way lands owned 77 per cent of such lands.

BILL NOW STRIKES OUT 4,000,000 ACRE PURCHASE

The conferees, according to the report, have changed section 4 in two particulars, as stated, first by inserting the word "additional" before the words "destructive flood waters," so that it is understood the Government will only be liable for any new or additional damages in the flood ways that may be occasioned by the construction of flood-control works. If this construction is correct—and it has been passed upon by the Attorney General—then it will avoid any necessity for purchasing the 4,000,000 acres of lands which have heretofore been subject to overflow. Only a small fraction of such lands will be subjected to new overflow according to the engineers. This was an indefensible objection to the Senate and House bill which is now eliminated.

A second material amendment to section 4 has been agreed upon in the conferees' report, which provides "that in all cases where the execution of the flood-control plan herein adopted results in benefits to property such benefits shall be taken into consideration by way of reducing the amount of compensation to be paid." This recognizes and puts into effect the policy of offsetting benefits against damages, and is an important protection to the Government not recognized in the bill as passed by the House.

LOCAL CONTRIBUTION OF ONE-THIRD OF COSTS HEREAFTER TO BE DECLARED

Sixth. An important provision not found in the Senate bill but reported in the House bill is that which provides that in work on the tributaries "local interests shall provide rights of way without cost to the United States, contribute 33⅓ per cent of the cost of the works, and maintain the works after completion." This provision sets forth a flood policy hereafter to be adopted by the Federal Government.

The modifications in the bill speak for themselves, and were made possible by the fact that without modifications there was strong possibility that the bill could not become law, due to Executive opposition. To the President and his advisers belongs the credit for removing some of the most objectionable features of the bill.

In its present form the bill is not entirely all that could be desired to protect the Government, but due to the threatening situation in the Mississippi Valley flood-control works must be constructed without delay. For this reason in their efforts to reach a satisfactory compromise the conferees of both Senate and House are entitled to commendation from every friend of and sympathizer with the flood-control problem.

To those minority members of the committee, and to the Members of the House who by their action and vote on the motion to recommit brought about a situation that protected the rights of the Federal Government, thanks are due. As stated at the outset of the discussion, we have a responsibility toward the Federal Government as well as to our own States and local constituencies, and that has been fairly recognized in mutual efforts to secure a satisfactory bill.

Mr. REID of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the action of the managers on the part of the House for the splendid work they have done in reaching an agreement on this bill. I think they did good work, and they deserve a great deal of credit for what they did. They had some very serious difficulties to overcome in order to get an agreement and get a bill that would be satisfactory. Of course, as will often happen, however, some unwise provisions have crept into the bill, and I want to call attention to one of those provisions. I think I should do that at this time, before the bill becomes a law, because I think sooner or later it will be necessary for Congress to amend the bill.

In section 6 it is provided that the fund appropriated under the bill may be expended for the construction of flood works and levees on the Mississippi between Rock Island and Cape

Girardeau, Mo.; but on that part of the river the local levee districts or the States under this provision have to provide not only the ground where the levees are built but will have to furnish 33⅓ per cent of the funds for the construction of the levees and maintain them after they are built. Of course, you understand that below Cape Girardeau, Mo., the Government pays all of the costs of constructing the levees, but above Cape Girardeau the local districts will be required to pay 33⅓ per cent of the cost. I do not think there is any justification for such a distinction on different parts of the Mississippi River. It is also provided that on the tributaries of the Mississippi River, which are affected by the floods of the Mississippi, the local districts have to pay 33⅓ per cent of the levees on those tributaries. Let me show you the injustice of that. I am not criticizing the conferees or the committee. I think they did the best they could do, but I merely wish to call the attention of the House to the injustice of that provision. Let me illustrate it by the city of Cairo, Ill. Cairo is situated on the narrow point where the Ohio and the Mississippi come together. On the Mississippi side the Government will pay for all expenses of flood protection. Just around the point on the other side of the city—the city faces both rivers—where the Mississippi River water backs up into the Ohio, just as high as in the Mississippi, the city might have to pay 33⅓ per cent of the cost of levee protection upon that side. The Mississippi River causes the danger on both sides of the city. On one side the city might have to pay one-third of the flood protection, while on the other side the Government will pay it all.

Mr. NEWTON. What is the reason for the distinction?

Mr. DENISON. There is no reason, but I assume the conferees had to accept that or not have any legislation. Sooner or later Congress will have to correct that provision. The Mississippi River, in the flood of 1927, cut across into the Ohio River above the city of Cairo, and ran entirely around the city, so you can see that the Mississippi River flood is often the only source of danger to the city of Cairo. So the same rule as to costs ought to apply on both sides of the city, because the source of danger is usually the same.

I merely use the situation at Cairo as an illustration of the point I am trying to make with reference to one provision of the bill as agreed to by the conferees. As a matter of fact, we all understand that Cairo will be protected by the flood way provided across the river in Missouri, especially if the Jadwin plan adopted by the bill is not changed by the action of the board. If the board should change the Jadwin plan for the protection of Cairo, and if a plan to protect Cairo would provide only for levees, then we can all see that a great injustice will have been done to the people of Cairo and to Mound City and Mounds, just above Cairo. Cairo can not stand higher levees. Cairo will not be secure until the flood level of the Mississippi River is materially reduced, as provided in the Jadwin plan. If the board should unfortunately decide to reject the Jadwin plan for the protection of Cairo and approve a plan for higher levees there, I would be compelled to file a bill to amend the flood control bill at least to the extent of providing that the same rule with reference to paying for the costs of levees should apply on the tributaries of the Mississippi River as far as they are directly affected by the floods of the Mississippi River. Every reason that would justify the payment of all costs by the Government for levees on the Mississippi River would suggest that the Government pay all costs of levees on the tributaries of the Mississippi River as far back as such tributaries are directly flooded by the waters of the Mississippi River. Above those points there is justification for an apportionment of costs to local levee districts for constructing levees on the tributaries. The Mississippi River floods endanger Mounds and Mound City just above Cairo on the Ohio River when the Ohio River is in flood, and the Government should pay all costs for the protection of those cities. But if the Jadwin plan is followed and the flood level of the Mississippi River at Cairo is lowered by a diversion channel on the opposite side, then, of course, Cairo and Mound City will alike be fully protected. And I wish to say that the people of Cairo and southern Illinois are depending upon full adherence by the board to the Jadwin plan for their protection.

Mr. REID of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. REID of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the important changes are only three in number. I will begin backwards. In the first section we provided for the planning board composed of the Chief of Engineers, the president of the Mississippi River Commission, and one civil engineer. In that same section we provided that they should have no other power or authority except to try to make the two flood-control plans consistent.

In section 10 it was provided in the bill as it passed both Houses that certain surveys of the tributaries and reservoirs be referred to this same board. To make it consistent with the provision in section 1 the conferees recommend that section 10 be amended so that the surveys of the tributaries will be reviewed by the Mississippi River Commission instead of by the planning board. That change was authorized by House Concurrent Resolution No. 34, which was adopted here yesterday.

The next important section is the so-called flowage-rights section. I think we have the language corrected to meet the views of nearly everyone in the House. The United States will not now have to pay for flowage rights over lands now used in conducting the destructive water from the main Mississippi Rived. It was cured very simply by the addition of the word "additional." If the work puts any additional flood destruction on those lands, that must be provided for. In the same paragraph it was provided in the House amendment that the diversion must be regulated or controlled or confined. We struck those words out and referred it to the board.

Then the only other provision was the so-called Garrett amendment. We changed the House amendment so that the additional damage caused by the construction work would come within their purview as the objection was made to giving them the right to collect damages.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I observe there has been inserted in that amendment which vitally affects the interests of my State the words, "not now flooded or damaged." I would like to ask the gentleman this question: As is well understood by the gentleman and the gentleman's committee, by reason of work on the opposite side now in existence, and by reason of work that will be erected in the future, not only levees that will cause water to come over on Tennessee that does not belong there, but also revetment work for the protection of the west bank levees, in all probability there is going to be a continuation and increase of the bank erosion on the east side. Does the gentleman think, under the language as it now reads, the damage by erosion will be taken care of?

Mr. REID of Illinois. I will answer that by saying to you that I do not think the additional words change your position one bit, and if you refer to the paragraph you will see why. The paragraph now reads:

> No liability of any kind shall attach to or rest upon the United States for any damage from or by floods or flood waters at any place: Provided, however, That if in carrying out the purposes of this act it shall be found that upon any stretch of the banks of the Mississippi River it is impracticable to construct levees, either because such construction is not economically justified or because such construction would unreasonably restrict the flood channel, and lands in such stretch of the river are subjected to overflow and damage which are not now overflowed or damaged by reason of the construction of levees on the opposite banks of the river it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers to institute proceedings on behalf of the United States Government to acquire either the absolute ownership of the lands so subjected to overflow and damage or floodage rights over such lands.

And then the words that the gentleman objected to, "which are not now overflowed or damaged." I think if it can not be economically justified they must find a substitute, and that substitute, in my opinion, would be to acquire flowage rights made necessary by the construction on the other side of the river.

I do not think the addition of those words makes any change in the amendment the gentleman submitted.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And if the original amendment embraced erosion, and the words "not now flooded or damaged" retained, the gentleman thinks it would still embrace erosion?

Mr. REID of Illinois. My idea is that any flood-control works erected under this act, thereby damaging the land on the other side to a different extent from that existing before the flood-control works were erected, would come within that amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The question of national liability is recognized in the amendment?

Mr. REID of Illinois. Yes. It is the first time it has been recognized that it is a duty to take care of that side of the river.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Only by reason of additional damage due to the works constructed under this act?

Mr. REID of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REID of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. We have levees constructed doing damage now. The levees on the other side have caused us damage.

Mr. REID of Illinois. All right. The amendment you submitted makes it the duty to provide levees. Failure to provide levees because not economically justified makes it necessary to pay flowage rights or damages on those that exist at the present time.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REID of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BOX. The gentleman provides additional damages done by reason of the increased flow, as I understand it. How will such damages be ascertained?

Mr. REID of Illinois. There is no method provided under the bill.

Mr. BOX. Will they have the right to proceed in court for the collection of such damages?

Mr. REID of Illinois. This is the first time that any right has been recognized on the part of the individual owner against the Government for any flood-control damages.

Mr. BOX. And does the gentleman believe we will have the right to proceed in court for the collection of such damage without the permission of Congress hereafter?

Mr. REID of Illinois. I think it creates a right, and I presume every right in court follows the creation of that right.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REID of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I call attention to the fact that there is no inhibition in the project with reference to the construction of revetments on the bluff side and that, as a matter of fact, revetments have been constructed in the vicinity of Natchez on the bluff side.

Mr. REID of Illinois. In regard to the question raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], I think his criticism is not well directed for the reason that the project takes care of Cairo and consequently it would come within the project whether or not that happens to be on the Ohio side or the Illinois side. That was my construction of it, that Cairo was a part of the project and consequently it would be necessary to take care of Cairo because it was within the project and would not come within the so-called tributary section. I think those are the main points, and I think we have gone over them fully.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REID of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The gentleman is familiar with what is designated as the New Madrid flood way in the Jadwin plan and spoken of in this bill. That plan provides for the cutting down of the levee that now exists along the Missouri side and provides for the construction of a new levee 5 miles west, and, I presume, it takes in the land intervening between the two levees as a flood way.

Now, under the provisions of this bill as amended, will the landowners between the existing levee that is to be cut down 5 feet and the new levee that they propose to erect 5 or more miles to the west be entitled to flowage rights?

Mr. REID of Illinois. The gentleman can answer it himself. Does it put additional destructive flood waters down there?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Well, I think the gentleman is familiar with this situation.

Mr. REID of Illinois. That is the only way I can answer it. If the Government puts additional destructive flood waters down there, of course they would be entitled to flowage rights.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If the chairman is going into a discussion of facts relating to various localities, I am afraid we will get far afield from the principles underlying this legislation.

Mr. REID of Illinois. I think that is so and that is the reason I answered the gentleman as I did. If that puts additional flood waters down there, then you come within the purview of the act and the Government would have to acquire the flowage rights.

Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. REID of Illinois, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

THE JURISDICTION OF THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION OVER INTERURBAN ELECTRIC LINES

The SPEAKER. Under special order of the House the Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] for 15 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, in 1911 an interurban electric railroad system was chartered in South Carolina to be extended from Greenwood, by way of Anderson, Greenville, Spartanburg, Gaffney, and Grover, to Gastonia, N. C. Of course, the charter in South Carolina only applied to that State, about 115 miles. At the same time North Carolina chartered an interurban system also to meet with it and be a part of it, to extend from the North Carolina line, by way of Kings Mountain, Gastonia, Charlotte, and Salisbury, to Winston-Salem. The construction was begun and they completed 90 miles from Greenwood, S. C., to Spartanburg. When the war came on construction stopped at Spartanburg and construction from Charlotte south stopped at Gastonia, leaving a gap of 60 miles in there to be joined up. That stood until 1926. The charter in the meantime had been extended by the Legislature of South Carolina and, I believe, by the Legislature of North Carolina, and they got ready to join this up and make the extension to Salisbury and Winston-Salem, N. C.

The Southern Railway has always occupied that territory with a splendid system, as good as there is in the world, and it occupies it to-day with a double track from this city to Atlanta, Ga. They opposed the completion of this system. It was brought before the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the question was raised whether it had jurisdiction to keep them from building. Under the Esch-Cummins Act jurisdiction was given to the Interstate Commerce Commission to either give or withhold a certificate. If the commission gives such a certificate the railroad can be built; and if they do not, the railroad can not be built. Without that certificate railroads can not be constructed any more, in so far as ordinary railroads are concerned.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has heard the matter at some length and has decided that it has jurisdiction, that there is no public convenience served, and therefore it has refused this permission, with three or four dissenting members.

Now, I want to discuss for a few minutes the genesis of this trouble and see whether they are justified in extending their jurisdiction over this railroad.

I assert that it is in keeping with the determination to have a transportation monopoly in this country consisting of the railroads that now exist; that it is a throttling of extensions of roads where there are no railroads; and that it is giving to the Interstate Commerce Commission jurisdiction to which that commission is not entitled.

When the Esch-Cummins Act came up for consideration it contained this provision, subdivision 21 of section 1. It is now subdivision 22, all of the subdivisions having been advanced one number:

> The authority of the commission conferred by paragraphs (17) to (20), both inclusive—

It is now 18 to 21—

> shall not extend to the construction or abandonment of side tracks, or of spur, industrial, team, or switching tracks, or of street car and electric interurban lines, if such tracks or lines are located or to be located wholly within one State.

You will notice this confined the jurisdiction to interurban lines and other lines that cross a State line but did not extend to those wholly within the State.

I had this very situation in mind because it runs across my district. I offered an amendment, and we debated it for two or three hours, and finally Mr. Esch and myself got together on language which was much better than that which I had offered, and Mr. Esch finaly offered this amendment:

> Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute to the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina.
> The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
> The Clerk read as follows:
> "Amendment offered by Mr. Esch: Page 53, line 13, strike out lines 13, 14, 15, and 16 and insert in lieu thereof the following:
> "'To the construction or abandonment of any line located or to be located wholly within one State or to any street car or electric interurban line.'"

The Chairman required the Clerk to report the language as it would read, and he so reported it.

The paragraph as amended read:

> The authority of the commission conferred by paragraphs 17 to 20, both inclusive, shall not extend to the construction or abandonment of any line located or to be located wholly within one State or to any street car or electric interurban line.

In this way we enacted the law. You will notice that the distinction was made that certain lines used by steam tracks, side tracks, and spur tracks had to be located within a State to be exempt from this jurisdiction, but any street car or electric interurban line was exempted from the jurisdiction. This point came up and this question was raised, and the act was finally enacted in the following language—the Senate, of course, had to do something. It had to amend this somehow, and they put it in this way:

The authority of the commission conferred by paragraphs 18 to 21, both inclusive, shall not extend to the construction or abandonment of spur, industrial, team, switching, or sidetracks located or to be located wholly within one State.

Now, that is one complete sentence. This follows:

Or of street, suburban, or interurban electric railroads which are not operated as part or parts of a general steam railroad system of transportation.

You have there two classes that were exempt—the spur tracks and other kinds of tracks connected with steam railroads that were located wholly within the State and the electric lines, interurban, or street railways that were not operated as a part of a steam railroad system. These were the two.

Now, what does the commission say? Nobody claims that this system is operated as a part of any steam railroad system, but they say, forsooth, because it is built on better lines than the Southern Railway was at the time, and its bridges are better than the Southern Railway had at that time, and it is prepared to haul as heavy freight trains as the Southern Railway, and does haul as heavy freight trains as the Southern Railway, "We class it as a commercial steam railroad," although it has never had a steam engine on it and it is not contemplated to put any on it.

The people who control it have developed wonderful power there, and they are making a wonderful accession to property and wealth and industry and population in that part of the country, and they propose to continue to do it by electricity.

This is their proposition. They say we will class it as a steam railroad—as a commercial railroad.

Suppose you adopt their classification as a commercial electric railroad separate and distinct from an interurban railroad? Then it is not embraced in this bill. You would have a street railway that would be subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission if it were operated in conjunction with a steam railroad system, but you would not have, if it were operated in conjunction with an interurban commercial railroad system, which is something that was born in the brain of the ingenuity of the people who do not want any more transportation in that country.

Very aptly Mr. Brainerd, one of the commissioners, in the dissenting opinion says:

The act does not distinguish between a "commercial railroad operated by electricity" and an interurban electric railroad not operated as a part of a general steam-railroad system of transportation, and we can make no such distinction.

There is no such distinction as a commercial interurban system from the ordinary interurban system.

The commission in order to justify this decision cited a statute of South Carolina, and it started in the middle of the section and cited only that part that seemed to justify their action. They say:

The statutes of South Carolina provide that the phrases "interurban railroad" or "interurban railway" shall be construed to include all railroads and railways operated by electricity whose main business consists in the transportation of passengers from one municipality to another.

Well, that sounds as if they did intend to limit it, does it not? But that simply gives you an idea of the candor of the commissioner who wrote the opinion.

I just want to show you what that statute says, and you will see at once that it is a case of misapplication of a statute, and that they certainly ought to have had sufficient intelligence to have discriminated:

In the construction of this section (which is section 4 and section 5) the phrases street railroad or street railway shall be construed to include all railroads and railways operated by electricity whose main business consists in the transportation of passengers between different points within the limits of a municipality, and the phrases "interurban railroad" or "interurban railway" shall be constructed to include all railroads and railways—operated by electricity whose main business consists in the transportation of passengers from one municipality to another.

This is where they began to quote—

Now, what was section 5? Section 5 is the section requiring them to have vestibules on all interurban railroad cars for the protection of passengers and motormen, and expressly so states. In other words, the Legislature of South Carolina was providing for vestibules on the passenger cars of interurban railroads, and has expressly stated that this was for the protection of passengers and of motormen, and they said that in so far as they are concerned interurban railways shall be held to be embraced in any electric railroad that carries passengers.

They take that and make what South Carolina did not intend an interurban railway in their charter. You will see when you read both sections that it did not intend anything of the kind. Not only that, but if that was true of all the railroads it would have required every interurban railroad that carried freight to put a vestibule on its freight cars, which is absurd.

Then they tried to tie up North Carolina with this proposition. There is the case of Kirkpatrick in the Sixty-seventh North Carolina, page 477. That North Carolina case was where an abutting landowner on a street was suing the interurban railroad for damages to his property because they were operating freight cars up and down the street. In other words, they had a freight system, and the supreme court of the State said that street railways would not be liable to the abutting landowner, but they said that so far as the right of the abutting landowner was concerned they would have the same right as against the interurban as against the steam railroad.

What is the upshot of this? Here is a territory teeming with industry, the center of the manufacturing country of the Southland—I have been familiar with that country all my life—I was raised in it—there has not been in that country 100 miles long and 100 miles wide—more than 100 miles of railroad constructed within my memory for 50 years. I mean the territory between the Broad and the Yadkin and the North Carolina line and the Blue Ridge.

Now, the development is beginning, it has reached out, and capital is flowing in, and full development is going on, and the opportunities for development are unlimited for the prosperity of this country. The people are ready to put up their money and build those instrumentalities which are desirable over the Piedmont country, establish factories, and the Interstate Commerce Commission says no, you can not do it, you have the Southern Railroad and that is good enough.

I have no disposition to criticize that splendid system, but there is nothing so perfect that it can do everything and I submit that it is absolutely outrageous and an invasion of the rights of the State and an infraction of the provisions and a perversion of the statute that Mr. Esch wrote, and he dissented like a man from the decision made in the case.

Mr. ABERNETHY. The State of North Carolina, as well as South Carolina, is back of this proposition?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON. How many of the commissioners dissented?

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. McManamy, Mr. Esch, and Mr. Brainerd.

Now, I thank the House for the opportunity of addressing it. There is a bill pending in which it is proposed to take the jurisdiction away from the Interstate Commerce Commission and I submit there ought to be some action upon it. [Applause.]

REAPPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FENN). Under the special order, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. JACOBSTEIN] for 20 minutes.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I am taking this opportunity to address the Members on a subject which may come to a vote in the House in a very few days.

I am going to address myself to the subject of reapportionment of the membership of the House of Representatives, a subject not only of importance to every Member of the House but to every portion of the United States.

I do not know whether you realize that every day we sit here, every day Congress is in session, we are violating the very first articles of the Constitution of the United States. You may talk all you want about the observance by the States and citizens of the fourteenth amendment or the fifteenth amendment or the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution, the cold fact remains that for the last eight years the very first article of the Constitution of the United States has been violated every day by ourselves—the Congress.

We can not hope to have the respect for the Constitution from citizens of this country unless we as a Congress respect the Constitution ourselves.

Here are the constitutional provisions regarding apportionment:

ART. 1, SEC. 2. Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons. The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent term of 10 years, in such manner as they shall by law direct. The number of Representatives shall not exceed 1 for every 30,000, but each State shall have at least one Representative.

* * * * * * *

AMENDMENT XIV, SEC. 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. * * *

The first proposition I lay down is that the Constitution of the United States describes very definitely that we "shall" reapportion this House every 10 years. It is true there is no explicit mandate to that effect, and there are some constitutional lawyers who maintain that is discretionary with the Congress itself. The fact remains, however, that for 120 years this provision of the Constitution was very religiously adhered to and was very consistently and uniformly observed. Thirteen times we have reapportioned the Congress of the United States, as shown in the following table:

The membership and ratio of the different apportionments heretofore had and when enacted

Census	Date of apportionment act	States	Members	Ratio
	1789	13	65	30,000
1790	Apr. 14, 1792	15	105	33,000
1800	Jan. 14, 1802	16	141	33,000
1810	Dec. 21, 1811	17	181	35,000
1820	Mar. 7, 1822	24	213	40,000
1830	May 22, 1832	24	240	47,700
1840	June 25, 1842	26	223	70,680
1850	May 23, 1850	32	234	93,423
1860	May 23, 1860	34	243	127,381
1870	Feb. 2, 1872	37	293	131,425
1880	Feb. 25, 1882	38	325	151,911
1890	Feb. 7, 1891	44	356	173,901
1900	Jan. 16, 1901	45	386	194,182
1910	Aug. 8, 1911	46	433	211,877

The first break in that fine tradition came in 1920. There is a feeling abroad in the land that the Congress of the United States ought to be a little more meticulous in the observance of the Constitution.

We talk loudly and a whole lot about representative government. Do you believe in representative government? Do you think that we really have representative government when 13,000,000 people (which represents the increase in population from 1910 to 1920) are to-day without proper, fair representation as a result of our failure to reapportion the House? Let me illustrate how this representative government of ours works. We have a Representative in Los Angeles, our colleague, Mr. CRAIL, who represents a million and a quarter people. Each one of you please compare that with the representation in your own individual districts. The average is about 225,000 to 250,000. Is there any equity in that situation? Can anyone say that we have a representative government in the United States when a man in Detroit, Mich., has in his district 750,000 to 800,000 people as against a bare one-quarter of a million for the average Representative? Most assuredly this is a travesty on representative government.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes, indeed.

Mr. RAMSEYER. That inequality, of course, can be greatly relieved by the legislatures of those States.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. That is true as within the States, but it does not correct the inequality as between States. California, for instance, was entitled to three additional members on the basis of the 1920 census returns, whereas Missouri would have lost two Members if the House membership had been retained at 435.

The following table shows the gains and losses that would have occurred if the 1920 reapportionment had gone into effect on the basis of a House membership of 435, 460, and 483 respectively:

State	Number of Representatives	Compared with present House		Number of Representatives	Compared with present House		Number of Representatives	Compared with present House

Mr. RAMSEYER. We are not responsible for the districting within the States.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. That is true as within States, but our's is the duty to wipe out inequalities as between States. It was to adjust ourselves to that fluctuation, to that shifting of population that the framers of the Constitution provided that there shall be an enumeration every 10 years. There has been either an increase or a shifting of population between the rural and industrial centers of the United States every 10 years from the beginning. A decennial census and a decennial reapportionment was specifically provided for to make our Government strictly representative.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I do not want to leave the impression, of course, that I do not think that the Congress should act in reapportioning the House of Representatives every 10 years. I think it is the duty of the Congress, and that Congress has neglected that duty.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I am glad to have the gentleman from Iowa support my contention that Congress has neglected its duty, and that is the first point that I make. The serious consequences of the neglect are brought home to every Member of this House when he stops to realize the great disparity in representation as measured by population in the various districts of the United States.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes; gladly.

Mr. HOCH. I agree with the gentleman as to the constitutional duties, but there is one phase of the matter to which I think attention has not been called, and that is the practical phase. Some Members are in favor of 435 Members, some in favor of 300, and some in favor of 460. Assuming that all are honest in their opinion, and you can not get a majority who favor any one number, how can you carry out the mandate of the Constitution? Whose duty is it to surrender to the other fellow's opinion?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I am going to answer that question by passing to my next point. The gentleman has anticipated my next proposition, which is this: Ever since the foundation of our Government there has been a deadlock in Congress over the question as to what should be the size of the House. I have read all of the debates from the beginning on this subject, and in every Congress every 10 years the subject comes up, "What shall be the size of the House?" As a matter of fact, there has usually been a compromise. The way they have solved it in the past was very simple. They always increased the size of the House to take care of most of the States. They did that every time but once. That exception occurred in 1840, when a slight decrease was made in the size of the House. Usually whenever any Member feared that reapportionment might affect adversely his State and he opposed reapportionment, they satisfied him by increasing the size of the House. This solution was simple up to 1920. Up to that time the size of the House kept rolling up, satisfying most of the States of the Union, even those States that had a decrease in population between the census periods. Have I answered the question?

Mr. HOCH. The gentleman has answered how they solved it.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. They solved the problem by always increasing the size of the House. I imagine the increases were always a little larger than normal because of the compromise effected.

Mr. HOCH. But I am talking about where you do not want to solve it in that way.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Well, let us see. In 1920 there came a deadlock. If we had kept the House as now constituted at 435, there would have been a considerable number of States—11—which would absolutely have lost in their membership. Eleven States would have lost representation in this House at that time. Naturally they objected to it. That is human nature. They wanted to protect their own districts and their own States. There was a compromise proposed of 460, which did not satisfy the House, and the bill was recommitted and all chance of reapportionment shattered at that session of Congress. Some Members from California and Michigan who anxiously desired reapportionment voted to recommit the bill rather than agree to a House larger than 435.

Of course, 483 would have taken care even of Maine and Missouri, the States which relatively lost most in population in the decade from 1910 to 1920. The point is that there were some Members of the House who wanted the membership increased to 483 to take care of everybody. Many want a House of 460, but there was a considerable body of opinion which said that we ought to keep the House down to 435 for the sake of efficiency. They split on that rock, and so the bill was recommitted, and every year since that time every effort to secure reapportionment on the basis of 1920 met with defeat in the committee and on the floor of the House.

Mr. RAMSEYER. If the gentleman will permit, in January, 1921, the bill passed the House, but it died in the Senate.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. That is true, and I thank the gentleman for refreshing my memory on that matter. The Senate failed to act on it. It came up again in the House and the bill was recommitted by the House and since that time it has never come up because the Census Committee has never favorably reported a reapportionment bill upon the basis of the 1920 returns. I may say in passing that in the Census Committee the argument against the use of the 1920 figures of population was always made that they contained too great an element of error adverse to the rural regions.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I wish to say the House did favor action of the bill to hold the membership down to 435.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes. I am glad the gentleman made that point. The action of this House in that regard, if it means anything, means that they favor 435. They favor a House having a membership of 435; and because a membership of 435 would have adversely affected 11 States, we never have been able to get a bill through. Remember that 11 States mean 22 Senators. I call your attention to the fact that in 1930, if we try to hold the membership of the House down to 435, 17 States are likely to be affected, representing 215 members of the House.

The following table represents the States which would lose one or more Members with the House on the basis of preliminary estimates of population for 1930 and assuming the House to retain its present 435 membership:

Alabama	10
Indiana	13
Iowa	11
Kansas	8
Kentucky	11
Louisiana	8
Maine	4
Massachusetts	16
Mississippi	8
Missouri	16
Nebraska	6
New York	43
North Dakota	3
Pennsylvania	36
Tennessee	10
Vermont	2
Virginia	10
Total	215

You can imagine what 34 Senators representing these 17 States can do when they go on the warpath to wreck a bill. You can see the difficulties ahead.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. DOWELL. When the apportionment bill at one time was before the House and apparently had enough votes to pass it, a motion was made to recommit it. Was the gentleman one of those who favored to recommit the bill?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I was not a Member of the House at that time.

Mr. DOWELL. Those who were favoring it and claiming that the Constitution required that the House should act upon the question voted generally to recommit the bill.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. What you say is true and only helps to reinforce my own argument that a deadlock is impending in 1930. As you have stated, many Members who demanded reapportionment to protect their own States actually voted against the Siegel reapportionment bill (H. R. 7882, October 14, 1921). They helped kill this bill by voting to recommit it. Their vote to recommit, however, must be interpreted as meaning not a vote against reapportionment, but rather a vote against increasing the size of the House above 435. The RECORD shows that 3 Members from California, 7 Members from Michigan, 10 from Ohio, 13 from Texas, 7 from North Carolina, and 7 from New Jersey voted to recommit and helped kill the bill, even though their States would have gained by the passage of that particular reapportionment bill, which would have increased the size of the House to 460. The explanation I have given is the only logical explanation, namely, that rather than see the House increased in size they preferred to have no reapportionment at all.

Mr. DOWELL. If the gentleman please, the motion was made by the gentleman from California to recommit the bill.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. The motion to recommit was made in order to get the 435.

Mr. DOWELL. In order to prevent the possibility of getting more than 435.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes; I believe that is true, and again your own argument emphasizes the point I have been making namely, a strong feeling against enlarging the size of the House membership, rightly or wrongly.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. LOZIER. The gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR] did not make the motion to recommit. He made a motion to amend the bill by fixing the membership at 435. This amendment was defeated by a vote of 123 yeas to 140 nays. The gentleman from Indiana, Mr. FAIRFIELD, made a motion to recommit the bill without instructions. The motion to recommit carried, the vote being 146 yeas and 142 nays. This vote killed the bill; and on this vote the vast majority of those who insisted on reapportionment voted to recommit the bill, thereby killing the measure and destroying the possibility of a reapportionment bill at that session.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I believe that to be a fair statement, but it indicates again that there is trouble ahead in the 1930 reapportionment.

Mr. LOZIER. One more statement, with your permission: California and Michigan would have secured a large increase in their representation if this bill had been enacted; but on the motion to recommit seven members of the Michigan delegation in the House voted to recommit, three were paired in favor of recommitting, two voted against the motion, and there is no record as to the views of the other Representative from Michigan. Three of the Representatives from California voted to recommit, four voted against the motion, and four did not vote. The two States Michigan and California, that would have fared the best under the bill as reported by the committee, were largely instrumental in defeating this bill, thereby destroying all chance for reapportionment on that occasion. Our colleagues from Michigan and California are loud in their demands for a new reapportionment, but I am wondering if they have told the people of their States that they would have secured an increased representation seven years ago, if their Representatives in Congress at that time, had not lent their influence to defeat the 1921 reapportionment bill.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. If it is on the bill; yes.

Mr. DOWELL. It is. On the bill as it now stands Congress is delegating the power——

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. If the gentleman will give me five minutes more, I think I can answer all these questions.

The emergency is going to be more critical in 1930. I will tell you why. The population has probably increased from 105,000,000 to approximately 125,000,000.

If you undertake to satisfy the wishes of every State in the Union you will have to have a House with a membership of 535. It is inconceivable that that will be done. Five hundred and thirty-five means a size too large to be wieldy, it seems to me, and there is a decided opinion here that in view of the fact that so many Members voted for 435 they are not going to vote for 535. If you do not get legislation in 1930 you will have a rotten borough system developed in this country by which 30,000,000 people will be unfairly represented in the United States.

We can therefore anticipate a deadlock. What is the remedy? The remedy is simply this: We propose to Congress now—and I hope the bill will be reported to the House by special rule—anticipatory legislation. Unless Congress does act in 1930, then the reapportionment we provide in this bill shall become operative. What do we provide in this bill? First, that the House shall consist of 435 Members, retaining the present membership of the House. That can be changed at any time; in 1930, or in 1931, or in 1932, or in 1933, or on up to 1940. But until Congress acts the House will remain at 435. In our bill (Fenn bill) we do not suggest what the future Congress should do as regards the size of the House. We merely say that the House shall stay where it is in size until changed by some future Congress. Then we specify that the apportionment shall be made according to the well-known mathematical formula, the method of major fractions. This is the method used in 1910 and recommended in 1920. You understand, of course, the Fenn bill simply provides a method of reapportionment only operative in the event Congress fails to act.

Congress always reserves that legislative power. In fact, Congress can always pass supplementary legislation on reapportionment and has done so on many occasions. I will now answer the question in the minds of many of you and raised in the minority report. Congress surrenders none of its powers. It can act at any time on reapportionment, and there is ample precedent for this statement. What it does do is this: It says to the Bureau of the Census, "Go ahead and take the census of the population of 1930, and after you have done that, after you have enumerated the population according to the States of the Union, assign representation to every State on the basis known as major fractions," a method used in 1910, a method used in 1920, and a method which is very simple to understand. I think I could make it plain to you in five minutes if I had the time. So Congress does not divest itself of its authority. It is constitutional. The last word from the Supreme Court of the United States bears me out in this. Only a month ago—April 9, 1928—the Supreme Court of the United States sustained the flexible provisions of the tariff act (J. W. Hampton, jr., & Co. v. The United States), wherein Congress gave another Government agent the power to fix rates on imports and gave it the power, when ordered by the President, to increase or decrease a tax. Our apportionment does not begin to go as far as that. What we propose here is not so drastic. We are merely assigning a function, a ministerial function, to a department of the Government which we at all times control. We say to the Census Bureau, "We direct you to apportion 435 members on the basis of the 1930 census, using the method of major fractions, but only to become effective or operative if we do not act." At any time if we choose to act and do enact legislation, then that particular apportionment which has been set into operation ceases to be the law.

It seems to me the bill is very simple. It is easy to understand. We surrender no power and it protects the Nation against the emergency of a deadlock that might arise in the year 1930 and which might be fraught with serious consequences to the country.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. As I understand this bill it authorizes the apportionment for 1930.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. On the basis of the 1930 population.

Mr. DOWELL. That involves the same principle, does it not, as though we made a permanent apportionment by the Census Department?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. After that 1930 population census is taken, Congress is at liberty to act and should act. But if it fails to do its duty in 1930–31 then this bill provides a definite method and basis for reapportionment. That is all there is to it.

Mr. DOWELL. This is permanent law for action in the future?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. It is permanent only in the sense that if Congress fails to act that method and formula continues to operate—and should.

Mr. DOWELL. If Congress fails to agree on the number they will permit, then the Census Bureau will make an apportionment in 1930; in 10 years, in 1940, they make it again.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. That is right.

Mr. DOWELL. In 10 years they make it again.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. That is right.

Mr. DOWELL. And unless Congress agrees to the number——

Mr. JACOBSTEIN (interposing). Just let me make one supplementary remark there. They will have to do it every 10 years, but when the Census Bureau does do it it is bound by the particular formula prescribed by Congress itself.

Mr. DOWELL. To be sure, but you have delegated it to the Census Department.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. That is right. We have not, however, delegated any legislative power, but have merely assigned a ministerial function to another agent of the Federal Government, just as Congress did when it set up the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Tariff Commission, only with this difference, however, in the reapportionment bill this other outside agency is powerful and does not function at all if Congress does its duty by taking affirmative action. The Census Bureau merely submits tables to Congress showing reapportionment for a House membership of 435 on the 1930 census figures. These figures become the reapportionment when transmitted by the Clerk of the House to the several States. Neither the Census Bureau nor the Secretary of Commerce exercises any discretionary power. It is all done by specific direction of the Congress.

THE FEDERAL COURTS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. Under special order of the House the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I have had occasion to speak concerning the Federal judiciary several times. I have been criticized for my outspoken statements concerning Federal judges. That my statements were "too strong" was stated by some of my colleagues. Others claim that I am entirely wrong. The power of the judiciary has been steadily creeping and growing, until to-day it has established itself a supergovernment answerable and responsible to no one. The framers of our Constitution but a few years after its adoption saw this danger. The best minds of the time protested against the encroachment of the court on legislative and administrative functions of the other branches of Government. It was seen even in the early days of our Republic that this mighty power could and would be used or misused by a selfish, greedy minority for the exploitation of the masses. No one living to-day, whether Republican, Democrat, Progressive, or independent, will doubt the wisdom, ability, foresight, and patriotism of Thomas Jefferson. There are few outstanding figures in American history who everyone claims as they do Thomas Jefferson. With prophetic vision and almost uncanny accuracy he looked into the future and saw exactly what the Federal courts would become and the power that they would eventually arrogate unto themselves. Just let me pause for a moment to read a short quotation from Thomas Jefferson:

We already see the power, installed for life, responsible to no authority (for impeachment is not even a scarecrow), advancing with a noiseless and steady pace to the great object of consolidation. The foundations are already deeply laid by their decisions for the annihilation of constitutional State rights and the removal of every check, every counterpoise to the ingulphing power of which themselves are to make a sovereign part. * * * Let the future appointments of judges be for four or six years and removable by the President and Senate. This will bring their conduct at regular periods under revision and probation, and may keep them in equipoise between the general and special governments. We have erred in this point by copying England, where certainly it is a good thing to have the judges independent of the King. But we have omitted to copy their caution also, which makes a judge removable on the address of both legislative houses. That there should be public functionaries independent of the Nation, whatever may be their demerit, is a solecism in a republic of the first order of absurdity and inconsistency. (Letter to Mr. William T. Barry. The Jeffersonian Cyclopedia.)

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. From what is the gentleman quoting?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am quoting from a letter written by Thomas Jefferson to William T. Barry. It will be found in the Jeffersonian Cyclopedia, page 448.

Just another short quotation from Jefferson:

At the establishment of our Constitution the judiciary bodies were supposed to be the most helpless and harmless members of the Government. Experience, however, soon showed in what way they were to become the most dangerous; that the insufficiency of the means provided for their removal gave them a freehold and irresponsibility in office; that their decisions, seeming to concern individual suitors only, pass silent and unheeded by the public at large; that these decisions, nevertheless, become law by precedent, sapping, by little and little, the foundations of the Constitution and working its change by construction before anyone has perceived that that invisible and helpless worm has been busily employed in consuming its substance. In truth, man is not made to be trusted for life if secured against all liability to account. (Letter to A. Coray. The Jeffersonian Cyclopedia.)

Now, Mr. Speaker, only a few days ago a decision was handed down in the city of New York by a so-called statutory court, this court consisting of either a justice of the supreme court and two circuit court judges or a judge of the circuit court and two district court judges.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. How are they convened?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They are convened on motion.

I desire to call the attention of my colleagues at this time that what happened to New York a few days ago may happen in your cities at any time. In fact, this regulation of public service utilities and local municipal matters by Federal courts is not new. Greedy public-service corporations have learned that they can run to the Federal courts and evade State laws and regulatory measures of State commissions. They will sign a contract or accept a franchise from a State commission, agree to all the terms, solemnly agree to submit to the regulatory powers of a State commission, with a dishonest mental reservation that as soon as they obtain the franchise or the contract they will go to the Federal courts and obtain judicial relief from compliance and exploit the people to the extent of their greed and the nerve of the Federal judge. The State of Indiana is at this very moment protesting against the usurpation of the Federal courts. I have here a resolution passed by the Legislature of the State of Indiana begging Congress to protect the State against the action of the Federal courts, and at this point, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to read part of the resolution of the Indiana Legislature and to extend the complete resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FENN). The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Here is what the Legislature of the State of Indiana says:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF INDIANA,
Office of the Secretary of State.

I, F. E. Schortemeier, secretary of state of the State of Indiana, hereby certify that the following and hereto attached is a full, true, and complete copy of enrolled Senate Joint Resolution 5, chapter 269, acts of seventy-fifth regular session of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana:

A joint resolution requesting Congress to prepare, support, and secure the enactment of legislation limiting and defining the jurisdiction of the United States courts in public utility and rate cases to the consideration after, not before, the courts of various States have considered the issue involved

Whereas Congress in 1816 created Indiana a sovereign and independent State, with full right to control its local affairs, and the corporations it created, and these would include especially utility corporations, furnishing water, light, gas, phone service, and other necessities; and

Whereas the growth and development of the State of Indiana and its public utilities reached such proportions in 1913 that it became necessary that careful and proper consideration of the rights of the public and the adequate protection of the public welfare, made it necessary for the General Assembly of the State of Indiana to create a public-service commission; and

Whereas certain utilities of this State, to wit: The Indianapolis Water Co., the Indiana Bell Telephone Co., the Citizens Gas Co. of Indianapolis, and The Central States Gas Co. of Vincennes, and the Greensburg Water Co. of Greensburg, petitioned the Public Service Commission of the State of Indiana for increased rates for service to the public; and

Whereas such petitions were heard and valuations thereof determined and rates fixed by the Indiana Public Service Commission, which were in the judgment of the commission fair, reasonable, and just; and

Whereas said utilities, to wit, the Indianapolis Water Co., the Indiana Bell Telephone Co., the Citizens Gas Co., the Central States Gas Co., of Vincennes, and the Greensburg Water Co. did, immediately in each case, invoke the jurisdiction of the Federal court of the State of Indiana instead of taking their cases to our State courts, alleging that the valuation determined and rates fixed by the public service commission were confiscatory; and

Whereas the laws of the State of Indiana governing the public service commission provide for and authorize any utility or person interested in any rate order to appeal to the circuit or superior court of any county in this State from any order of the commission fixing such rate, or rates, or valuation; and

Whereas such utilities did, in each instance, invoke the jurisdiction of the Federal court without first having pursued the remedy provided by the laws of the State of Indiana giving the right to appeal to the State courts; and

Whereas in each instance the Federal court has fixed a higher valuation and a higher rate than that fixed by the public service commission; and

Whereas the right of the State of Indiana to control its local affairs with reference to such utilities was defeated and prevented; and

Whereas the Public Service Commission of Indiana fixed the valuation of the Indianapolis Water Co. at $16,455,000; the Indiana Bell Telephone Co. at $32,000,000; the Citizens Gas Co. at $12,000,000; the Central States Gas Co. of Vincennes at $482,845, and the Greensburg Water Co. at $225,000; and

Whereas thereafter at hearings in the Federal Court of the District of Indiana the valuations of these public utilities were fixed at the following figures, to wit: The Indianapolis Water Co. at $19,000,000, resulting in increase of rates; Indiana Bell Telephone Co. at $36,000,000, resulting in increase of rates; Citizens Gas Co. at $16,000,000, increasing the rate for gas from 90 cents to $1.20; Central States Gas Co., of Vincennes, at $739,572; and the Greensburg Water Co. at $340,000, resulting in increase of rates: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Seventy-fifth General Assembly of the State of Indiana, That the United States Senators and Members of Congress representing the State of Indiana be, and they are hereby, respectfully petitioned to prepare, support, and their associates enact legislation limiting the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States in all cases that may be filed therein by public utilities seeking relief from orders issued by public service commissions, to such utilities as have first exhausted all legal remedies given by the courts of the respective States; Be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted by the governor and the secretary of state to the Senators and Members of Congress representing the State of Indiana, and the Senators and Congressmen of the other States of the United States.

F. HAROLD VAN ORMAN,
President of the Senate.
HARRY G. LESLIE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Filed March 11, 1927—12.02 p. m.

F. E. SCHORTEMEIER,
Secretary of State.

In testimony whereof I hereunto set my hand and affix the great seal of the State of Indiana. Done at my office in the city of Indianapolis, this 12th day of March, A. D. 1928.

[SEAL] F. E. SCHORTEMEIER,
Secretary of State.

The city of New York has invested over $400,000,000 in subways. These subways are operated by rapid-transit corporations under a contract with the city of New York. Among other things, the contract provides that the operating companies must furnish service under certain general conditions, and specifically provides that a fare of 5 cents shall be charged. The gentlemen must bear in mind that at the time the contract was signed there was a movement all over the United States for cheap transportation. Many of the cities in Ohio were enjoying 3-cent car fares. Six rides and seven rides for a quarter were in effect in many cities of the United States. So the operating companies, to protect themselves, insisted that the 5-cent provision should be written into the contract. It was written into the contract. It has been there for 15 years. If when the operating companies were making huge profits and declaring big dividends the city of New York would have sought to lower the rate, the operating companies would have resisted and would have insisted upon the rights of contract. Yet, now we find these same companies, after years of maneuvering, after years of the dirtiest kind of politics, resorting to the Federal court to aid in the execution of their dirty work.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. May I ask the gentleman to enlighten us as to what claim of authority this statutory court asserts in order to get control of this matter? I think there is a great deal of confusion in the public mind as to how this purely local question got into a Federal court.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The decision handed down by this so-called statutory court starts off with an apology and a misstatement of facts. It makes a clumsy attempt to prevent the scorn of public opinion. It states in the opinion that the action in the Federal court was commenced by the subway company prior to the action commenced in the State court by the transit commission. Not one of the millions of strap hangers of New York City will be deceived by this misstatement of fact, even if it is contained in a judicial decision.

The action was commenced in the Federal court by obtaining an ex parte order from a Federal judge residing in Westchester hours after court had adjourned. This ex parte order was suddenly presented to the judge and signed by him at his home. The order is lengthy, involved, and technical. Yet the ex parte order signed by the judge at his home was prepared and printed. How did the transit company know how the judge would decide and what he would put in the order to have a printed and prepared order for his honor to sign? The fact is, and everyone in New York knows it, with the apparent exception of the three judges who sat on the case, that this order was obtained after both the Federal court and the transit companies had learned that the State commissioners had moved in the State court to protect the rights of the city of New York and the millions of citizens compelled to use the subways.

The opinion of the court smacks of the shrewd mathematics of the curb rather than the deliberate judgment of the bench.

The prophetic wisdom of Jefferson was never more emphasized than in the present instance. I submit that it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution that the Federal courts should dispense justice and should not be made the adding machine for greedy corporations.

The decision in the Interborough Rapid Transit Co. case increasing the rate of fare without any justification of facts compares with the political decision in the Dred Scott case. It will settle nothing. The millions of people of New York City will simply refuse to pay the increased fare.

I happen to have first-hand knowledge concerning the contracts under which the Interborough Rapid Transit Co. is operating. First of all, the people of this country must know that the city of New York owns the subways. Second, that the Interborough operates these subways under a contract with the city of New York. When I was president of the board of aldermen in 1920, the Interborough and the other rapid-transit companies appeared before us seeking to modify the contract. It was admitted and conceded then that the rates of fare could not be increased unless both parties to the contract consented.

This happened to me. I do not get this out of a book. I was president of the board when they applied for a modification of the contract.

It was the law then. On the showing the board of estimate and apportionment of which I was a member refused to modify the contract and the fare was not increased. The law has not changed since 1920. The judges have changed.

If the contract was constitutional and valid during the years that the Interborough and other rapid-transit companies paid out over 180 per cent in dividends, it is constitutional to-day.

This case is not novel in any way. The same point came squarely before the Supreme Court in the case of the Georgia Railway & Power Co. against the town of Decatur, reported in two hundred and sixty-second United States Reports on page 432. There the facts were almost identically the same as in this case. It was a case where the city of Decatur, Ga., had made a contract with the railroad for a 5-cent fare, and the railroad sought to increase the fare to 7 cents, exactly the same as in New York, and after a lengthy opinion the court said, Judge Sutherland writing the opinion—I can give the law in two lines—

> The contract being valid, we are not concerned with the question whether the stipulated rates are confiscatory.

And there are a number of such decisions. They cite in their opinion the cases of Southern Iowa Electric Co. v. Chariton (255 U. S. 539), Paducah v. Paducah Railway Co. (261 U. S. 267).

The question is not novel. The very conduct of the statutory court in face of the existing law raises a suspicion that the Federal court will never be able to remove.

The outrageous decision handed down by the so-called statutory court lays down a new principle of law which is un-American, inequitable, unconstitutional, and indecent. This decision says that a contract is valid when a corporation is making enormous profits and invalid at any time that its profits decrease according to the corporation's own view as to what is a reasonable return.

I challenge anyone to point out one decision in the Federal courts where a corporation was compelled to reduce its rates agreed upon in a contract with a municipality, county, or State because the corporation was making too much profit.

Did you ever hear of such a case? If this law is good, then I challenge anyone to show a case in point.

Now, gentlemen, get this:

The court either refused to examine the figures of the Interborough or else ignored them. In either event the court was not justified in granting an increase in fare.

Now get these figures:

The Interborough as a matter of fact is not losing money.

So even if the court had jurisdiction as a matter of law and the rate was confiscatory; but the court did not, because the rate was fixed in a contract. But even so, on the facts themselves it can not be shown that the rate of 5 cents is confiscatory, because the companies are not losing money, but making a profit.

During the first six months ended June 30, 1927, this same company that went before the Federal court and complained that it was losing money, paid $265,541.46 Federal income tax—net income on this figure would be $1,966,973.78. For the calendar year 1926 this same company paid $89,507.27—net income on this figure would be $292,646.44.

The courts stress the lease with the Manhattan Railway Co. This Manhattan Railway Co., whose rates are now to be increased because it claims that it must operate under a confiscatory rate of fare, made so much money that from January 1, 1918, to June 30, 1927, it paid $4,800,000 Federal income tax.

All through the decision you will find many references to the lease existing between the Interborough and the Manhattan Railway Co. This lease is for 999 years. What they did, gentlemen, was this: The same crowd that owned and controlled the Interborough got control of the Manhattan and leased the company to themselves.

The only difference between the men who negotiated the lease between the Manhattan Railway and the Interborough and Gerald Chapman is that Gerald Chapman was caught, convicted, and hanged. [Laughter.]

If the court was honestly sincere in seeking to bring about relief and if it claims the power to destroy the contract between the city of New York and the Interborough, it could destroy the dishonest and fraudulent contract between the Manhattan Railroad and the Interborough.

As a matter of fact, the Interborough can operate on 5 cents under the contract with the city of New York and make money. Everybody in New York knows it except the three judges who sat on the case.

Section 380 of the United States Code, or section 266 of the Judicial Code, was never intended to be used in a case where a contract was involved. The purpose of this provision of the law was to create a tribunal to immediately pass upon a State law which might bring irreparable injury if enforced, though unconstitutional. But, gentlemen, this law that is now brought before the Federal court is nothing new. It was first enacted in 1891 and then amended in 1894. The original contracts with the city of New York for the construction of the subways were made on July 10, 1902, and August 10, 1905. These contracts were assigned to the Interborough Co. now operating.

Gentlemen, but a few days ago we had before our Judiciary Committee one of the ablest railroad lawyers of this country. He is not a radical and not even a progressive and does not come from New York City. He is a staid, conservative railroad corporation lawyer and makes no bones about the fact that he believes railroad corporations are sanctified, are always pure and holy, and have constitutional rights that no one can take away. In fact, he was before the Judicial Committee in opposition to one of my bills. After arguing for a long time on the powers of the Federal court, and, mark you, this lawyer, who, by the way, is Mr. Alfred P. Thom, general counsel of the Association of Railway Executives, took the position that Congress could not deprive the Federal courts of any of its powers. Of course, I do not agree with him on that, and I believe that very few Members of the House will agree with him on that. But I took the opportunity to question Mr. Thom on the subject of the interference by the Federal courts where a contract was involved. I will here read the colloquy between Mr. Thom and myself:

Mr. LAGUARDIA. You referred to the necessity of getting protection and used carriers as an illustration, seeking relief from orders of State commissions or State laws. Is it your belief that in purely intrastate matters a carrier, or a public utility corporation, may go to the Federal court in the first instance?

Mr. THOM. If what the State does is to confiscate its property.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Suppose it is a matter of contract and not a law or order of the State commission, but a contract entered into between a company and a subdivision of the State or a municipality. In that instance, could there be a resort to the Federal courts to avoid the terms of that contract at the first instance?

Mr. THOM. If it is a valid contract, I do not think they could resort to the Federal court. I do not think any Federal question arises.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is another question I wanted to ask you. You agree with the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Porto Rico tax case, do you not?

Mr. THOM. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Fully?

Mr. THOM. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But you distinguish that because it is a tax matter?

Mr. THOM. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Just one question there: On this question of going into the Federal court where a contract has been violated, as referred to by Mr. LAGUARDIA, assuming that that contract was a franchise given to a public utility, we will say a 30-year franchise, and that conditions changed during the 30 years, so that the utility could not survive financially under the franchise, which is a contract, do you not think that a stockholder who happened to reside in some other State, for instance, might go into a Federal court in a case of that type?

Mr. THOM. I did not, perhaps, understand Mr. LAGUARDIA'S question. I did not know he was putting a question of a violation or a breach of a contract by a State. Of course, a State has no right to make a breach of a contract without violating the Federal constitutional provision.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does that answer the question of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. THOM. What is that? I did not hear you.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I agree with Colonel Thom.

Mr. THOM. What is that?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. You are absolutely right.

Mr. THOM. So far as that is concerned, as I understand the question that you put, it is that where there is a valid franchise granted on certain conditions, there is no question of violating that franchise, but the effect of it has become destructive——

Mr. MICHENER. That is it.

Mr. THOM (continuing). Of the entity to which it was granted. Well, the fact that that contract becomes destructive does not seem to me to violate any law; and it seems to me that nobody has a right to insist that the franchise should be different simply because it destroys the prosperity of the entity to which it was granted.

Take this case, for example: Take a railroad company, and it makes a contract which is valid that it will perform a service for a certain amount. Well, to enforce that is not confiscation. The evil that comes there is from the contract which it voluntarily entered into. If, however, there is no contract, and the State undertakes to prevent the proper use of the instrumentalities of the corporation in such a way as to deny it a proper return, then a Federal question does arise.

Mr. MICHENER. That is the answer to my question.

Mr. THOM. But any carrier would be prevented from complaining if what it complains of was the enforcement of the contract which it had made. There is no question of confiscation that could arise in that case.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We agree on that, Colonel.

Mr. THOM. I am very glad of it. I am always delighted when I find that any of you gentlemen agree with me.

So here, gentlemen, you have it from a corporation lawyer, representing the executive association of railroads, who believes in the unlimited power of the Federal court admitting that where a rate is fixed in a contract the Federal court can not set aside the terms of such a contract. I contend that the decision handed down by the so-called statutory court consisting of these three judges in New York City was not only contrary to the facts, against the weight of evidence, but also contrary to law. The court had no jurisdiction, it should not have interfered, and it did only what the Interborough wanted it to do. In fact, the Interborough, it is known, has made arrangements for weeks to prepare for the collection of the extra 2 cents fare. I will have more to say about this as the case progresses. I will serve notice now to these Federal judges in New York and elsewhere that they will not be able to carry on in such a manner, and that the people will resent not only the usurpation of power, but establishing in this country one law for corporations and one law for the consumers, one contractual right when a corporation is making money and wants the contract continued and different rights when a corporation is tired of a contract. The Federal courts have reached the limit of their arrogance. They have invited resentment and loss of confidence. I again desire to express the hope that some day Congress will act on my bill which will take from the Federal courts jurisdiction in the first instance in these purely intrastate matters in which no Federal or constitutional right is involved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

NECESSARY APPROPRIATIONS FOR MATTERS BEFORE CONGRESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I have asked for this time for the purpose of giving some information to the House and the country that I think may be of interest. Various Members are finding fault with the Rules Committee and specially with the Chair because they can not all get at once the legislation they are specially interested in. To show you that at present and for the immediate past that we have had some problems to deal with of importance and cost to the American people, I want to enumerate without comment some of the more pressing matters before us. Perhaps some of you may think as I do that it is about time to put up the stop-look-and-listen sign.

I presented this list to the President this morning:

Muscle Shoals ($60,000,000 to $75,000,000)	75,000,000

Gentlemen, if we pass all this legislation—and it is being earnestly urged at the present time—instead of spending your time passing tax-relief measures you better spend your time finding new revenues. [Applause.]

Mr. HASTINGS. What is the aggregate of those amounts?

Mr. SNELL. Something over $1,000,000,000. [Applause.]

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. MURPHY, from the Committee on Appropriations, presented a conference report on the bill H. R. 12875, the legislative appropriation bill, for printing under the rule.

THE AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 744, an act to further develop an American merchant marine, to assure its permanence in the transportation of the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the House insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked for.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine calls up the bill S. 744 and asks unanimous consent that the House insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked for. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. WHITE of Maine, Mr. LEHLBACH, Mr. FREE, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. BLAND.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House, Calendar Wednesday is in order to-day. The Clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk called the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. LEAVITT in the chair.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection.

(c) No part of an appropriation made under authority of sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, or 6 shall be expended in the construction, purchase, or enlargement of a station or substation until the State in which such station or substation is to be located shall have by legislative action accorded to the United States Commissioner of Fisheries and his duly authorized agents the right to conduct fish hatching and fish culture and all operations connected therewith in any manner and at any time that may by the commissioner be considered necessary and proper, any laws of the State to the contrary notwithstanding. The operation of any station, substation, or laboratory established, purchased, or enlarged under authority of this act shall be discontinued whenever the State ceases to accord such right; and such operation may be suspended by the Secretary of Commerce whenever in his judgment State laws or regulations affecting fishes cultivated are allowed to remain so inadequate as to impair the efficiency of such station, substation, or laboratory.

SEC. 8. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated, in addition to all other amounts authorized by law to be appropriated, the following amounts during the fiscal years specified:

(1) For the purpose of providing adequate maintenance costs and personnel for the division of fish culture, Bureau of Fisheries: Fiscal year beginning July 1, 1928, $100,000; fiscal year beginning July 1, 1929, $200,000; fiscal year beginning July 1, 1930, $300,000; fiscal year beginning July 1, 1931, $400,000; fiscal year beginning July 1, 1932, $500,000. (3) To provide for the proper husbandry of our fisheries, improvements in methods of capture, merchandising, and distribution of our fishery harvest, including saving and utilization of waste products, and other operations of the division of fishery industries, Bureau of Fisheries: Fiscal year beginning July 1, 1928, $35,000; fiscal year beginning July 1, 1929, $70,000; fiscal year beginning July 1, 1930, $105,000; fiscal year beginning July 1, 1931, $140,000; fiscal year beginning July 1, 1932, $175,000. Of each amount authorized by this paragraph to be appropriated, 60 per cent shall be for miscellaneous expenses, division of fishery industries, and 40 per cent for salaries at the seat of government and elsewhere.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, this is a bill which comes before the House with the unanimous approval of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee of your body. It seems to me that it might well be entitled a bill to preserve and perpetuate the fisheries of the United States.

I do not in any degree minimize its importance. It contemplates a five-year program for the construction of fish hatcheries, substations, laboratories, and there goes with it the necessity for the authorization of appropriations to make effective the judgment of the committee as to the steps necessary to be taken, if we are to preserve for future years to the people the fisheries of the United States.

I think it proper that I should indicate in the first instance what is involved in this program as a matter of expenditure. The program carried out to its maximum would in the spread of five years call for an appropriation totaling $1,770,000 for the construction program.

It would call for a maximum increase in the annual maintenance costs of the Bureau of Fisheries at the end of the five years, assuming the entire program to be carried out, of approximately $915,000, raising that item from about $2,083,000 for this coming fiscal year to just under $2,998,000, or approximately that, at the end of the contemplated building and expansion program. That means in round numbers, and I speak only in round numbers, that at the end of a five-year program, assuming it to be carried out to the full extent contemplated and recommended by your committee, there will be an expenditure of approximately $3,000,000 in behalf of the fisheries of the United States.

Those of us charged with the immediate responsibility for considering the situation which obtains with respect to our fisheries, and of developing a ways and means for preserving those fisheries, give this proposal our unstinted and our unqualified approval. I often think that the people generally and the membership of this House fail to appreciate the magnitude of the fisheries industries, the tendencies in those industries, and what portends to the people of the United States unless we recognize the problem that confronts us and courageously and aggressively address ourselves to its solution. Roughly speaking, there are 120,000 men and women in the United States engaged in our fisheries. The catch totals annually almost 3,000,000,000 pounds of fish. The fishermen of the United States are paid something between $105,000,000 and $110,000,000 a year. Fish furnish to many people, to increasing numbers of people, a valuable article of diet. Every one recognizes its food value. It is becoming more and more a widely used food product, and its dietary qualities are becoming more and more recognized. Nature is prodigal, but I think the history of the years demonstrates to every one who will give heed that nature is not inexhaustible. What has been going on throughout this country of ours with respect to other natural resources points a moral and carries to us a solemn warning of what will come to us with respect to this great natural resource unless we give heed to the indications and unless we meet, as I conceive it, our obligations with respect thereto.

There has been a marked loss in our fishery products in certain kinds of fish. I shall allude in general terms to only a few of them, because they are illustrative and indicate clearly what we face. Take shad. That is one of the great fish of the Atlantic seaboard. In recent years it has become more or less prolific on the Pacific coast, but in a span of 30 years the catch of shad in the United States has dropped from about 51,000,000 pounds a year to barely 15,000,000 pounds a year, a loss of more than 66⅔ per cent. Sturgeon used to abound in the waters of the Atlantic seaboard, in the Great Lakes, and elsewhere. In a span of 30 or 35 years the catch of the sturgeon has dropped from 18,000,000 pounds a year to 1,200,000 pounds a year.

The catch of lobster on the New England coast in 30 years has dropped from 30,000,000 pounds to slightly over 10,000,000 pounds. There again is a loss of 66 per cent of the catch of this fish. Crab was abundant at one time in the waters of the Chesapeake Bay and elsewhere, but in the period of five years from 1915 to 1920 that catch dropped from 50,000,000 pounds to about 23,000,000 pounds. In later years it has slightly increased. I think the last figures indicate that the catch has risen to approximately 30,000,000. Next take the herring of the Great Lakes. In a span of seven years that catch fell from about 35,000,000 pounds to 3,000,000 pounds. In the Great Lakes and in the Lake of the Woods, those vast inland oceans, the catch of all kinds of fish dropped in seven years from about 149,500,000 pounds to approximately 100,000,000 pounds. Those waters have apparently been depleted in that short space of years by approximately 50 per cent. The catch of whitefish in the Great Lakes area in half a century has fallen from more than 21,000,000 pounds to approximately 4,000,000 pounds a year.

That, gentlemen, is what is taking place with respect to the fisheries of the United States. Unless we give heed to the scientific problems involved, unless we give heed to the question of pollution and propagation and conservation and to all of the other factors that make for perpetuation of the species, we are going to see in a few short years many of these valuable commercial foods unknown to the people of the United States.

What is our duty? I have said that nature is not inexhaustible. We have seen our forests go, we have seen the buffalo go, we have seen the fur-bearing animals disappear. I shall never get out of my mind the tragic story of the Atlantic sea salmon. I referred to it the other day. Within the memory of men on this floor the Atlantic sea salmon entered 28 streams between New York and the Canadian border. To-day that Atlantic sea salmon is seen in just 1 of those 28 streams. You have seen the situation on the Pacific coast. Not many years ago the Sacramento River was a great salmon river. You have seen the catch from that river disappear, and you have seen that same process going on up to the Columbia and on up through those rivers, reaching farther up to the north and up to the Territory of Alaska, represented by the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. It seems to your committee that we owe an obligation to the people of the United States, and we owe an obligation to those that are yet to come, to adopt every means of science and to make liberal expenditure to save this heritage to our people. This bill proposes what we believe to be a scientific, well-rounded program looking to those ends. The committee summoned before it the Commissioner of Fisheries, and I say to you that there is no project in this bill that does not have the approval of the scientific experts of the Government. After we have mapped out what we believe to be an essential program of construction, we have provided what we conceive to be a minimum of force to make useful and effective the physical aids we are giving in this bill.

I personally commend the bill to the membership of the House as a wise and necessary measure of conservation. It forces upon us, in my judgment, an obligation that we must now meet, or there will rest upon us in the years to come the onus of a clear failure to meet a manifest duty. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for one hour.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, my opposition to the bill is an opposition to the bill in its present form; not at all an opposition to the purposes of the bill, but because the bill as it stands if enacted into law is an encroachment upon the established Budget policy of our Government; an encroachment which, with this precedent established, would likely be followed by a multitude of similar measures and result in the destruction of the Budget system.

The bill in question has a widespread and comprehensive program of construction and maintenance of various activities that are deemed useful in promoting the ideas that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WHITE] has urged. It involves an expenditure of several million dollars. The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries have not submitted the measure to the Budget to ascertain to what extent, if any, it would be in conflict with the President's financial program. Their bill provides that for each of certain years to come there shall be certain new buildings provided, or new establishments created; that in each of certain years there shall be a considerable sum of money spent in the development and maintenace of those institutions or establishments. In other words, if the bill becomes a law, so far as this subject is concerned the hands of the President are tied with reference to the expenditure of money for these purposes. The Congress will insist, the committee that reported the bill, and gentlemen who are interested in the items will insist that because this law was enacted the Budget has no discretion as to the recommendations it can make to the Congress on this subject, and when the items come to Congress from the Budget it will be insisted, first, that the Committee on Appropriations has no discretion as to such items, but must recommend them to the House because of the enactment of this legislation; and then that the House and the Congress have no discretion; that these appropriations have not only been authorized but they have been directed.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] a few minutes ago called attention to the long program of bills pending before Congress that call for new expenditures of public funds. But that list was by no means complete. I did not notice this one among the list, and I know of others that were not included in the list. It is time to stop, look, and listen.

My position on this—and I hope it will be understood—is not caused by any fear or any personal feeling as to an encroachment on the jurisdiction intrusted to the committee of which I am a member; my fear as to the bill is aroused, however, because, growing out of my experience as a member of that committee and my contact with this subject I realize what this kind of legislation will do to the Budget program, and I say to you that this House can not afford to embark upon a policy that means a destruction of the Budget policy. The Budget policy in its importance is greater than the importance of any one committee or any set of committees. It is greater even than the importance of protecting the fisheries of the country.

But there is no need for any conflict. The fisheries of the country can be protected through a proper legislative policy without tying the hands of the Budget and the Congress for five years to come.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. CROWTHER. According to the language of the bill these are authorizations, are they not? It will be in the discretion of the Committee on Appropriations as to whether that money shall be expended or not?

Mr. CRAMTON. Of course it would be theoretically in their discretion, but if this bill passes the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WHITE] and others interested in the item will say to the Budget and to the Committee on Appropriations and to this House that because this bill is a law there is nothing to be done but to make the appropriations. For instance, I will call to the attention of the gentleman from New York——

Mr. CROWTHER. Has that policy been general, does the gentleman think?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say this, that there was a case. I will say to the gentleman there was a bill passed with reference to the payment of certain Indian claims in Nebraska. That bill permitted the payment of interest, a thing somewhat out of the ordinary. That bill did not attract much attention when it was considered in the House. The facts were not brought forcibly to the attention of the House. Afterwards the bill became a law authorizing the payment.

The Committee on Appropriations, under the leadership of that wonderful man whose services we have just lost, took the position that the claim was unconscionable as against the Government and that we ought not to pay the amount provided by that bill. There was no division of sentiment on that question in the committee, so the committee did not report the amount to the House. The gentlemen interested in it offered an amendment on the floor, and the gentleman, if he likes excitement, will find it refreshing to look back to the RECORD and see the castigation that was heaped upon the Committee of Appropriations for not having reported the item in accordance with the law. There was no doubt in my mind then that if the item had come to the attention of the House in the beginning the House would not have approved it; but it having come up as it did, this House voted to put it in the appropriation bill, because it was authorized by existing law.

The only time to safeguard these things is before a bill becomes a law. I was unable to see that there was any report on this bill from the Budget, so I brought the matter to the attention of the Budget.

Mr. QUIN. Did not the Bureau of Fisheries designate all these items?

Mr. CRAMTON. I assume it did. There is no bureau of the Government that will neglect the opportunity to designate a number of expenditures. The matter, I am advised, was considered by the Director of the Budget and by the President. I have a letter here from the Budget. It states the bill is in conflict with the President's financial program because of the stipulated cost for stipulated fiscal years:

BUREAU OF THE BUDGET,
Washington, May 8, 1928.

Hon. LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CRAMTON: This is in reply to your inquiry relative to the status of H. R. 13383, "to provide for a five-year construction and maintenance program for the United States Bureau of Fisheries." This measure has never been referred to this office for review. A study, however, has been made of its provisions, and it was presented to the President this morning to ascertain his attitude relative thereto. The President holds that this legislation would be in conflict with his financial program because of the stipulated cost for stipulated fiscal years.

Very truly yours,

H. M. LORD, Director.

Having that information, I made a study of the bill and I have sought to suggest an amendment that would give full force and effect to the desire of the committee to have Congress indicate their interest in this program, their desire to indicate a priority program of these improvements and still not to tie the hands of the Budget and of Congress for five years to come. I have suggested this amendment to the gentleman from Maine, but he has not as yet seen his way clear to accept it. I have much regretted that, and I have hoped that even yet he might see his way clear to accept it, because it does not destroy the work of his committee; it preserves the work of his committee, but it does not, with this amendment, tie the hands of the Budget and of Congress and would seem not to be in conflict with the financial program of the President.

The first five sections of the bill provide the construction program. Section 7 has various subdivisions having to do with this program and the appropriations authorized. I propose to add a new subdivision to be known as subdivision (d) and to read this way, leaving the first five sections as they are:

(d) That the authorizations herein given in sections 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 with reference to appropriations for certain specified years are for the purpose of indicating priority proposed to be given the various projects enumerated therein, but shall not be held to require the appropriations therein enumerated to be made in the years specified, and the appropriations enumerated are likewise authorized in prior or subsequent years in annual or supplemental appropriation bills.

In other words, that amendment makes it clear that the first five sections are the indicated program, with certain priorities; that from year to year the estimates will be made; and that each year it shall be in order for the Budget and for Congress to either expedite the program or to slow it up, as the financial conditions of that year and the revenues of the Government may seem to indicate.

Under the bill as presented by the committee, following up the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER], let me emphasize to the committee and to the Committee of the Whole that there is an item authorized for the year 1932 for a fish-cultural station in the State of Ohio. It is true Congress is not obliged to make that appropriation in 1932, although it will be insisted that they are committed; but if Congress should not make the appropriation in 1932 there would be no authority of law to make it in 1931, in 1933, or any other year. It is only authorized to be made in one special year.

Apart from that proposition there may be great changes in conditions as to the relative importance of these several projects in five years to come; there may be changes, so that instead of Kansas, North Dakota, and Arkansas being left until 1932 they ought to come in in 1930 and that something in 1930 ought to be postponed. Under the committee bill it is a hard and fast program that can not be modified by the Budget or by Congress because of lack of authority, but under this amendment it becomes flexible and it can be modified and changed in accordance with conditions.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. I was just wondering whether this legislation would be carried out if we must depend upon the Bureau of the Budget to recommend appropriations in accordance with the idea of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAMTON. My observation has been—and I perhaps have watched these things as closely as anyone here, as I have been a member of that committee ever since the Budget system was inaugurated—that the President, acting through the Budget, has shown a great desire at all times to meet the wishes of the legislative branch just as far as was reasonably possible, and I am satisfied that the enactment of this bill into law with the amendment I have suggested does not destroy the legislation, but would have a great deal of weight with the Budget next winter and each year afterwards in the making up of the program. Here would be an expression from Congress, and if financial conditions permitted it would be followed. But suppose there should come a slump in the revenues of the Government and a retrenchment had to be made, why should not this question be open for consideration as well as other questions?

Mr. BUSBY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BUSBY. Is it the gentleman's idea that the designation of places and amounts are proper as contained in the bill? Is that satisfactory to the gentleman?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am speaking now of the first five sections, the construction program. I think the Budget takes the position that it would be helpful to have some knowledge as to the priority program desired by Congress, but that it is not desirable to tie their hands absolutely for five years to come.

Mr. BUSBY. There is no objection, however, as I understand, from the Budget to the different items being designated with the amounts.

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not know of any objection except the objection that the stipulated cost for stipulated fiscal years ties the hands of the President and ties the hands of Congress. The amendment I have suggested does not eliminate them from the bill but leaves it clearly to an expression of Congress as to what the Congress would like and provides that these items that are in the bill authorized for certain years are authorized for those years or for any preceding or subsequent year.

Mr. BUSBY. In view of the experience we have had with the public buildings bill which leaves to the Treasury the duty to designate places and amounts and in view of the fact that nothing particularly has been done during the two or three years it has been the law, does not the gentleman think it is proper——

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit, it is not to be said nothing has been done.

Mr. BUSBY. Outside of the District of Columbia, I will put it.

Mr. CRAMTON. The program for Federal buildings has progressed as rapidly as it could have progressed in any event.

Mr. BUSBY. Does not the gentleman think it would have progressed more rapidly and more certainly if we had designated the places and the amounts and had required those things to be done which ought to have been done and which would have given service to the country?

Mr. CRAMTON. The only delay there has been has been the necessary preliminary examination to ascertain what buildings were required and what activities ought to be housed in these buildings. If we wanted the money spent efficiently to meet the real need, it could not have advanced any further than it has.

Mr. BUSBY. Does not the gentleman think, in view of the small amount of money, relatively speaking, contained in this bill and the great urgency that we should put behind the proposition involved in the bill, it is entirely proper in this case for us to designate and require these things to be done?

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not, or I would not be making this speech. Now let me ask the gentleman a question——

Mr. BUSBY. I was trying to direct the gentleman's attention——

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not know whether the gentleman is on the committee or not.

Mr. BUSBY. No.

Mr. CRAMTON. All right; I will get a somewhat unbiased judgment.

Mr. BUSBY. The gentleman sees I have no "look in" except through the gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. Section 5 says there shall be a fish-cultural substation in North Dakota in 1932, and section 3 says there shall be one in Florida in 1930.

There is a section here with reference to contributions by the States, and so forth. Now, does not the gentleman conceive it is possible that in three years' time or five years' time there may be such a change in conditions affecting North Dakota and Florida that the Florida item might not be ready in 1930? I know that is a violent assumption. I think they would always be ready for $100,000 to be spent in Florida; but assuming they were not ready in 1930, and North Dakota was ready, Congress ought to have the authority, the Budget ought to have the authority, and the Appropriations Committee ought to have the authority to switch these items around, and under the committee bill this could not be done.

Mr. BUSBY. In answer to that I would suggest that the Congress would still have that power over these items when it became apparent they were not needed.

Mr. CRAMTON. But it would need legislation.

Mr. BUSBY. Yes; but we could still do those things just as we can protect the Treasury in the initiation of them.

Mr. CRAMTON. If it is so easy to get legislation, the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries could bring this bill in every year instead of having a five-year program in one bill.

Mr. BUSBY. But we have to plan and start our work before it can be carried out, and it seems to me that the planning of the expenditure provided in this bill is very fair and very reasonable, and gives a very fair and very reasonable allocation all along the line.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Is it the gentleman's theory that if the bill is passed without the amendment he suggests, in case the Appropriations Committee in the first year on the first item refuses to appropriate, the whole authorization falls down?

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, no; not at all. For instance, for the first year there are authorized items for New Mexico and Idaho for fish-cultural stations. If Congress failed to make the appropriation authorized for these items in that year there would be no authority to make the appropriation the next year, but other items would not be affected thereby.

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. ASWELL. In case of the contingency which the gentleman mentioned between Florida and North Carolina in 1930, would not Congress be in session that year?

Mr. CRAMTON. Congress would be in session every year, as the gentleman and I both are quite aware from some experience, but the committee has indicated by reporting out a five-year program that it is not easy to report legislation year after year.

Mr. ASWELL. This is not the only bill that this Congress has passed providing a plan for three years or five years, and the committee has studied this question perhaps more than any gentleman in the House and the five-year program came from the Director of the Budget——

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman has a question, all right. I can not yield for a speech. I am afraid the gentleman does not approve of the force of my speech.

Mr. ASWELL. I did not get the force of it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does the gentleman wish to ask a question?

Mr. ASWELL. I do. I want to know if the gentleman knows that the five-year program was suggested by the Bureau of the Budget?

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, it was not suggested by the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. DAVIS. Oh, yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am advised by the Budget that this bill has never been submitted to them and they were never asked for a report on it until I made my request.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield, but I can not yield indefinitely.

Mr. DAVIS. I want to say that that statement is true, but the matter was discussed by the committee with the Director of the Budget last year and the Director of the Budget was the one that originally suggested a five-year program.

Mr. CRAMTON. All right; and General Lord states to me that in so far as an indication of priority is concerned, he likes the idea, and that is preserved in my amendment; but when you come to tie him down definitely for five years and provide that the appropriations must be made at a certain time no matter what is the condition of the Treasury, he does not approve it.

Mr. LINTHICUM, Mr. GREEN, and Mr. SMITH rose.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I merely want to say to the gentleman that I have no doubt he remembers some years ago we passed a bill authorizing an appropriation for parks to the extent of a cent for each inhabitant of the United States. The Committee on Appropriations has not made the appropriations in accordance with that bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. That bill said "not to exceed so much," and I expect to ask the committee to put the words "not to exceed" in a certain part of this bill.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Then it will be like the parks and we will not get the appropriation.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, it leaves some discretion to Congress.

Mr. SMITH. In what way does the program laid out in this bill differ from the program laid out in regard to the building of roads? For instance, a few years ago we authorized an appropriation of $7,500,000 to be expended, one-third each year, for three years in the national parks. Is not this a similar program, providing for the expenditure of so much money each year for a period of five years?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am not sure that that was passed while the Budget system was in operation; it was some time ago, and I am not sure of the text of it.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will yield.

Mr. GREEN. I do not see anything to prevent our adding to this two years from now.

Mr. CRAMTON. I can only repeat what I said—legislation can be passed, but the Appropriations Committee would have no authority to recommend an appropriation.

Mr. GREEN. Does not the gentleman know that the industry is declining?

Mr. CRAMTON. I can not yield to go into that.

Mr. CROWTHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield.

Mr. CROWTHER. Does the gentleman know whether the geographical allocation is equal—are all the States here except those that now have fish hatcheries? It seems to me almost like a miniature river and harbor bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] says, it suggests a pork bill. I assume that the committee has intended to satisfy all the different States that were interested in the subject.

Now, I am trying to emphasize that this bill as drawn, specifying a program of expenditure for certain years, several years to come, is intended to leave no discretion to the Budget, no discretion to the Appropriations Committee—and is intended to leave no discretion to the Congress in subsequent years. It is intended now to fix definitely the appropriations for five years to come.

If the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries can report a definite program that the President says is in opposition to his financial program, because it does fix stipulated cost, then the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee on Agriculture, and every other committee of the House likewise may do it, and are likely to do it. If we are to have a Budget system, this sort of thing can not exist; and if it does, you will destroy the Budget system.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Is not that just what the Committee on Military Affairs did do in a five-year program?

Mr. CRAMTON. The Committee on Military Affairs and other committees show a tendency that way, and my remarks are to sound a note of warning that if you want a Budget system, you have got to stand by the side of the executive branch in its defense.

I repeat what I said before, that I believe the Budget system was the salvation of the finances of the Government following the World War, and that the Budget system could not have accomplished what it has accomplished without the legislative and the executive branches of the Government working side by side in carrying it out. The President alone can not make a successful Budget system. The Congress alone can not make a successful Budget system. There must be a cooperation of both of the branches in order to make it successful.

A few years ago in a certain Western State they adopted a budget system. Then they elected a governor and a legislature on an economy platform. That winter the legislature passed and the governor signed appropriations totaling more than they ever had made before in any one year in that State. Why? Because when the legislature met there were a number of men who wanted certain bridges built, there were a number of men who wanted certain roads constructed, there were a number of men who wanted certain institutions built, and they joined together in a program which they sent to the governor and which he accepted and which abrogated the budget system they had created and made appropriations greater than they had ever passed before in any one year.

Congress up to this time has cooperated, and the Budget system has been successful. But if we are to adopt this policy because this program looks good, because this other thing looks good, and that expenditure seems desirable and this one seems to be needed—if we are to judge each one separately, we will have a total far beyond the revenues of the Government.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman is quite familiar with the activities of the Government. I supported this law, but I would like to ask my friend if he thinks it was the intention of Congress when the Budget law was enacted that Congress should abrogate its powers to the Budget Bureau as to the policy to be pursued by the Government in undertaking new propositions?

Mr. CRAMTON. Congress not only did not abdicate its functions, under the Constitution it could not abdicate its responsibility. It has not abdicated its functions, but that does not prevent this House taking the position that we recognize the importance of an orderly system of governmental expenditures, and that we are going to cooperate with the administration to bring that about. It is not a question of abdicating our functions, it is a question of performing those functions in the most efficient manner possible. When we pass a bill here which says that five years from now in a certain year we are to build a fish hatchery in the State of Florida and that three years from now we are to build a fish hatchery in the State of North Dakota, we are not abdicating our functions, but we are not maintaining them, and we are frittering away our opportunity and our responsibilities.

Mr. CRISP. I am not concerned about this bill. I know under the present administration if a bill is introduced in Congress providing a new undertaking or a new policy, even if the Secretary of the Department having charge of the matter feels favorably inclined to the legislation, yet when the committee of Congress submits the bill to the Budget and they are forced to do so, and the Budget makes an adverse report, then that particular department notifies the committee of the House that the legislation is in conflict with the President's economy policy, and therefore are against it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. CRISP. Is not that pressing the Budget System far beyond what was intended? When we leave to the administration the question of whether Congress shall embark on a new policy, are we not going far beyond what we intended originally by the Budget?

Mr. CRAMTON. Not at all. That is not what is involved. The different departments are a part of the executive branch of the Government, and when the President starts out on a policy of economy, if he means business and really wants economy, there is only one thing that he can do and that is to say to the various parts of the executive branch of the Government, "You must cooperate with me; there must be some coordination." But from the very beginning of the Budget plan, Congress has insisted upon its right to have any information it asks for, and there is not a bill which comes before the Committee on Appropriations but that a request is made for information concerning items that are not in the Budget, or, if desirable, an increase is made in items that are in the Budget. When Congress asks for that information, it is the business of the executive branch of the Government to give the information. Then the prohibition is off, the information is given. Let me say to the gentleman from Georgia, that the way this thing has operated from the beginning emphasizes that an efficient and effective budget system must be bottomed upon cooperation of the executive and the legislative branches, and so, when the President sent in his first budget of estimates, the appropriation committee adopted a policy to govern all of its subcommittees and that policy was that we would not report to the House any appropriation bill that exceeded in its total the amount specified in the Budget. We were not obliged to adopt the policy. Congress was not obliged to approve the policy, but Congress, I think, has approved it. The result of that was that if we did not increase the total of any one of the appropriation bills above the total of the Budget, the total of all the bills would not exceed the total in the Budget, and the result of that has been that each year Congress has recommended an expenditure lower than the Budget recommended—in all many millions. But accompanying that, too, by reason of our constitutional authority, we have frequently recommended that this or that item be reduced, or that certain items be increased, and oftentimes that items be inserted which were not in the Budget at all, keeping only in mind that the totals should not be above the totals in the Budget. The great purpose of the Budget is to insure a comparison of the supposed expenditures with the anticipated revenues of the Government, and so long as we keep within the totals we are not disturbing that balance between the receipts and expenditures.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I am in perfect accord with the last statement of the gentleman that the Executive send the Congress estimates for appropriations for objects authorized by law.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. For the purpose of preventing competition between the various departments and cutting off unnecessary overhead charges. I think that was what was clearly intended when the Budget was adopted—that the administration should pass on the necessity for appropriations for objects already authorized by law, and how much should be appropriated for each of those objects; but I do not believe it was intended by Congress, nor do I believe it is right, that Congress would have to submit to the Bureau of the Budget and get its report upon a new project or new legislation, and that if the Budget is opposed to it that the Secretary of that department must muzzle his own views as to the legislation and report to Congress that the legislation is opposed to the President's policy of economy, and that is the case to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman from Georgia were the Executive and administered the executive branch of the Government along the lines he has indicated he might cherish economy as a delightful program; but it would be only a dream. The actual realization of it would not occur, because there must be this coordination, and failing of coordination, if every head of a bureau is at liberty to run to Congress and make a personal appeal for additional expenditures without hindrance, you would not have much left in the way of a Budget system so far as practical results are concerned. I think perhaps I should say this to the gentleman from Georgia, so that I may not be misunderstood. I never have, and I do not intend now, to argue that Congress must slavishly follow the recommendations of the Budget. The mere fact that the Budget disapproves of a proposed expenditure is not alone and of itself reason why I would vote against that expenditure. It may be a contributing cause; it ought to have consideration by the Congress; but need not necessarily be conclusive as to a particular expenditure. In this case, however, this bill goes far beyond a proposal that might be made as to a particular expenditure that is desirable to-day. Suppose this were a bill to establish a fish hatchery in the State of Florida. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN] would have his information, and even if there were a disapproval here from the Budget, it might be that with a presentation of facts as they now exist, for an expenditure now to be made, we might conclude to make it. But here comes a bill that proposes a program of expenditure for five years to come and which says that five years from now, without knowledge as to what the condition of the Treasury then will be, without knowledge as to what the conditions then will be in the State of Florida, we must make an appropriation for a fish-cultural station there at $75,000. Here is a program laid down that ties the hands of the Budget for five years to come.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will yield for a question.

Mr. GREEN. Would not the gentleman prefer to take what appears to be the unanimous recommendation of his fellow committeemen and colleagues rather than that of the Bureau of the Budget?

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, the gentleman knows that if I did I would not be making this speech. I think the gentleman knows that I do not make speeches for the fun of making them. I hope to accomplish results, although I am not entirely certain at times. But I will say this: There has to be this cooperation between the Executive and the legislative branches to secure the success of the Budget system. If it were this bill alone, this one bill, I would not feel so concerned about it. But standing as a practice that is growing in this House and a practice that will grow more rapidly if this bill becomes a law, I felt it necessary to sound a note of warning. I say, if we are to have a successful cooperation, sooner or later if the President desires to protect the integrity of the Budget system he will find it necessary to veto such legislation as this, because this legislation, expanded through different committees of Congress, means destruction of the Budget.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield.

Mr. BOYLAN. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not far better to have a broad, comprehensive plan extending through the years than to go at things piecemeal?

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, yes. It appears to me that the gentleman was not here in the earlier part of my remarks; and, therefore, I think it is desirable to close with this emphasis on what I am proposing. I am not suggesting any limitation of the program that the committee outlined. It is true that it is desirable to make up a comprehensive program, and it is desirable to make up a program for several years ahead, based on the best information we have now. That is true; but I am objecting to making it inflexible. I am objecting to tying the hands of the Budget five years or six years to come.

I have suggested an amendment which I will read again. It will not destroy the bill, but in my judgment it will make it more effective and more workable. I am suggesting that these items as to the construction program for five years remain as they are, to stand as an expression of the policy desired by Congress, to stand as the present view of Congress with reference to the desired priority, but to give some discretion to the Budget and to Congress as to the years following.

The amendment I suggest is this—

> That the authorization herein given in sections 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 with reference to appropriations for certain specified years are for the purpose of indicating priority proposed to be given to the various projects enumerated therein, and shall not be held to require the appropriations therein enumerated to be made in the years specified, and the appropriations enumerated and likewise authorized in prior or subsequent years in annual or supplemental appropriation bills.

Then, as the years pass, in connection with the financial conditions of each year and the success in working out the proposed fisheries policies, the appropriations may be either expedited or retarded as Congress may desire.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. If that amendment is adopted, it would give the Committee on Appropriations authority to defer for 5 or 10 years, or any number of years, the appropriations for the project.

Mr. CRAMTON. The Appropriations Committee is only the servant of the House.

I think I am performing my responsibility and my duty, and I shall accept the vote of the House in deciding this question, just as the House decides every question in an appropriation bill. The recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations have often been overridden and will be hereafter overridden. If the recommendations made by the Committee on Appropriations meet the approval of this House, they stay in the bill. If their recommendations do not meet the approval of the House, they do not stay in the bill.

I will say frankly that this amendment is not offered with the expectation or intention of slowing up or retarding a desirable program, but in order to have some flexibility, so that each year the thing can be taken care of in the light of the facts then existing. I think the chances are at least equal, if my amendment is adopted, that appropriations might be expedited instead of retarded, because I think that gentlemen who are down at the end of the priority list are all going to be interested in expedition. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHREVE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, first I want to congratulate the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WHITE] and his committee on bringing out this splendid bill. [Applause.]

It has been apparent for some time to those of us who are handling the appropriations for the Bureau of Fisheries that there should be a building program in the Bureau of Fisheries. Now, it seems to me that the Bureau of Fisheries is about the last Government activity that has not received the attention of Congress. We have taken care of almost everybody else. Appropriations have been provided for about all the other activities, and now we come to the Bureau of Fisheries. It stands about where it stood 10 years ago. There has been no expansion. Sometimes we went down into the flour barrel to get a little money to help the Commissioner of Fisheries to get a fish hatchery established in North Carolina or elsewhere, but it has not been sufficient for proper development, not sufficient to cover the demands coming from every State in the Union—and they come every year. It seems that in this last year we have had more demands upon us than we have ever had before.

So I am glad that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WHITE] and his committee have at this time brought in this very meritorious measure. I hope to see it pass this House, and pass this afternoon. [Applause.]

There is much in it besides the recreational feature. There is another feature which refers to the commercial side and which refers to the scientific side. There is much in the bill. You have all read the bill, and I will not attempt to enumerate the things in it, but I want to say that many of us for years have been going across the boundary line into that splendid country to the north of us. Many of us spend much time up there every year, and many more would if they could. But, my friends, I want to bring good fishing right down to the man at home, to the man who stays at home, and to those who live so far away that they can not go across the Canadian border like some of the rest of us do. They are compelled to stay in the hot cities during the summer months, and possibly they can get away for a day or two at the week end and go to some stream or some lake where they can enjoy good fishing. I have been fishing all my life. I know what good fishing is, and I know I would like to have all my friends enjoy it as much as I do. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHREVE. I know of no recreational pursuit, which would command a greater number of enthusiasts or do more in building up our bodies tired with the cares of to-day, than will good fishing. Therefore I am for good fishing.

I am also for good fishing as an auxiliary food supply to that produced by the land. I believe our water resources should be as carefully husbanded as our land resources. I believe they merit the same care and thought as to ways and means of increasing their productivity, by fertilization, by cultivation, and judicious management. I believe that with the development of proper methods it will be possible to make thousands of acres of our water areas productive of fish, of oysters, of clams, of fresh water mussels, and other valued aquatic products.

Members of this body remember when our waters were far more productive of fish life than they are to-day; when in nearly every body of water we could catch a mess of fish within a reasonably short period of time. With these thoughts in mind let us consider present-day conditions in the cold light of fact.

This bill provides added facilities—new stations, larger and better stations, and it is only by such means that we can hope to satisfy this demand for fish. To foster and encourage the return of our people to the quiet places of nature and to see that they may enjoy good fishing and hunting, I believe to be a good investment and I am for it.

I am also greatly concerned about our great commercial fisheries and the falling off in the catch. In Lake Erie, which has been and should continue to be one of the greatest food-fish producing bodies of water in the world, the catch declined from over 76,000,000 pounds to 38,000,000 pounds during the period 1915 to 1925, a decline of 50 per cent, and the end of the decline appears to be not in sight.

A survey made the past summer indicates that the fishery experienced the worst slump in its history. The white fish and ciscoe are approaching extermination and the yellow perch and yellow pike appear to be growing scarce. Only the blue pike, the sauger, and sheepshead appear to be holding their own. While cultivated water areas are capable of producing from 150 to 300 pounds of fish per acre, the productivity of Lake Erie is only 10 pounds per acre.

Some of my colleagues may ask if this or that cause does not explain the decline. Frankly, I do not know. I do know that this bill is aimed to provide the Bureau of Fisheries with funds for finding the answers and I have the confidence to believe that given the funds they will be able to work out a satisfactory system of fish husbandry. Provisions for such work are contained in the sections for increasing the appropriations and personnel of the divisions of inquiry and fishery industries.

What I have said with respect to Lake Erie and the other Great Lakes applies to our other interior and coastal water fisheries. In the Hudson River, once famed for shad, the catch has fallen from about 4,400,000 to 125,000 pounds in 35 years, and a considerable percentage of the shad now consumed on the Atlantic seaboard is caught in the rivers of California, the progeny of earlier plantings from the Atlantic coast by the Bureau of Fisheries.

In 25 years the catch of the celebrated sockeye salmon in the three Pacific Coast States decreased from forty-two to less than seven million pounds, and only by heroic efforts on the part of the Bureau of Fisheries are the salmon fisheries of Alaska being maintained. Many illustrations of this character might be given, but these will serve to show the need for expanding the research program as provided for in this bill.

While the sea is far from being a limitless storehouse of food and other products, man can undoubtedly draw upon its resources to a much greater extent than at present. Recent advances in knowledge have disclosed the value of sea products as a feed for cattle, hogs, and poultry. From what has been learned, it appears by the use of this material some of the worst ills to which our domestic animals are subjected can be largely if not wholly eliminated, particularly goiter, tuberculosis, and so forth. While such foods will not be produced in sufficient quantities to replace present foods, effort should be made to develop satisfactory ways and means of recovery of such products and to render them available. While this may involve the development of technical processes, the results will justify the expenditure. I am told that we are far behind European countries in the development of such processes and uses. This bill contains provision for an expansion of technological research by the Bureau of Fisheries, which in the light of previous work of this character will pay for itself many times over in added wealth.

Under the provisions of this bill, instead of expanding the work of the Bureau of Fisheries in spots with the attendant weaknesses of such development, an effort has been made to develop a well-rounded program. I believe the Members of this body are thoroughly conversant with the need for more fish-cultural stations. The fullest efficiency of the stations depends upon the development of ways and means for controlling epidemics of fish diseases which may break out at these stations; also of improving the fertility and productivity of the ponds and by selective breeding to produce brood stocks which are disease resistant, are productive of a greater number of eggs, and of a stock of faster growing fish. This is but a single illustration to reveal the interdependence of the several divisions, provisions for which are contained in the bill. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there are hereby authorized to be appropriated during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1928, such amounts as may be necessary for—

(1) The establishment of a fish-cultural station in each of the following States, at a cost not to exceed the amount specified: New Mexico, $50,000; Idaho, $60,000.

(2) The establishment of a fish-cultural substation in each of the following States, at a cost not to exceed the amount specified: Wisconsin (in the southern part of the State), $50,000; Montana, $35,000.

(3) The establishment of fisheries laboratories in the State of Washington, at a cost not to exceed $100,000, and a laboratory in the Territory of Alaska, at a cost not to exceed $50,000.

(4) The establishment of experimental and bass and trout stations in the State of Maryland or West Virginia at a cost not to exceed $60,000.

(5) The purchase and repair of the Rogue River substation in the State of Oregon, at a cost not to exceed $35,000.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. In subdivision 5 of the first section, after the word "Oregon," add the words "and Oklahoma." I see Oklahoma is not in this bill and I think it ought to be in it.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee can see its way clear to accept that amendment.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York by adding "Nebraska." I can not find Nebraska in the bill.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CROWTHER: On page 2, in line 11, after the word "Oregon," insert "and Oklahoma."

Mr. CRAMTON. I hope the gentleman from Oklahoma will not be too enthusiastic. It says "Rogue River substation."

Mr. HASTINGS. I would like to see Oklahoma in the picture, because I think it would help matters very materially.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York by adding, after the word "Oklahoma," the words "and Nebraska."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska to the amendment offered by Mr. CROWTHER: After the word "Oklahoma" insert "and Nebraska."

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, the righteousness of it is so apparent that I will not take up any time.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that I am one of the members of this committee who has no fish hatchery in this bill, and we are not asking for one at this time. The gentleman from Nebraska has a fish hatchery.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Two or three of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, it is suggested and urged by the committee that the provisions of this bill will greatly increase the production of fish. Well, this bill looks more like pork than fish to me. A portion of the pork is handed to no less than 33 States involved, and the question here is, seemingly, whether or not, regardless of the budgetary program, Congress is to legislate and authorize the appropriation of funds years in advance.

There is no one who is more jealous of the rights of Congress than I am; in fact, I believe I am a source of annoyance both to my colleagues on the floor and in committee in standing for the prerogatives of Congress. Yes, I can not see any conflict between the Budget Bureau and Congress. The Budget Bureau is simply an adviser, and if we are to legislate intelligently, with the ever-increasing functions of the Federal Government, no body of men of 435 members can possibly go into the details of expenditures without the aid of a fact-finding bureau such as the Budget Bureau is for Congress.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Where is the fact-finding bureau for the Navy Department's five-year program?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Well, that is entirely different, for the simple reason that there you have the construction of large vessels which require over a year to complete, and it would be impossible to appropriate each year or to authorize each year the amount for the installment construction of a ship during a specific fiscal year. But the gentleman knows I have always taken a stand against extravagant programs looking into the future.

A former distinguished Member of this House, the lamented Julius Kahn, of California, was fond of telling a story of an appropriation, such as we have before us, during the early days of his service in this House, some 25 or 30 years ago, when an appropriation was made for a fish station in some inland State, and under the authorization the Committee on Appropriations was compelled to make the appropriation. They had the money for the fish hatchery in an inland State, in an inland town, and in order to be able to use the money they had to go to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and get an appropriation to build a canal, bringing some water from the river into the town. I do not know how much fish the State of Idaho produces, or the State of Montana or the State of Arkansas or the State of Indiana——

Mr. SMITH. I can tell the gentleman, so far as Idaho is concerned. We are endeavoring to take care of our fish industry there. We have 10 hatcheries that are kept up at the expense of the State, but our State is the only one in that northwestern country that has no Government fish hatchery.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. So the gentleman's State is included in the 33 States in this list.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes it a sporting proposition, the gentleman from Maine makes it a food proposition, and the gentleman from Idaho makes it an equitable proposition, because his State has no Federal hatchery to date.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Are they not all correct?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, I suppose so. At any rate, I want to say to the committee that the amendments suggested by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] limiting future appropriations are wholesome and should not be resisted. I shall vote for the amendments, and by the looks of things, with 33 States looked after in this bill, there will not be many votes for the amendments.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1929, such amounts as may be necessary for—

(1) The establishment of a fish-cultural station in each of the following States, at a cost not to exceed the amount specified: Alabama, $50,000; Indiana, $50,000; Louisiana, $50,000; Tennessee (in the central part of the State), $50,000; Pennsylvania, $100,000.

(2) The establishment of a fish-cultural substation in each of the following States, at a cost not to exceed the amount specified: New Hampshire (in the White Mountain Forest), $25,000; South Carolina, or the enlargement of Orangeburg station in said State, $35,000; Texas (in the western part of the State), $35,000; Colorado, $20,000.

(3) The purchase of Mill Creek station in the State of California, at a cost not to exceed $20,000.

(4) The enlargement of Cape Vincent station in the State of New York, at a cost not to exceed $25,000.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. I notice in respect of several of these items, for instance, the one in Tennessee, you say "in the central part of the State," and in section 2, "in New Hampshire, in the White Mountain Forest," and "in Texas, in the western part of the State," and so on. Does this mean that later on you will ask for stations in other parts of these same States?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Not at all.

Mr. SMITH. Why do you designate where they shall be in the particular States?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. As I said in my opening remarks, every single item in this bill has the specific approval of the experts of the Government and in statements filed before the committee the reasons for the recommendations are set forth. In this particular instance the bureau knows now where in the State of Tennessee it desires this particular hatchery to be put and where the bureau so designated, we follow the recommendation of the bureau and have indicated it in this general way. Where there is no specific designation, the location will hereafter be determined according to conditions.

Mr. PARKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Yes.

Mr. PARKS. The Bureau of Fisheries will cooperate in the various States with the State bureau of fisheries, if that is their proper designation, in locating these fish hatcheries, in order to locate them in the most suitable and most convenient place possible.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. They will be located where they can carry on comparatively with the largest measure of success.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. (a) The stations, substations, and laboratories authorized by sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 shall be located in the States and parts thereof and in the territory specified, at such suitable points as may be selected by the Secretary of Commerce.

(b) Any appropriation made under authority of sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 may be expended for the purchase of sites, the purchase of equipment, the construction of buildings and ponds, and for such other expenses as may be incidental to the cost of the establishment, purchase, or enlargement, as the case may be, of the station, substation, or laboratory in question.

(c) No part of an appropriation made under authority of section 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, or 6 shall be expended in the construction, purchase, or enlargement of a station or substation until the State in which such station or substation is to be located shall have by legislative action accorded to the United States Commissioner of Fisheries and his duly authorized agents the right to conduct fish hatching and fish culture and all operations connected therewith in any manner and at any time that may by the commissioner be considered necessary and proper, any laws of the State to the contrary notwithstanding. The operation of any station, substation, or laboratory established, purchased, or enlarged under authority of this act shall be discontinued whenever the State ceases to accord such right; and such operation may be suspended by the Secretary of Commerce whenever in his judgment State laws or regulations affecting fishes cultivated are allowed to remain so inadequate as to impair the efficiency of such station, substation, or laboratory.

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, it is a great privilege and honor to present to the Members of the House, Mr. Nicola Sansanelli, the president of the F. I. D. A. C., which is the mother organization of all the associations of World War veterans. Mr. Sansanelli is a distinguished member of the Italian Chamber of Deputies. He was wounded six times while serving in the Italian Army during the World War. It is a great honor for me, as a veteran, to present him to the House of Representatives. [Applause, the Members rising.]

I am authorized to invite the veterans in the House to meet Mr. Sansanelli immediately in the Ways and Means Committee room.

CONSTRUCTION AND MAINTENANCE PROGRAM OF THE BUREAU OF FISHERIES

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 6, after line 9, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"(d) That the authorizations herein given in sections 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 with reference to appropriations for certain specified years are for the purpose of indicating priority proposed to be given the various projects enumerated therein, but shall not be held to require the appropriations therein enumerated to be made in the years specified, and the appropriations enumerated are likewise authorized in prior or subsequent years in annual or supplemental appropriation bills."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment that I have discussed.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's point of order comes too late.

Mr. GREEN. I spoke as soon as I could. I reserved the point of order as soon as the Clerk quit reading the amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. No; I had started my remarks before the gentleman rose.

Mr. GREEN. Certainly, as soon as I could get recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan had started debate. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take further time. I have expressed myself fully. I simply want to identify the amendment as being the one I discussed in my speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 12, after the word "appropriated," insert the words "not to exceed."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to permit the Congress to have some discretion to grant as much as needed each year.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, this question was considered at great length by the committee. It is the judgment of the committee that this provision is necessary to properly respond to and meet the purposes of the bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. And I will call attention to the fact that if Congress did not think it needed that appropriation it would not spend it.

Mr. CRAMTON. If that is to be the understanding there is no need of my amendment. If the Appropriations Committee shall consider the needs that may then exist—if that is the understanding of the gentleman from Maine, I will withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have another amendment, and I think this will commend itself to the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, beginning in line 21, after the word "appropriated," strike out the remainder of line 21, all of line 22, and insert "not more than 30 per cent shall be."

Mr. CRAMTON. I will state the purpose of this amendment. As the bill stands it provides that exactly 70 per cent shall be used in the field and 30 per cent for salaries. The purpose of the committee is to limit the amount that can be spent for salaries. When you say exactly 70 per cent for this and 30 per cent for that you have a difficult proposition. I am suggesting that not more than 30 per cent shall be spent for salaries and let it go at that. I think that is the purpose of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CRAMTON) there were 25 ayes and 59 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LEAVITT, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13383 and had directed him to report the same back without amendment, with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WHITE of Maine, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. REED of Pennsylvania and Mr. FLETCHER members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the War Department.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the business of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries is concluded this afternoon we may take up the Consent Calendar where we left off yesterday and continue to consider it until the usual hour of adjournment.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not think there will be any objection to the other two bills. They are navigation bills and will not consume much time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the two other bills to be called up by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries that it may be in order to consider the Consent Calendar beginning where the House left off yesterday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PUBLIC-HEALTH ACTIVITIES

Mr. MAPES, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, presented a conference report on the bill H. R. 11026, for printing under the rule.

MASTERLY INACTIVITY OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY ON COAL

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address which I delivered relating to coal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of coal. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

The Republican Party's failure to take any steps to solve the vital subject of a supply of cheap coal, with fair wages to the miners, is a neglect of national interests more serious than its bartering away of the Teapot Dome reserves to Harry Sinclair.

For four years a Congress controlled by the Republican Party has deliberately neglected the public interests and defied the repeated requests of its President, Calvin Coolidge, for legislation on this matter. He has again and again demanded action, but his suggestions have been ignored. His accusations against his own party and four Congresses have been more severe than any ever made by a Democrat.

In three separate messages President Coolidge called attention to the need for legislation creating governmental agencies to intervene in industrial disputes like that now raging in the bituminous industry and that which involved the hard-coal fields a few years ago, bringing suffering and economic losses to the people and business.

The President has also urged leaders of the industry to enter voluntary agreements for a more scientific production and distribution of coal. But the leaders of the coal industry, which include such men as Secretary Mellon and his relatives interested in the Pittsburgh Coal Co., have steadily declined to follow the President, though they are now demanding his renomination.

I do not believe the President's recommendations go far enough. I believe the Nation will have to take over the coal mines in times of emergencies sooner or later, and subject the industry to regulations like those imposed upon the railroads and other national necessities. Four years ago I introduced a bill to that effect, but it has been pigeonholed in committee. The coal barons seem to have more influence in this Congress than the people or their Representatives.

Not even the President can make any headway against the coal interests' strength on Capitol Hill.

Just to keep the record straight and place the blame where it belongs, here are the President's coal recommendations which the Republican-controlled Congresses have denied. In his 1923 message, on page 11, he said:

> The cost of coal has become unbearably high. It places a great burden on our domestic and industrial life. The public welfare requires a reduction in the price of fuel. With the enormous deposits in existence, failure of supply ought not to be tolerated. Those responsible for the conditions in this industry should undertake its reform and free it from the charge of profiteering.

Since 1923 the price of coal has gone up, both hard and soft. The bituminous producers are now refusing to let a Senate committee examine their production figures. Both the Congress and the coal industry must share the blame. They are the ones "responsible for the conditions in this industry."

The President was even more severe in his 1925 message. On page 16 he declared that—> inability to control and manage this great resource for the benefit of all concerned is very close to a national economic failure.

He has never used words of condemnation for the oil scandals, which shows what he thinks of those inside the industry and inside Congress who have neglected this subject. He again demanded legislation permitting the Government to create commissions empowered to deal with an emergency. But nothing ever came of that.

In 1926 the President reported that—> no progress appears to have been made within large areas of the bituminous coal industry toward creation of voluntary machinery by which greater assurance can be given to the public of peaceful adjustments of wage difficulties such as has been accomplished in the anthracite industry.

The President again emphasized the importance of legislation. But nothing was done by his Congress.

In his 1927 message the President once more asked for action. But long defiance of his requests seems to have disgusted him, for he confined his references to coal to one paragraph, even though the soft coal strike was under way at the time and emphasizing the need of quick action by Congress.

It is no wonder the President is disgusted. Certainly the country has a right to be.

REGULATING NAVIGATION ON THE GREAT LAKES

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 13037) to amend section 1, rule 2, rule 3, subdivision (e), and rule 9 of an act to regulate navigation on the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters, enacted February 8, 1895 (ch. 64, 28 Stat. L., sec. 645), on the House Calendar, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That rule 2, rule 3, subdivision (e), and rule 9 of section 1 of an act entitled "An act to regulate navigation on the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters," enacted February 8, 1895, and being chapter 64, Twenty-eighth Statutes at Large, section 645, be, and the same are, respectively, hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Rule 2. The lights mentioned in the following rules, and no others which may be mistaken for the prescribed lights, shall be exhibited in all weathers from sunset to sunrise. The word 'visible' in these rules, when applied to lights, shall mean visible on a dark night with a clear atmosphere.

"Rule 3, subdivision (e). A steamer of over 150 feet register length shall carry also, when under way, a bright white light so fixed as to throw the light all around the horizon, and of such character as to be visible at a distance of at least 3 miles. Such light shall be placed in line with the keel at least 15 feet higher from the deck and more than 75 feet abaft the light mentioned in subdivision (e); or in lieu thereof two such lights of the same character and height as herein described placed not over 30 inches apart horizontally, one on either side of the keel, and so arranged that one or the other or both shall be visible from any angle of approach.

"Rule 9. A vessel under 150 feet register length, when at anchor, shall carry forward, where it can best be seen, but at a height not exceeding 20 feet above the hull, a white light constructed so as to show a clear, uniform, and unbroken light visible all around the horizon at a distance of at least 1 mile.

"A vessel of 150 feet or upward in register length, when at anchor, shall carry in the forward part of the vessel two white lights at the same height of not less than 20 and not exceeding 40 feet above the hull and not less than 10 feet apart horizontally and athwartships, except that each need not be visible all around the horizon but so arranged that one or the other, or both, shall show a clear, uniform, and unbroken light and be visible from any angle of approach at a distance of at least 1 mile; and at or near the stern of the vessel two similar lights, similarly arranged and at such a height that they shall not be less than 15 feet lower than the forward lights. In addition the four anchor lights above specified, at least one white deck light shall be displayed in every interval of 100 feet along the deck measuring from the forward lights, said deck lights to be not less than 2 feet above the deck and arranged, so far as intervening structures will permit, so as to be visible from any angle of approach."

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER].

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to make safe navigation on the Great Lakes. The present law regulating lights was passed in 1895 when the ships sailing on the Great Lakes were much smaller than the present-day Lake steamers. In 1895 no ships on the Great Lakes exceeded in length 350 feet. To-day most of the ships on the Great Lakes are 600 feet or more in length. The present law, which was passed in 1895, provided that one light must be carried in the forward part of the ship and one near the stern at a certain height above the deck of the vessel. When ships were only 350 feet or less in length the two lights were sufficient. When, however, most of the steamers are 600 feet long, or more, the two lights now required are not sufficient, for the reason I shall now give. When a 600-foot steamer is anchored at night in some harbor and another ship sails toward the ship which is anchored, the navigator on the approaching vessel is in danger of mistaking the dark space between the two lights to be a channel and so steer his ship into the side of the standing ship, because the forward light and stern lights are about 600 feet apart. A mistake of this kind was made recently and a serious collision resulted.

This bill amends the law so as to require every ship to display at least one white light in every interval of 100 feet along the deck. This will enable the approaching navigator to determine easily that the space between lights is not an open channel, but a ship lying at anchor.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. SHREVE. I was not in the Chamber when the gentleman began his statement. Are the shipowners in favor of this bill?

Mr. CROSSER. Oh, yes; the Lake Carriers' Association is in favor of the bill. As a matter of fact, they have urged me to have the bill passed. This is undoubtedly in the interest of safe navigation. As I have already said, a very serious accident happened not long ago because of the fact that a ship lying at anchor in the harbor had but one light at each end of the ship and therefore about 600 feet apart. One can readily understand how the navigator of an approaching ship might think that the space between the lights constituted an open channel in the harbor. The bill also authorizes the exhibition of two lights on the after spar of a vessel in order to make possible with the law requiring that the rear light be visible from all points of the horizon. The law now permits a ship to carry one light only on the rear, and there is always an arc of invisibility caused by the spar and also by the smokestack.

Ships have become so much larger in every way, and they have so much larger houses fore and aft, and sometimes towering machinery, that the lights when placed as the law requires them are often hidden from the view of another ship. The bill provides that there shall be at least two lights, instead of one light, on the front mast so as to make it impossible to have any arc of invisibility to those looking from a ship at any point on the horizon. In other words, the bill provides that there will always be a light visible to the navigator of another ship. This provides that two lights shall be carried at the required height in the front part of the vessel and two lights at the required height about the deck at the rear. The two front lights must be at least 10 feet apart crosswise of the ship, so that there will be no possible way for an approaching navigator to make an excusable mistake. The whole purpose of the bill is to make safer navigation on the Great Lakes. The Steamboat Inspection Service has unqualifiedly indorsed the bill.

Mr. ABERNETHY. This applies only to the Great Lakes?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, collisions at sea are such agonizing affairs that Congress should do everything it can to help prevent them. We have had a great number of very serious collisions at sea of late. Probably the most serious one which caught the attention of the American people was the collision in which the S–4 was destroyed. It might be just as well at this time to have something to say in respect to the history of the investigation of the S–4. I charged on the floor of this House when the proposition was made that we should investigate into the accident that the administration wanted a whitewash, or that the collision would be blamed on the victims. That is just what has happened. Originally the court of special inquiry investigating the collision said that the Coast Guard was responsible. The Treasury Department protested against that, and with its powerful influence was able to change the decision of the naval court.

Then the naval court found fault with Admiral Brumby. The Navy Department realized that for Admiral Brumby it was responsible, and brought about a change again in the decision of the court, and Brumby was exonerated; and then, by a process of elimination, the very thing that I prophesied would happen has happened. The victims, the men of the S–4, are now charged before the court with being responsible for the situation.

This Congress failed flagrantly in its duty to the American people by not insisting on a careful investigation of the situation. Everybody knew who looked into the situation at all that the Navy Department was anxious to clear itself of criticism in the situation. Everybody knew that the Secretary of the Navy was responsible, as the head of the department, for not seeing to it that proper salvage and rescue processes were available for these men; he was responsible for not seeing to it that there were rafts, pontoons, and other equipment near by where the submarine was operating. He was responsible for the court in the situation. It was known that he wanted a whitewash, and the chairman of the Committee on Rules [Mr. SNELL] found fault with me for suggesting that there was any such thing in mind.

I say that the people of this country are not satisfied with the record of this special court. I say that this Congress has been derelict to the men in the service in not thoroughly looking into the situation. I believe the President of the United States is wrong when he thinks the people have forgotten this disaster. And I believe that he owes it to the people of the United States to bring the Secretary of the Navy on the carpet and to learn from him to what extent the Secretary of the Navy was responsible for the delay in the rescuing processes and in the salvage arrangements. [Applause.]

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of New York. Yes.

Mr. BOYLAN. May I ask the gentleman whether or not any responsibility was placed upon the rum-force chasers?

Mr. BLACK of New York. The court originally held the Coast Guard responsible, but the Treasury used its influence on the court of inquiry, and the so-called court changed its report. The idea of such a court that can come in with new facts just because the Treasury Department wanted them to do it, and then because the Navy Department wanted them to change the facts they proceed to change them. It is not that kind of an investigation that the American people are used to. They want a straightforward and fair and nonpartisan investigation by an agency outside of the departmental influences, and it ought to be had. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REGULATION OF NAVIGATION ON THE GREAT LAKES

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 13032) on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine calls up the bill H. R. 13032, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13032) to amend the act of February 8, 1895, entitled "An act to regulate navigation on the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters"

Be it enacted, etc., That rule 7 of the act of Congress approved February 8, 1895, entitled "An act to regulate navigation on the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters," be amended so as to read as follows:

"RULE 7. The lights for tugs under 100 tons register (net), whose principal business is harbor towing, and for boats navigating only on the River St. Lawrence, also ferryboats, rafts, and canal boats, shall be regulated by rules which have been or may hereafter be prescribed by the Board of Supervising Inspectors of Steam Vessels."

SEC. 2. All laws, or parts of laws, inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect on and after its approval.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, the report fully describes the bill. I have no desire to discuss it, and unless somebody desires time I move a vote on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

THE AIR MAIL

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my remarks relative to the establishment of night air-mail service between New York and Atlanta, the establishment of the philatelic agency, special issues authorized by the Postmaster General, and to incorporate a statement by Second Assistant Postmaster General Glover on the same subjects.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, with the authorization by the Postmaster General of a special stamp commemorative of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the encampment of Washington's army at Valley Forge, which will be issued on May 26 of this year, it seems fitting to bring to the attention of Congress the increasing interest of stamp collectors in issues of this character and to point out the valuable contribution made by these men, women, and children to the Post Office Department.

There is not a single move made by the department which fails to get its quota of scrutiny for some possible philatelic value. The most recent event next to the Valley Forge stamp, which was proposed by Representative WATSON, of Pennsylvania, was the inauguration of night air mail service between New York and Atlanta.

Thousands of pieces of mail carried on the first flight are either now cherished items in collections or in time will become so as the interesting and intricate system of "collecting" continues to operate. These covers can never be duplicated. There can never be another "first flight" of the night air mail between New York, Atlanta, and intermediate points. For this reason, envelopes and mail carried on the first flight have an especial significance and resultant value. The same is true of past first flights, and will hold good of all first flights to come in the future.

When the Lindbergh stamp was put on sale it was bought by the thousands in sheets and portions of sheets. Thousands of these stamps are now in collections in all parts of the world. They have never been used and never will be for mailing purposes. In this way the Government receives large sums in revenue for which it is not called upon to render any service, and the sums of money thus received helps the revenues materially.

What I have said about the Lindbergh stamp is true of all other special issues, although there was probably a more widely popular demand for that issue than some others.

Sensing this appeal, it was my privilege and pleasure to have suggested to Postmaster General New the issuance of a Lindbergh stamp soon after his epoch-making flight in 1927 had been made. The stamp was hurriedly gotten out and went on sale the day he arrived for his home-coming reception in St. Louis. From then on for several weeks the post offices of the country were unable to supply the demand for this commemorative stamp.

Since then it has been my pleasure to have met the "flying colonel" on several occasions, the most recent one being when I was a passenger in an airplane of which he was pilot. Having flown before the experience was new to me only in the complete mastery he had of every detail connected with the flight and the confidence his mastery inspired from start to finish.

PHILATELY AND HISTORY

It is but natural that stamps and stamp collecting should interest so many of our people. The history of our Nation is inseparably connected with an incident in Boston Harbor where stamps were a most important factor. You all recall the Boston tea party! It was held because the offending tax on the tea was levied by means of stamps. Congress was brought together in 1765 to remonstrate against the imposition of these new taxes.

Unfortunately, there were no stamp collectors—or philatelists, as we are called now—in those days. As a result, few of the priceless historic stamps were saved. Those saved are most highly valued and are within reach of only a few collectors.

One thing which contributes largely to the scarcity of the older stamps, not only of the United States but other countries, is the fact that until 1840 adhesive stamps did not exist.

Instead documents were stamped much as a notary's seal is impressed on papers sworn to before him.

In 1840 Great Britain, at the suggestion of Sir Rowland Hill, began the use of adhesive stamps. Brazil followed in 1843; and in 1847 the United States adopted the plan.

PHILATELY AND POLITICS

In a recent campaign in the district I have the honor to represent, the use was made of a powerful weapon which my knowledge of philately placed in my hands, and since the famous tea party in Boston Harbor more than a hundred and fifty years ago, it is doubtful if stamps have played such a conspicuous part in connection with American politics.

I had obtained an envelope which contained a letter written in Russia and sent to Philadelphia. The postage on the letter was paid by many sheets of Russian stamps, 100 in each sheet, which, when folded together, back to back, made a double strip of stamps 15½ feet in length, or, counting each side, a strip 6 inches wide and 31 feet long. As the strip was folded and refolded to conform to the size of the letter, the whole made a package which bears a striking resemblance to an accordion.

In all, the postage on this letter was paid by 1,625 stamps, each of the denomination of 250 rubles, making a total face value of 406,250 rubles. Before the World War this number of rubles would have equaled $207,137.50 in United States currency. However, at the time the letter was sent, they were only sufficient to pay the equivalent of 15 American cents worth of postage.

During the campaign I exhibited this Russian cover more than a score of times at various places in my district. No matter how large the room in which I was speaking, no one in the audience had any difficulty in seeing the "accordion" letter and visualizing the enormous depreciation in the value of the Russian ruble which it so graphically represented. I used the letter to illustrate what I believed might happen to the United States if ever the American people permitted bolshevism or unsound economic theories to obtain a foothold, my argument being that the great depreciation in the value of Russian money, as shown by the number of rubles required to carry a letter, followed the advent of a government which had assumed the absolutely erroneous idea that to start the printing presses turning out money would add to the country's wealth, despite the fact that there was no corresponding reserve in the Treasury to back up the paper money.

PHILATELY AND FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Stamps have also played an important part in the affairs of other nations. I recall one in Serbia which is said to have largely contributed to the events which brought on the World War.

To commemorate King Peter's coronation in Serbia in 1904, that government decided to issue a series of specially designed postage stamps of considerable artistic value and of large size, which were to bear side by side the profile of King Peter and his ancestor, Kara George.

The result was admired by all. But before the stamps had been in circulation many weeks the Government suddenly called in all that remained unsold, for when the stamp was held upside down there appeared clearly to everyone the death mask of the murdered King Alexander Obrenovitch.

The ghastly face of the dead sovereign was made to appear, by the engraver manipulating cleverly the eyebrows, eyes, and nose of the two Karageogevitch profiles.

The "death mask stamps," as they are now called, made a profound impression in the Serbian Army, and among the uneducated classes. The Government's attempt to recall all the stamps proved fruitless, as thousands have been used on letters, and a vast number are held by private individuals in Serbia.

ESTABLISHMENT OF PHILATELIC AGENCY

Recognizing the growing need of a clearing house or centralized agency for the accommodation of collectors where stamps of all issues, denominations, and so forth, could be kept and so be available for collectors—and, incidentally, bring in many thousands of dollars annually in additional revenue—the Post Office Department in 1921 established at the Washington City post office what is known as the philatelic agency.

An article dealing with the establishment of this agency and showing its work and value was recently published in Scott's Monthly Journal, a publication devoted to philately. The article is by Second Assistant Postmaster General Glover and is so interesting and illuminating that I asked leave and obtained permission to incorporate it as a part of my remarks. The article follows:

Well do I remember—

Says General Glover—

my first efforts to establish the philatelic agency in the Post Office Department. The straw that broke the camel's back was when an enthusiastic stamp collector addressed a letter to me saying that in his city the other day he asked for a block of four well-centered 2-cent stamps and the answer of the stamp clerk at the window was that he had no time to waste on "nuts," please step out of the line.

You can imagine the indignation of this enthusiast upon being classified with thousands of unfortunates who are temporary or permanent inmates of institutions which harbor those who have lost their minds.

This happened in the early part of 1921 while I was Third Assistant Postmaster General, and, shortly afterwards, at the weekly conference of the Postmaster General and his staff, I suggested the establishment of a philatelic bureau (the Stamp Division, of course, coming under the immediate supervision of the Third Assistant Postmaster General). After my suggestion the first assistant (who, I might say, was the genial Dr. Hubert Work, who later became Postmaster General and is now Secretary of the Interior) looked sidewise at me and said he had been a doctor for many years (having formerly been president of the American Medical Association), but had never heard the word "philatelic" used as a medical term, and the Postmaster General (at that time the Hon. Will H. Hays) gave me a hearty laugh and said, "really believe, Glover, you are crazy."

My answer to this remark was the fact that many people had ofttimes used that title before and had become quite accustomed to it. In any event my suggestion was later turned down at this conference, and, during the month of August, 1921, I again brought up the matter that the Postmaster General allow the establishment of a philatelic agency, and at the same time made the proposition that, if the agency did not sell $5,000 worth of stamps to collectors during the first two months of its operation I would be willing to give up my ambition to establish it; so, under this condition, we established the philatelic agency of the Post Office Department in December, 1921.

During the first few months of its operation the sales at the agency, of course, far exceeded the stipulated amount of $5,000, and, during the past fiscal year, the sales to collectors at the agency amounted to $176,157.95, while the total sales from its establishment up to and including April 30, 1928, amounted to $800,918.55.

At the present time there are seven employees in the philatelic agency, consisting of the agent and six clerks, and they are busily engaged from the opening of the window in the morning until the close of business each day. Its success has proven beyond a doubt that there was a place in the philatelic world for the establishment of the same in the Post Office Department, and now, instead of the jokes and jibes and the promiscuous use of the word "philatelic" toward the then Third Assistant, the tide has been turned to one of comment and appreciation over the wonderful strides this agency has made in the short period of its existence.

There were some offices among our 52,000 post offices where a stamp collector could receive some consideration, but they were few and far between, and ofttimes the method was unsatisfactory to the purchaser, because no consideration was given for the examination and selection of the very best stock for the album. This condition, of course, has now been done away with, as the clerks at the agency are trained stamp clerks, and have very quickly learned what the philatelist is anxious to obtain for his collection.

The agency desires at all times to give equal opportunity to all of its patrons, and does not permit the granting of special favors, as the large collector, who may be a Congressman, receives but the same consideration that is accorded the young beginner with a small collection of several hundred stamps.

The Post Office Department does not claim that the agency is error proof, but we do try to do the very best we can, and think the thousands of letters of commendation that have been received from collectors are fitting testimonials to the fact that the department is filling a long-felt want and an important place in philately in America to-day.

PHILATELY AND THE AIR MAIL

At this point it is both fitting and proper for me to digress for the time being from the subject of philately in order that I might acquaint the many readers of Scott's Monthly Journal with a brief history of the department's air mail service and its cooperation with philately.

On May 15, 1918, the Congress having made appropriation, an air mail route was established to operate between New York and Washington, via Philadelphia, on a daily except Sunday schedule. Its establishment was undoubtedly aided by the prominence given to the airplane through its accomplishments in the World War as an offensive and defensive arm of the service. Convinced that the airplane could be made a useful means of transportation, the department determined to make the experiment and was successful in the consummation of an arrangement with the War Department whereby the Army would furnish the planes and pilots and the Post Office Department the ground personnel.

Coincidental with the inauguration of air mail service by the Post Office Department an airplane stamp of the 24-cent denomination was issued in red and blue colors on May 13, 1918. This stamp was intended primarily for air mail postage, but was valid for all purposes for which postage stamps of the regular issue are used. The stamp was rectangular in shape, about seven-eighths inch by three-fourths inch and in the central design consisted of a mail plane in flight. On July 11, 1918, the department issued a new airplane postage stamp of the 16-cent denomination, as the rate was changed to 16 cents, effective on July 15, 1918. This stamp was similar in design to the 24-cent stamp, and, effective December 15, 1918, when the rate of postage for airplane mail was again changed to 6 cents, a new airplane stamp of the 6-cent denomination was issued which was also similar in design to that of the 16-cent and 24-cent airplane stamps. This stamp was first issued on December 10, 1918.

On May 15, 1919, just one year after the establishment of the Washington-New York line and the opening day of the Chicago-Cleveland route, the two planes that were flown on the Washington-New York route were the same that carried the mail on the initial trip a year before and had been constantly in service.

The year's record for the Washington-New York route showed 92 per cent of performance representing 128,037 miles of service and 7,720,840 letters carried. On July 1, 1919, the New York-Cleveland route was inaugurated and soon the department saw the necessity for new routes and the need of spanning the continent with an air mail service.

In working toward this end, provisions had to be made for terminal fields and hangars between Chicago and San Francisco, and the generous response from municipalities along the proposed extension was one of the factors which aided in clearing the way for its accomplishment and, after careful preparation, service was inaugurated on May 15, 1920, between Chicago and Omaha, and on September 8 of the same year, between Omaha and San Francisco.

As first operated, the schedule on the air mail service across the continent did not provide an uninterrupted transportation of the mail but flew the mail during daylight to some point where it was trained through the night and taken off the following morning to be flown during the following day.

After it had been demonstrated that dependable service could be provided, the rapid transportation by through flights engaged attention, and, on February 22, 1921, a plane left San Francisco at 4.30 a. m. and landed at the New York terminus at 4.50 p. m. February 23. The total elapsed time for the trip, including all stops, was 33 hours and 21 minutes, but an actual flying time of 25 hours and 16 minutes, with an average speed of 104 miles over the distance of 2,629 miles.

NIGHT FLYING STARTED

This experimental flight stimulated the progress toward night flying and as an aid in securing weather reports on localities in our own service and prompt transmittal of instructions in emergencies radio stations were provided at 17 fields on the route. Later the fields between Chicago and Cheyenne were developed for night flying and plans were studied for the establishment of beacon lights for the guidance of pilots.

During the fiscal years 1923 and 1924 these preparations were completed and a through transcontinental service between New York and San Francisco was the result, which was accomplished in time to begin the through service on July 1, 1924.

Shortly before this time, or during August, 1923, the department issued a new series of air mail stamps in 8, 16, and 24 cent denominations for use in the new transcontinental air mail service. Three zones were established in connection with this service, the first from New York to Chicago, the second from Chicago to Cheyenne, and the third from Cheyenne to San Francisco, and the rate of postage was 8 cents an ounce, or fraction thereof, for each zone or part of zone in which mail was carried by plane. The 8-cent stamp was green, the 16-cent stamp blue, and the 24-cent stamp red in color; and the subjects on the stamps, in their respective order, consisted of a mail-airplane radiator with a propeller attached, official insignia of the air mail service and a mail airplane in flight.

The through transcontinental service had not been in operation long before its advantage to commercial firms was learned and patrons at New York and Chicago realized the value of an overnight service between their offices, and, as this part of the route was not lighted, preparation for night flying was begun and completed in time to start the overnight service between New York and Chicago on July 1, 1925.

During the entire period of operation of the Government-operated air mail routes the planes had been flown 15,853,242 miles, including trips from mail, ferry, and test flights, or 93 per cent of the distance scheduled to fly, and 301,855,840 letters were carried with only 0.00028 of the amount lost through fire or other agency. There were 32 pilots lost, or an average of 495,414 miles for each fatality, and, during the fiscal year of 1927, there was only one fatality in flights of 2,583,006 miles. This was a remarkable record and indicates a degree of safety in flight in all kinds of weather which would have been unbelievable just a few years ago.

AIR MAIL CONTRACTS

The accomplishment of the Post Office Department in the successful development of the air mail service to the point where private enterprise and agencies were able to take it over and operate it under Government contracts was a signal achievement. This had been done with the expenditure of a little over $16,000,000 from the beginning to the end of the Government's operation.

Acting upon legislation passed by Congress authorizing the Post Office Department to contract for the transportation of mail by aircraft, nine contract air mail routes were placed in operation during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1926, and, inasmuch as the act of Congress approved February 2, 1925, changed the rate of postage on air mail to not less than 10 cents for each ounce or fraction thereof, it became necessary to issue a new 10-cent air mail stamp for the use of the air mail service. This stamp was a horizontal rectangle, seventy-five one-hundredths by one and eighty-four one-hundredths inches in size, and was printed in blue ink. The central design represented a relief map of the United States, showing some of the rivers and mountain ranges. On each side was an airplane in flight, one traveling east and the other toward the west. This stamp was first placed on sale on February 13, 1926.

At this time the postage for the contract air mail service was 10 cents an ounce or fraction thereof, where the distance over the route was not more than 1,000 miles; 15 cents an ounce up to and including 1,500 miles; and 20 cents an ounce where the distance was in excess of 1,500 miles, with an additional charge of 5 cents an ounce each zone the mail traveled over the Government-operated transcontinental route. In conforming with the law a new air mail stamp of 15-cent denomination was issued on September 18, 1926. This stamp was the same shape, size, and design as the current 10-cent air mail stamp issued in February and was printed in sepia.

Owing to the new rate of postage on air mail, effective on February 1, 1927, the department issued a new 20-cent air mail stamp, which was first placed on sale on January 25, 1927, at New York City and Washington, D. C. This stamp was the same shape, size, and design as the current 10 and 15 cent air mail stamps, except that the numerals "20" appeared in both lower corners of the stamp and it was printed in green.

The Post Office Department ceased to operate the Chicago-San Francisco portion of the transcontinental air mail route on June 30, 1927, and the Boeing Air Transport Co., of Seattle, Wash., began service under their contract over this portion of the route on July 1 of last year. That portion of the transcontinental air mail route from New York City to Chicago was readvertised and the bid of the National Air Transport of Chicago was accepted and service began under contract over that portion of the route on September 1, 1927. Thus the discontinuance of Government operation marked the close of a very satisfactory service which had its inception on May 15, 1918.

SPECIAL TRIBUTE TO COLONEL LINDBERGH

As a special tribute to Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, the intrepid air-mail pilot who made the first nonstop flight from New York to Paris, the Post Office Department issued a new 10-cent air mail stamp which displaced the current 10-cent air mail stamp issue of 1926. The new stamp was the same shape and size as the current air mail stamps and was printed in blue. The central design represents Lindbergh's airplane, The Spirit of St. Louis, in flight. Across the top of the stamp, in white Roman letters, are the words, "United States postage," with the words "Lindbergh air mail" directly underneath. At the left of the central design appears the coast line of the North American Continent, with the words "New York" in small dark letters and to the right appears the coast line of Europe, showing Ireland, Great Britain, and France, with the word "Paris," also in small dark letters. A dotted line depicting the course of the flight to France connects the two cities. At the bottom of the stamp in shaded letters is the word "cents," and in both lower corners are the white numerals "10." It was first placed on sale on June 18, 1927, at the post offices at St. Louis, Mo.; Detroit, Mich.; Little Falls, Minn.; and Washington, D. C.

CONTRACT AIR MAIL ROUTES NOW OPERATING

It may be interesting to note that on May 5, 1928, the following commercial air mail routes were in operation under contract in the United States:

C. A. M. 1. Boston, via Hartford, to New York.

C. A. M. 2. Chicago, via Springfield and Peoria, to St. Louis.

C. A. M. 3. Chicago, via Moline, St. Joseph, Kansas City, Wichita, Ponca City, Oklahoma City, to Fort Worth and Dallas.

C. A. M. 4. Salt Lake City, via Las Vegas, to Los Angeles.

C. A. M. 5. Salt Lake City, via Boise, to Pasco.

C. A. M. 6. Detroit to Cleveland.

C. A. M. 7. Detroit to Chicago.

C. A. M. 8. Seattle, via Portland, Medford, San Francisco, Fresno, and Bakersfield, to Los Angeles.

C. A. M. 9. Chicago, via Milwaukee and La Crosse, to St. Paul and Minneapolis.

F. M. 2. Seattle, Wash., to Victoria, British Columbia.

F. M. 3. New Orleans, La., to Pilottown, La.

F. M. 4. Key West, Fla., to Habana, Cuba.

When air mail service is inaugurated on a new contract route the department furnishes a special cancellation stamp depicting the event for the use of each office on the route, and the hundreds of thousands of first-day covers now in the possession of collectors all over the United States offer indisputable evidence of the fact that these first-day flights and special cancellations are of the utmost value and importance to the philatelic world.

The department has awarded contracts for air mail service on the following routes over which service has not yet been inaugurated:

C. A. M. 16. Cleveland, via Akron, Columbus, Dayton, and Cincinnati, to Louisville, Ky.

C. A. M. 25. Atlanta, via Jacksonville, to Miami, Fla.

C. A. M. 26. Great Falls, Mont., via Helena and Butte and Pocatello, Idaho, to Salt Lake City, Utah.

C. A. M. 27. Bay City, via Saginaw, Flint, and Lansing, to Kalamazoo, Mich.; Pontiac, via Detroit, Ann Arbor, Jackson, and Battle Creek, to Kalamazoo, Mich.; Muskegon, via Grand Rapids, to Kalamazoo, Mich.; and from Kalamazoo, Mich., via South Bend, Ind., to Chicago, Ill. (Contract awarded May 5, 1928.)

C. A. M. 28. St. Louis, Mo., via Kansas City, Mo., to Omaha, Nebr. (Contract awarded May 5, 1928.)

In the foregoing article by the Second Assistant Postmaster General it is apparent that the Post Office Department officially recognizes the science of stamp collecting. This recognition and the arrangements made for the accommodation of collectors has netted the Post Office Department many thousands of dollars it might otherwise not have received.

SESQUICENTENNIAL ANNIVERSARIES

The years 1926, 1927, 1928, and 1929 will be most fruitful to collectors, owing to the sesquicentennial anniversaries of so many important historic events in the life, progress, and development of the Nation, many of them marked with appropriate commemorative stamps. A number of other anniversaries are approaching and may be fittingly celebrated.

It is estimated that there are 1,000,000 collectors at the present time in the United States and between 2,500,000 and 3,000,000 collectors in the entire world. Practically every one of these is interested in issues made by the United States of America. Therefore, they will watch with interest for the issuance of the stamps mentioned in the bills as introduced by the various Members of the Congress, among which are Senate Joint Resolution 71 by Senator WAGNER and House Joint Resolution 133 by Representative HARCOURT J. PRATT, of the twenty-seventh district of New York. These resolutions are identic and provide for the issuance of a special postage stamp to commemorate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the government of the State of New York, the great Empire State of the Union.

Representative DAVID HOGG, of the twelfth district of Indiana, introduced House Joint Resolution 158, providing for the issuance of a special series of postage stamps commemorating the George Rogers Clark expedition which won the Northwest 150 years ago. A million dollars has been authorized by Congress for a memorial to be constructed on the site of Fort Sackville, at Vincennes, Ind., which figured so prominently in Clark's enterprise.

Representative LOUIS T. MCFADDEN, of the fifteenth Pennsylvania district, is the author of House Joint Resolution 179. It provides for the issuance of a postage stamp in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the first run of a steam locomotive in America. History relates that the run was made on August 9, 1829, at Honesdale, Wayne County, Pa.

Hon. VICTOR K. HOUSTON, Delegate in Congress from the Territory of Hawaii, has introduced House Joint Resolution 248, providing for the issuance of a special stamp to commemorate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the discovery of the Hawaiian Islands by Capt. James Cook.

Representative HAROLD G. HOFFMAN, my colleague from the third district of New Jersey, has presented House Joint Resolution 210. It provides for the issuance of a series of stamps to commemorate the Battle of Monmouth. This was the Revolutionary War engagement in which Mollie Pitcher won undying fame. Her heroism on that occasion brought to public notice the patriotic sacrifices and service being rendered by mothers, wives, and daughters in the cause of freedom and intensified the bravery of many of their little-noted but nevertheless brave and devoted deeds.

Senate Joint Resolution 101 and House Joint Resolution 205 are also identic resolutions. They are sponsored by Senator WALTER E. EDGE and myself, respectively. Unlike the foregoing, they are intended to perpetuate a very recent epochal event—the good-will flight of Colonel Lindbergh to the Republics to the south of us.

The resolution reads as follows:

Resolution authorizing the Postmaster General to issue a set of stamps relative to the good-will flight of Colonel Lindbergh

Whereas the Nation and the world have followed with close interest and admiration the good-will flight of Colonel Lindbergh to our South American and Central American sister Republics; and

Whereas the national understanding thus produced between the Government of the United States and the governments of the countries visited may be extended and made more complete and enduring: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue a set of 13 stamps, being the number of countries Colonel Lindbergh visited, as well as the number of the original States in the United States, the stamps to be issued in denominations from one-half cent to $1, from dies to be specially made, in appropriate designs suitable for perpetuating the benefits and recording in a permanent way this epochal flight and series of good-will visits.

I feel sure that if these commemorative issues just referred to were issued there would not only be the happiest of feelings created because of the recognition of profoundly important historic events, but in the case of the Lindbergh set the ties of friendship that would be fostered would be of increasing value and would enhance the cordiality created by the colonel's triumphant journey of "good will" which was so eminently successful and which was performed as an ambassador of good will without portfolio during the past winter. The sale of the stamps also would help to reduce the deficit now existing in the Post Office Department, and which will be of increasing size as time goes on because of the reduction of rates contemplated in bills that have recently been considered by the Congress.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. Is it desired now that the House shall proceed to the consideration of the Consent Calendar? If so, the Clerk will report the first bill of those remaining on the Consent Calendar.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER NEAR CARONDELET, MO.

The first business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 3598) authorizing Dupo Bridge Co., a Missouri corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Carondelet, Mo.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, can the gentleman give me the usual information on this bridge?

Mr. IRWIN. The terms of this franchise are the same as all other franchises.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We are making certain inquiries, you know, as to grantees. Is the gentleman familiar with the Dupo Bridge Co.?

Mr. IRWIN. Yes. It is a corporation formed in good faith locally by people of St. Louis. It is to build this bridge across the Mississippi River, reaching over to my district on the Illinois side. It is a good proposition. I have made an investigation of it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is not like some that we have been guarding against in these bills?

Mr. IRWIN. No. The franchise is asked in good faith. The bridge is very necessary, and I am very much interested in it, because the people of my district wish to use the bridge across that stream.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, Dupo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Carondelet, Mo., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon Dupo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said Dupo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Missouri or the State of Illinois, or any public agency or political subdivision of either of such States, within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation or expropriation, in accordance with the laws of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of 10 years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion costs, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 5. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the States or public agencies or political subdivisions thereof, or by either of them, as provided in section 4 of this act, and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 10 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 6. The Dupo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge, file with the Secretary of War and with the highway department of the States of Missouri and Illinois, a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and upon request of the highway department of either of such States shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge; for the purpose of such investigation the said Dupo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, shall make available all of its records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 4 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to Dupo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 8. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Dupo Bridge Co., a Missouri corporation, its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Carondelet, Mo., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

"SEC. 2. The Dupo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, is authorized to construct, maintain, and operate such bridge and the necessary approaches thereto as a railroad bridge for the passage of railway trains or street cars, or both, or as a highway bridge for the passage of pedestrians, animals, and vehicles, adapted to travel on public highways, or as a combined railroad and highway bridge for all such purposes; and there is hereby conferred upon the said Dupo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

"SEC. 3. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, if the same is constructed as a highway bridge only, either the State of Missouri or the State of Illinois, any public agency or political subdivision of either of such States, within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation, in accordance with the laws of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of 10 years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value, (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property, (3) actual financing and promotion cost, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property, and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

"SEC. 4. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the States or public agencies or political subdivisions thereof, or by either of them, under the provisions of section 3 of this act, and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 10 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

"SEC. 5. If such bridge is constructed as a combined railroad bridge for the passage of railway trains or street cars, and a highway bridge for the passage of pedestrians, animals, and vehicles, then the right of purchase and condemnation conferred by this act shall apply to a right of way thereover for the passage without cost of persons, animals, and vehicles adapted to travel on public highways; and if the right of purchase or condemnation shall be exercised as to such right of way over the bridge, then the measure of damages or compensation to be allowed or paid for such right of way shall be a sum equal to the difference between the actual fair cash value of such bridge determined in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of this act, and what its actual fair cash value so determined would have been if such bridge had been constructed as a railroad bridge only. If the right of purchase or condemnation conferred by this act shall be exercised as to the right of way over such bridge, then that part of the bridge which shall be purchased or condemned and shall be thereafter actually used for the passage of pedestrians, animals, or vehicles shall be maintained, operated, and kept in repair by the purchaser thereof.

"SEC. 6. The Dupo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, shall, within 90 days after the completion of such bridge, file with the Secretary of War and with the highway departments of the States of Missouri and Illinois a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and at the request of the highway department of either of such States shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge. For the purpose of such investigation the said Dupo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, shall make available all of its records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 3 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

"SEC. 7. The Dupo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized and empowered to fix and charge just and reasonable tolls for the passage of such bridge of pedestrians, animals, and vehicles adapted to travel on public highways, and the rates so fixed shall be the legal rates until the Secretary of War shall prescribe other rates of toll as provided in the act of March 23, 1906; and if said bridge is constructed as a railroad bridge, or a joint railroad and highway bridge, as provided in this act, the said Dupo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix by contract with any person or corporation desiring the use of the same for the passage of railway trains, or street cars, or for placing water or gas pipe lines or telephone or telegraph or electric light or power lines, or for any other such purposes, the terms, conditions, and rates of toll for such use; but in the absence of such contract, the terms, conditions, and rates of toll for such use shall be determined by the Secretary of War as provided in said act of March 23, 1906.

"SEC. 8. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the Dupo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

"SEC. 9. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill authorizing Dupo Bridge Co., a Missouri corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a combined highway and railroad bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Carondelet, Mo."

TERRITORY OF HAWAII

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 757) to extend the benefits of certain acts of Congress to the Territory of Hawaii.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, perhaps the gentleman from Hawaii can explain the matter to me. I am inclined to ask that this bill go over. It is a rather important bill; it carries a lot of appropriations into 1941, and I do not think we should consider it now.

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. If the gentleman will permit, I may be able to explain the matter. The bill in question is one which provides for eventual participation by the Territory of Hawaii in appropriations which are now being made to all the States. At the present time the Territory of Hawaii is in receipt of the usual $50,000 per year for the Federal colleges under the original grant, but it is not receiving the $80,000 a year which the other States are now receiving and which is increased to $90,000 in 1929. In accordance with this bill the Territory of Hawaii will receive only $15,000 for the year 1930, which is increased by gradual increments so that in the year 1941 it will be receiving the same as the States are now receiving. The bill carries the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture and of the Director of the Budget.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will yield, the acts authorizing these appropriations in some cases would seem to include the Territory of Hawaii, but the Attorney General has held that the appropriations were not authorized for Hawaii, and so they have been without them. This bill, instead of overturning the thing abruptly and putting them in at 100 per cent, starts them in at a lower figure and it would be 1941 before they will be receiving full participation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then, all this bill does is to correct existing law and to carry out what the gentleman from Michigan believes was the intent of Congress.

Mr. CRAMTON. I made some study of it even before the Delegate from Hawaii came to Washington, and it seemed to me it had been the intention of Congress that Hawaii should share, and it seems logical that they should share in it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, the Territory of Hawaii shall be entitled to share in the benefits of the act entitled "An act to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto," approved March 2, 1887, as amended and supplemented, and of the act entitled "An act to provide for cooperative agricultural-extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture," approved May 8, 1914, and of acts supplementary thereto: Provided, That the experiment station so established shall be conducted jointly and in collaboration with the existing Federal experiment station in Hawaii in enlarging and expanding the work of the said Federal station on cooperative plans approved by the Secretary of agriculture; and the Secretary of Agriculture shall coordinate the work of the Territorial station with that of the Federal station and of the United States Department of Agriculture in the islands: Provided further, That the Territory of Hawaii shall make provision for such additional buildings and permanent equipment as may be necessary for the development of the work.

SEC. 2. To carry into effect the above provisions for extending to Hawaii the benefits of the act of March 2, 1887, and supplementary acts in the order and amounts designated by these acts, the following sums are hereby authorized to be appropriated in addition to the amounts appropriated to the Department of Agriculture for use in Hawaii: $15,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929; $20,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930; $22,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931; $24,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932; $26,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933; $28,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934; $30,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935; $50,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936; $60,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937; $70,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938; $80,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939; and $90,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and thereafter a sum equal to that provided for each State and Territory for agricultural experiment stations established under the act of March 2, 1887.

SEC. 3. The permanent annual appropriations provided for in section 3 of said act of May 8, 1914, and of acts supplementary thereto are hereby authorized to be increased by an amount necessary to carry out the provisions of this act but without diminishing or increasing the amount which any State is entitled to under the provisions of said act of May 8, 1914, and of acts supplementary thereto.

Mr. CRAMTON (during the reading of the bill). Mr. Speaker, I do not want to cut off anyone who may be interested, I withdraw the request I was about to make.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I renew it, Mr. Speaker. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is a very interesting bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; but the gentleman must have some ulterior motive in making that statement.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the gentleman wants to know, the gentleman from New York does not want to work all night again. We had unanimous-consent day yesterday and I think you should give us a chance to catch up with our work. I know the gentleman wants to be reasonable about it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to be entirely reasonable, but the gentleman's leader asked unanimous consent that we go on with the calendar this afternoon.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We have one hour until 5 o'clock and we can pass a good many bills in that time, but we can not keep up with this calendar if we are going to pass the bills like "rolling the bones."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I object, Mr. Speaker. Let us read the bill.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

With the following committee amendments:

AMENDMENT OF THE NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT—BANDMASTERS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9373) to amend the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I have one or two minor amendments, which I would like to offer. Page 2, line 21, after the word "commissioned," insert the word "warrant," and on page 3, line 1, after the word "physically," insert the words "and professionally."

Mr. REECE. Those amendments will be quite acceptable.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. With that understanding, I shall not object.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Reserving the right to object, I call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] to this bill, inasmuch as the gentleman is usually rather solicitous about matters involving additional appropriations.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama, frankly, that that fact, strange as it may seem, has not depressed me. I think there is ample justification for the increased appropriations. I am somewhat disturbed about the idea of giving commissions to bandmasters. I do not believe it is going to work out in a military organization.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want also to call the attention of the gentleman from New York, who is rather zealous in these matters, to the fact that this bill is directly in the teeth of the opinion of the Secretary of War with reference to the matter suggested by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Perhaps I should explain that my attitude on this bill is based purely on sentimental reasons. My father was a bandmaster in the Army 40 years ago, and even in those days they were seeking to obtain the passage of a bill of this kind; and that was at least 40 years ago.

I want to say, gentlemen, that in most of the armies the bandmasters are commissioned officers. It is nothing new. It has been under consideration and under study for the last 40 years. I have personal knowledge of it, and I am sure it is not going to disrupt the Treasury. Unfortunately, no one of my family now derives any benefit from it, but for sentimental reasons I would like to do all that I can for the passage of the bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. "Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast." I think it is important to have competent men in charge of the music in the various arms of the military and naval service by reason of the fact——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman think the quotation, which is a delightful one, meets the practicable objection urged by the Secretary of War, when he says?—

In the case where band leaders are concerned. Here there is no field of activity extending beyond that of leading the band. It is a circumscribed and definite duty such as that of a warrant officer who is master of an Army mine planter. To place one who performs this definite and specific character in the category of commissioned personnel is to put him in an illogical and unfortunate position unless it is intended to promote him along with other commissioned personnel. If this were done, we might expect to have a colonel leading a regimental band who was senior to the colonel commanding the regiment of which the band is but one of the integral parts.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Let me say that it requires ability and training of a different order and to some degree of higher order to fill the position of bandmaster than that of some officers.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Not only that, but one of the functions is to train men and make musicians of them, arrange the music, and all that, besides leading the band.

Mr. REECE. Let me state that the objection which seems to be in the gentleman's mind——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Not in my mind, but the mind of the Secretary of War.

Mr. REECE. The objections of the Secretary of War have been met. This bill does not give the men it creates a new rank. He is not a commissioned officer. So the objection which the gentleman has read in the letter does not obtain as far as the bill before the House is concerned. We purposely rewrote the bill to meet the objections.

Mr. TILSON. What about section 2, which says?—

SEC. 2. The limitations now prescribed by law upon the number of commissioned officers of the Army, and the number of commissioned officers in the various grades, are hereby increased to, and only to, the extent necessary to give effect to the provisions of this act. The number of warrant officers authorized by law shall be decreased by the number of warrant officers receiving commissions in pursuance of the provisions of this act.

Mr. REECE. They are bandmasters with the rank and allowance of commissioned officers in a certain grade, but as specified in the second section there shall be created a new rank of bandmaster in lieu of the present warrant officer as band leader. By the enactment of this legislation they will become known as bandmasters of the United States Army.

Mr. TILSON. They will not be subtracted from the sum total of officers allowed under the law?

Mr. REECE. No.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will ask the gentleman if this is a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. MORIN. I do not recall any objection to it.

Mr. REECE. It was unanimous.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not care to press the objection. I wanted to call attention to the fact that the Secretary of War objected.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. REECE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute an identical Senate bill (S. 750), and I ask that it be considered in lieu of the House bill, with the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill (S. 750), as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended, is amended by adding to the end thereof the following:

"In addition there shall be created a new rank of bandmaster in the United States Army in lieu of the present warrant-officer band leaders, who shall be appointed and commissioned bandmasters by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"SEC. 6a. Chief bandmaster: A chief bandmaster shall be selected from among experienced Army bandmasters of the service by the Secretary of War, to serve until relieved by the Secretary of War, and shall have the assimilated rank, pay, and allowances of a major, fourth pay period, while so serving. He is charged with the duty for the uniform administration of the Army Music School and all authorized Army bands, and shall advise The Adjutant General on all matters relating to the musical organizations in the Army.

"SEC. 6b. Bandmasters: Bandmasters hereafter commissioned under the above section shall be entitled to the same benefits in respect to pay, allowances, and retirements as are applicable to commissioned officers of the various grades to which they are assimilated with, as follows: Less than 3 years, first pay period, to rank with second lieutenants; 3 to 10 years, second pay period, to rank with first lieutenants; over 10 years, third pay period, to rank with captains. All prior active band-leader service, commissioned and enlisted, shall be credited toward computing the pay period present band leaders shall receive on first appointment. There shall be one bandmaster for each authorized band of the Army and eight additional bandmasters for duty with the Army Music School as instructors. Appointment as bandmasters shall be made, first, from band leaders now in the service who are found to be physically qualified; second, subject to such examination as the President may prescribe from noncommissioned officers and other enlisted musicians who have had at least 10 years' service in Army bands, with preference to such appointments to qualified graduates of the Army Music School."

SEC. 2. The limitations now prescribed by law upon the number of commissioned officers of the Army, and the number of commissioned officers in the various grades, are hereby increased to, and only to, the extent necessary to give effect to the provisions of this act. The number of warrant officers authorized by law shall be decreased by the number of warrant officers receiving commissions in pursuance of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect on the first day of the third month next following its enactment.

SEC. 4. This act may be cited as the "Army bands act."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment: Page 2, line 20, after the word "commission," insert a comma and the word "warrant."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 20, after the word "commission," insert a comma and the word "warrant."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 1, after the word "physician," insert the word "professional."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 6, after the word "is," insert the words "shall be."

Page 2, line 7, after the word "of," strike out the words "the Army Music School."

Page 2, line 23, after the word "Army," strike out "and eight additional bandmasters for duty with the Army Music School as instructors."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

RETIREMENT, OFFICERS OF MEDICAL CORPS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11981) to authorize officers of the Medical Corps to account certain services in computing their right for retirement, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in computing length of service for purposes of retirement in the case of an officer of the Medical Corps of the Army, active duty performed as a member of the Medical Reserve Corps or as a contract surgeon, acting assistant surgeon, or contract physician, under a general contract obligating him to serve full time and to take station and change station as ordered, shall be credited to the same extent as service under a Regular Army commission.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

R. 11724) to provide for the paving of the Government road, known as the Ringgold Road, extending from Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, in the State of Georgia, to the town of Ringgold, Ga., constituting an approach road to the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have certain amendments the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER] I understand is agreeable to, and with those I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I have not examined the amendments, but I understand they are the same as those proposed in a bill passed not long ago.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; on the Lafayette Road bill.

Mr. TARVER. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized to improve and pave the Government road, known as the Ringgold Road, commencing at the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park and extending to Ringgold, Ga., in the length of approximately 7.8 miles, for which an appropriation of not to exceed $117,000 is hereby authorized out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That should local interests desire that said road be improved and paved in such manner as would involve an expenditure of more than $117,000 the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to expend such sum as may be contributed by said local interests concurrently with the appropriation herein authorized in the imrovement and pavement of said road: Provided further, That no part of the funds herein authorized to be appropriated shall be expended prior to such time as agreements have been made for the conveyance of the Federal jurisdiction over said road, as provided in the act of March 3, 1925 (43 Stat. L. 1104), immediately upon the completion of such improvements as may be made hereunder.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 8, strike out the words "local interests" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "the State of Georgia or any county or municipality or legal subdivision thereof, or any State or county or municipal highway commission, or equivalent public authority."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to the committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON as a substitute for the committee amendment: Page 2, strike out lines 8 to 13, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That no part of the appropriation herein authorized shall be available until the State of Georgia or any county or municipality, or local subdivision thereof, or any State or county or municipal highway commission or equivalent public authority, shall contribute at least an equal amount for the same purpose, and the Secretary of War is hereby."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 17, after the word "road," strike out the rest of line 17 down to and including the word "hereunder," in line 23, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided further, That should the State of Georgia or any county or municipality or legal subdivision thereof, or any State or county or municipal highway commission, or equivalent public authority desire that the position of said road be changed in any particular from the present Government-owned right of way, and should such local authorities acquire title to the land necessary to effect such changes, the Secretary of War may expend the funds herein authorized for the improvement and pavement of such road as changed: And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended until the State of Georgia, or the counties or municipalities thereof concerned, have obligated themselves in writing to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War that they will accept title to the present Government-owned road, known as the Ringgold Road, and will maintain said road as built under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1925 (43d Stat. L. 1104), immediately upon the completion of such improvements as may be made under this appropriation."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to that amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CRAMTON offers the following amendment to the second committee amendment: Page 3, strike out lines 8 to 13, inclusive, of the committee amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "And provided further, That no part of the appropriation herein authorized shall be expended until the State of Georgia or the counties or municipalities thereof concerned have accepted title to the present Government-owned road, known as the Ringgold Road, and have obligated themselves in writing to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War that they will maintain the same.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALE OF COLUMBIA ARSENAL PROPERTY, TENNESSEE

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill H. R. 12479, authorizing the sale of all of the interest and rights of the United States of America in the Columbia Arsenal property, situated in the ninth civil district of Maury County, Tenn., and providing that the net fund be deposited in the military post construction fund.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there any urgency for the passage of this bill to-day?

Mr. ESLICK. Yes. It is an urgent matter with the people, because the life of this school is depending upon it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What was the idea of the long recital in the whereases in the bill?

Mr. ESLICK. To set out the whole history of the matter.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But that goes out.

Mr. ESLICK. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This land was originally given to the Columbia Academy to be used for the purpose specified in the grant.

Mr. ESLICK. No; the citizens of Columbia bought the land and deeded it to the United States Government, and it was used as arsenal property.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That was in 1888?

Mr. ESLICK. In 1888, and in 1894 the Government by special act of Congress authorized the conveyance of this property to this school corporation, and in the deed there is a reservation that if it should cease to be used for school purposes, then the title shall revert. Then there is the right of visitation by the Secretary of War and the right to prescribe the curriculum. These people have spent more than a hundred thousand dollars in improvements on this property. They have pupils from 38 different States in the Union.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And what do they want to do now?

Mr. ESLICK. They have to go forward with new improvements and buildings, and with this limitation on that title they can not borrow any money.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. So they are going to appraise this land and get rid of that limitation?

Mr. ESLICK. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. This is so that they can mortgage the land and borrow some money.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I withdraw my objection and ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the whereas clauses which are very long.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will omit the whereases.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell upon such terms and conditions as he considers advisable and to make proper deed of conveyance to the Columbia Military Academy, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Tennessee, all of the title, interest, limitations, conditions, restrictions, reservations, and rights owned and held by the United States of America as defined in Public Act No. 152 of the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress and in the deed of the United States of America to the lands conveyed therein to the Columbia Military Academy of record in book 105, volume 4, page 495 in the register's office of Maury County, Tenn. Said limitations, conditions, restrictions, reservations, and rights are defined in said public act and deed, as follows:

That the Secretary of War shall be a visitor to said school and have and exercise full rights of visitation, and he shall have the right and authority in his discretion, as the public interest requires, to prescribe the military curriculum of said school and to enforce compliance therewith, and upon refusal or failure of the authorities of said school to comply with the rules and regulations so prescribed by the Secretary of War or the terms of the act he is authorized to declare that the estate of the grantee has terminated and the property shall revert to the United States, and the Secretary of War is authorized thereupon to take possession of said property in behalf of the United States, and shall further reserve to the United States the right to use such lands for military purposes at any time upon demand of the President of the United States.

Said lands to which said limitations, conditions, restrictions, reservations, and rights attach are described as situated in the ninth civil district of Maury County, Tenn., and were formerly used as an arsenal and known as the Columbia Arsenal property, the same comprising about 67 acres, more or less, and generally bounded by the Hampshire Pike, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, the Mount Pleasant Pike, and a public road connecting the two pikes above named.

All of said limitations, conditions, restrictions, reservations, and rights of the United States of America, whether legal or equitable, vested or contingent, in and to said lands as specified and defined in said public law and deed and belonging to the United States of America will pass to the purchaser under the sale herein authorized.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of War shall have said tract of land appraised, the appraisal being of the land alone and without regard to the buildings thereon; and the Secretary of War shall not sell the rights and interests of the Government herein above defined in said Columbia Arsenal property for a less consideration than the appraised value herein provided for.

SEC. 3. That the proceeds of said sale shall be deposited in the Treasury to the fund known as the military post construction fund after first paying the expenses of and incident to the sale including appraisal fees, but no appraiser shall be paid in excess of $100 for such services as he may render under the terms of this act.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the whereases will be stricken out.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PAY OF THE ARMY, NAVY, MARINE CORPS, COAST GUARD, COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY, AND PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12624) to amend section 17 of the act of June 10, 1922, entitled "An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with the merits of the bill. I have not studied that. The form of it is very undesirable. I have prepared an amendment that will set up the complete section as amended. I will offer it when the proper time comes.

Mr. COLLINS. I object.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will withhold his objection and let this bill pass. Otherwise 150 retired officers on active duty will be deprived of their regular annual leave this summer. I believe the bill is meritorious.

Mr. COLLINS. Does it apply simply to annual leave?

Mr. HOFFMAN. To annual leave and to longevity pay. It confirms rights already established by law, but not granted by reason of the ruling of the Attorney General.

Mr. COLLINS. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

DONATION OF BUILDINGS TO THE CITY OF TUCSON, ARIZ.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 2978) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate certain buildings to the city of Tucson, Ariz.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to donate to the city of Tucson, State of Arizona, without cost to the said city, for public use, all of buildings Nos. 1, 3, and 4 now located on the old Army aviation field in said city of Tucson, including heating and plumbing fixtures and excluding water heater and hot-water tank, which said buildings are now located on property of the said city of Tucson formerly leased to the United States.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 127A, NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11273) to amend section 127a, national defense act, as amended and approved June 4, 1920.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered as read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The bill reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 127a of the national defense act, as amended and approved June 4, 1920, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 127a. Miscellaneous provisions: Hereafter no detail, rating, or assignment of an officer shall carry advanced rank, except as otherwise specifically provided herein: Provided, That in lieu of the 50 per cent increase of pay provided for in this act any officer who has heretofore been announced in the War Department orders as having qualified on or before December 31, 1913, as a military aviator or any officer upon whom the rating of military aviator has heretofore been conferred for having specially distinguished himself in time of war in active operations against the enemy, shall while on duty which requires him to participate regularly and frequently in aerial flights, receive the pay, allowances, and additional pay as provided by the act of June 3, 1916, and the act of July 24, 1917, for the rating of military aviator. At any time after the passage of this act any officer who has heretofore been announced in War Department orders as having qualified as a military aviator on or before December 31, 1913, shall, if he make application therefore to the President, be retired from active service and be placed upon the retired list. The retired pay of any officer who has heretofore been announced in War Department orders as having qualified as a military aviator on or before December 31, 1913, shall be 75 per cent of all the pay and allowances, including flying pay, of the grade in which he is retired. No extra pay or allowances shall accrue under the provisions of this section for services rendered prior to the passage thereof."

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer two amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina offers two amendments, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. McSWAIN: Page 2, line 5, after the word "enemy," add the following: "or any officer who is officially credited on the records of the War Department with the destruction in aerial combat during the World War of five or more enemy aircraft."

Page 2, lines 18, 19, and 20, strike out remainder of sentence after "1913" and substitute therefor the following: "or any officer upon whom the rating of military aviator has heretofore been conferred for having specially distinguished himself in time of war in active operations against the enemy or any officer who is officially credited on the records of the War Department with the destruction in aerial combat during the World War of five or more enemy aircraft, shall be 75 per cent of all the active pay and allowances, including flying pay, of his grade on the retired list."

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from South Carolina yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman flashes two amendments on us which, on their face, may be all right. This bill as it comes before us is to provide for proper legislation concerning seven military aviators. Seven of them have retired; 10 of them have been killed or died. The gentleman comes in with these two amendments. We do not know just how far-reaching they are. We do not know why pursuit pilots have been picked out, and not bomb pilots. I hope the bill may be passed over without prejudice so that it may be considered at the proper time.

Mr. McSWAIN. I did not want to take anyone by surprise. These men should come in on their merits.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's amendments have been offered and might stand for the information of the House. I suggest that he let the bill be passed over to-day. The bill will come up later and then possibly the amendments will be agreed to.

Mr. McSWAIN. Objection can be made the next time by one Member. I will withdraw my amendments at the present time.

The SPEAKER. The amendments of the gentleman from South Carolina are withdrawn. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ROAD OR CAUSEWAY ACROSS LAKE SABINE, PORT ARTHUR, TEX.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10951) authorizing the construction of a toll road or causeway across Lake Sabine at or near Port Arthur, Tex.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, H. L. McKee, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a road or causeway with a bridge therein and approaches thereto, across Lake Sabine, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between a point at or near Port Arthur, Tex., and a point opposite in Cameron Parish, La., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon H. L. McKee, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such road, causeway, or bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said H. L. McKee, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such road, causeway, and bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. After the completion of such road, causeway, and bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Texas, the State of Louisiana, any public agency or political subdivision of either of such States, within or adjoining which any part of such road, causeway, and bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such road, causeway, and bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation or expropriation, in accordance with the laws of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of 10 years after the completion of such road, causeway, and bridge, the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such road, causeway, and bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion costs, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the road, causeway, and bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property, and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 5. If such road, causeway, and bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the States or public agencies or political subdivisions thereof, or by either of them, as provided in section 4 of this act, and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the road, causeway, and bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 15 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such road, causeway, and bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the road, causeway, and bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the road, causeway, and bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 6. The said H. L. McKee, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such road, causeway, and bridge, file with the Secretary of War and with the Highway Departments of the States of Texas and Louisiana, a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the road, causeway, and bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and upon request of the highway department of either of such States shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such road, causeway, and bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of cost so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such road, causeway, and bridge; for the purpose of such investigation the said H. L. McKee, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall make available all of his records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the road, causeway, and bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 4 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to H. L. McKee, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, and any corporation to which any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 8. There is hereby granted to H. L. McKee, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, a right of way not to exceed 500 feet in width across the spoil bank of the intracoastal canal at such location, to be approved by the Chief of Engineers, as will provide a highway connection or connections between the road or causeway authorized by this act and any bridge or bridges that are or may hereafter be constructed across the intracoastal canal. The duration of such right of way shall terminate with the termination of the franchise granted by this act for the construction of the road or causeway and shall attach to and become a part of such road or causeway, and shall pass with the same in any transfer thereof.

SEC. 9. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, there is a Senate bill substantially similar, and I ask unanimous consent to consider the Senate bill in lieu of the House bill, and I shall offer an amendment to correct the text.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the County Court of Roane County, Tenn., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Emory River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Suddaths Ferry, in Roane County, Tenn., in accordance with the provisions of

The amendment was agreed to.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF NATIONAL CEMETERIES AND NATIONAL MILITARY PARKS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10809) to provide qualifications for the superintendents of national cemeteries and national military parks.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I object.

FORT PECK INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11580) to authorize the leasing or sale of land reserved for administrative purposes on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, I give notice that I intend to offer an amendment to this bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the purpose of selling this land, at all?

Mr. LEAVITT. It is land that has been withdrawn for agency school use, and so on, and is not now being used for that purpose. I intend to offer an amendment which will restrict the authorization of sale to a small area needed for a landing field, which adjoins the town of Wolf Point.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. For a public landing field?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Are you going to give it to the town?

Mr. LEAVITT. The town will purchase or lease it, and if purchased it will carry the provision that any discovery of oil, gas, and minerals shall remain to the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does the gentleman's amendment provide for the conveyance of the land to the town for an aviation field?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes; with the consent of the tribal council. The bill would do that as it is, since it would apply to all such lands as now written. But in the last day or two I have received word that there is some disagreement among the Indians as to some features. But they have all seemingly agreed on this one proposition of a landing field, and it is my intention to confine the present bill to that one purpose and possibly take care of the general situation later.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The land will be sold to the town for a public aviation field?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes; or leased.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Do you use the word "public"?

Mr. LEAVITT. I will be glad to have that go in.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, the council of the Fort Peck Indians in the State of Montana is hereby authorized to lease or sell any of the tribal land reserved for agency, school, and other administrative purposes on said reservation: Provided, That no part of said land shall be sold until no longer required for such purposes or for allotment to individual Indians, and in case of sale the mineral rights, including oil and gas, shall be reserved to the tribe: Provided further, That the proceeds derived from the sale or lease of said land shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Fort Peck Tribe subject to disposition under the act of May 30, 1908. SENECA OIL SPRINGS RESERVATION, N. Y.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12446) to approve a deed of conveyance of certain land in the Seneca Oil Spring Reservation, N. Y.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment which simply provides that the land shall revert to the Seneca Nation of Indians if it is ever placed to any other use following the text of the original grant.

Mr. LEAVITT. I am sure there will be no objection to that on the part of the committee.

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Montana a question. I notice the report says that the Indians have already received what seems to be a just compensation for the land. Does the gentleman know that it was just compensation?

Mr. LEAVITT. I have been so informed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. HOOPER. And the gentleman is entirely satisfied there is no question about the compensation?

Mr. LEAVITT. Not to my mind; and in any event, it is only for the erection of a monument.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the bill read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a certain instrument of conveyance dated December 30, 1927, from the Seneca Nation of Indians to the Seneca Oil Spring Association (Inc.), granting by quitclaim title a tract of land having a radius of 75 feet from the center of the oil spring located on the Oil Spring Reservation, N. Y., and a right of way 3 rods wide to such spring from the public highway now passing through the reservation, is hereby confirmed and the approval of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior Department of February 28, 1928, thereof is hereby validated: Provided, That the purpose for which the land is hereby conveyed shall be for the preserving of the spring as a historical monument only.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

R. 13481) authorizing an Alabama State corporation, or, in fact, the State of Alabama, to build 15 State bridges. There is an emergency on account of the fact that these bridges are to be constructed under a State law, and the time is very important.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. If tolls are charged for the use of such bridges, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridges under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the costs of the bridges, including reasonable interest on bonds issued to provide funds for constructing the same, as soon as possible, under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 18 years from the date of approval of this act. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, and in any event after such period of 18 years, all of said bridges shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls. All tolls collected for the use of said bridges shall be kept in a separate fund by the proper authorities of the State of Alabama, according to the law of said State, and no part of said funds shall be used for any purpose except for paying for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridges and amortizing the costs of constructing the same, including interest, as provided in this act. The tolls charged by the Alabama State Bridge Corporation, its successors or assigns, shall be uniform as between persons, and as between vehicles of the same type, using each of such bridges, and the corporation shall not authorize or permit any discrimination between persons or between vehicles of the same type transiting any particular bridge constructed under the provisions of this act: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to prevent different tolls being charged at different bridges, but in fixing the rate of tolls there shall be no discrimination as between persons and none as between vehicles of the same type. SOME OUTSTANDING HEROES OF THE WORLD WAR

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill (S. 777) and include citations for medals of honor which have been granted and citations for gallantry in action and the names of some of the beneficiaries.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following: Senate bill 777 is to come before the House on Thursday. Of the great army which our country contributed to the conflict, there are a host of examples of noble and patriotic men among both enlisted men and officers. I call attention at this time to some of the latter, whose records make us proud we are Americans and whose heroic conduct inspire us with the highest ideals of patriotism and love of country. These names should be engraved in our memories. They deserve the honor of a grateful Nation.

DECORATIONS AND CITATIONS OF DISABLED EMERGENCY ARMY OFFICERS AWARDED FOR GALLANTRY IN ACTION DURING THE WORLD WAR

CONGRESSIONAL MEDAL OF HONOR (3)

George H. Mallon: In the Boise-de-Forges, France, September 26, 1918. Residence, Minneapolis, Minn.; born, Ogden, Kans.; General Orders, No. 16, War Department, 1919. Captain, One hundred and thirty-second Infantry, Thirty-third Division. Becoming separated from the balance of his company because of a fog, Captain Mallon, with nine soldiers, pushed forward and attacked nine active hostile machine guns, capturing all of them without the loss of a man. Continuing on through the woods, he led his men in attacking a battery of four 155-millimeter howitzers, which were in action, rushing the position and capturing the battery and its crew. In this encounter Captain Mallon personally attacked one of the enemy with his fists. Later, when the party came upon two more machine guns, this officer sent men to the flanks while he rushed forward directly in the face of the fire and silenced the guns, being the first one of the party to reach the nest. The exceptional gallantry and determination displayed by Captain Mallon resulted in the capture of 100 prisoners, 11 machine guns, four 155-millimeter howitzers, and one antiaircraft gun.

L. Wardlaw Miles: Near Revillon, France, September 14, 1918. Residence, Princeton, N. J.; born, Baltimore, Md.; General Orders, No. 44, War Department, 1919. Captain, Three hundred and eighth Infantry, Seventy-seventh Division. Volunteered to lead his company in a hazardous attack on a commanding trench position near the Aisne Canal which other troops had previously attempted to take without success. His company immediately met with intense machine-gun fire, against which it had no artillery assistance, but Captain Miles preceded the first wave and assisted in cutting a passage through the enemy's wire entanglements. In so doing he was wounded five times by machine-gun bullets, both legs and one arm being fractured, whereupon he ordered himself placed on a stretcher and had himself carried forward to the enemy trench in order that he might encourage and direct his company, which by this time had suffered numerous casualties. Under the inspiration of this officer's indomitable spirit his men held the hostile position and consolidated the front line after an action lasting two hours, at the conclusion of which Captain Miles was carried to the aid station against his will.

Joseph H. Thompson: Near Apremont, France, October 1, 1918. Residence, Beaver Falls, Pa.; born, Ireland; General Orders, No. 21, War Department, 1925. Major, One hundred and tenth Infantry, Twenty-eighth Division. Counterattacked by two regiments of the enemy, Major Thompson encouraged his battalion in the front line by constantly braving the hazardous fire of machine guns and artillery. His courage was mainly responsible for the heavy repulse of the enemy. Later in the action, when the advance of his assaulting companies was held up by fire from a hostile machine-gun nest and all but one of the six assaulting tanks were disabled, Major Thompson, with great gallantry and coolness, rushed forward on foot three separate times in advance of the assaulting line, under heavy machine-gun and antitank-gun fire, and led the one remaining tank to within a few yards of the enemy machine-gun nest, which succeeded in reducing it, thereby making it possible for the infantry to advance.

DISTINGUISHED SERVICE CROSS (82)

Charles V. Abernathy:—Near Thiaucourt, France, September 14, 1918. Residence, Palatka, Fla.; born, Shelby, N. C.; General Orders, No. 70, War Department, 1919. Second lieutenant, Sixth Infantry, Fifth Division. Commanding the regimental pioneer platoon, he led it and the Stokes mortar platoon as infantry, and overcame a machine-gun nest, capturing several machine guns and disposing of the crew. He continued to advance under heavy shell and machine-gun fire until he fell wounded in the head, hip, and leg.

John H. Ale: North of Flirey, France, September 12, 1918. Residence, Muncie, Ind.; born, Benton County, Ind.; General Orders, No. 128, War Department, 1918. First lieutenant, Three hundred fifty-fifth Infantry, Eighty-ninth Division. After having been badly wounded early in the action, losing his right hand and being wounded in both legs and chest, he returned to his platoon and addressed the men, telling them he was unable to go with them, but that he had confidence in their ability to go ahead without him and urged them to sustain the high reputation of the platoon, company, and battalion, thereby inspiring his men with his own personal courage to advance.

Alfred M. Barlow: Near Heurne, Belgium, November 3, 1918. Residence, Gallipolis, Ohio; born, Gallipolis, Ohio; General Orders, No. 37, War Department, 1919. First lieutenant, One hundred and forty-eighth Infantry, Thirty-seventh Division. Although suffering from a painful shrapnel wound in the leg, he led his company, with excellent leadership and command, over the river, and not until he had received wounds in both legs would he give his consent to be taken to a dressing station.

Jesse B. Barton: Near Becquigny, France, October 17, 1918. Residence, Barton, Ohio; born, Barton, Ohio; General Orders, No. 68, War Department, 1920. Second lieutenant, One hundred and eighteenth Infantry, Thirtieth Division. After his superior officer had been wounded, he assumed command of and personally led the advance of his unit until he was struck by an enemy shell and severely wounded. Although suffering intense pain and almost unconscious, he refused to be evacuated until after he had given instructions to the platoon sergeant to continue the advance. His gallant conduct was an inspiring example to the men of his platoon.

Alfred M. Bergstein: Near Exermont, France, October 8, 1918. Residence, Pottsville, Pa.; born, Philadelphia, Pa.; General Orders, No. 46, War Department, 1919. First Lieutenant, Medical Corps, attached to Eighteenth Infantry, First Division. Under heavy shell fire, Lieutenant Bergstein cared for the wounded, although he had been severely wounded and was suffering great pain. He refused to be evacuated until all the wounded had been treated.

Theodore E. Boyd: Near Conflans, France, September 14, 1918. Residence, Carthage, Tenn.; born, Ashland City, Tenn.; General Orders, No. 20, War Department, 1919. Second lieutenant, Seventh Field Artillery, observer, attached to Eighty-eighth Aero Squadron, Air Service. This officer, being detailed for the protection of a photographic mission with five other planes, proceeded on his mission, when three of the escorting planes failed to join the formation. While flying near Conflans the formation engaged in combat with five enemy pursuit planes. Wounded in both legs, the left foot and the right elbow, he displayed exceptional tenacity and courage by continuing to fire his guns until the enemy were put to flight.

Vincent C. Breen: In the Bois Belleau north of Verdun, France, October 27, 1918. Residence, Boston, Mass.; born, Boston, Mass.; General Orders, No. 39, War Department, 1920. Captain, One hundred and first Infantry, Twenty-sixth Division. During the attack made to retake the woods lost by the retirement of our units Captain Breen was severely wounded in the arm. After receiving first aid he again led his company forward through heavy fire until wounded a second time, this time in the shoulder. It was largely due to his courage and initiative that his company was able to advance to its objective.

Robert C. Bunge: Near Montfaucon, France, September 26, 1918. Residence, Cincinnati, Ohio; born, New York, N. Y.; General Orders, No. 43, War Department, 1922. Captain, One hundred and forty-eighth Infantry, Thirty-seventh Division. While in command of a combat liaison group operating between the Thirty-seventh and Ninety-first Divisions and under heavy hostile artillery fire Captain Bunge, although painfully wounded by a shell fragment and burned with gas, courageously remained in command of his company, maintained contact with the enemy, and directed the company movements. When the attack was continued on September 27 and his company was acting in the same capacity, while passing through a terrible hostile artillery barrage he received a serious fracture of the skull from enemy shell fragments, and refusing to be evacuated he tenaciously continued with his group. Later, on the same day, while leading his company, he was again seriously wounded by shell fire, which necessitated his evacuation.

Lawrence Donald Butler: Near Romanovka, Siberia, June 25, 1919. Residence, San Francisco, Calif.; born, Plano, Tex.; General Orders, No. 133, War Department, 1919. Second lieutenant, Thirty-first Infantry. Although twice wounded, once severely early in the action, and after over 50 per cent of the detachment were casualties and the detachment completely surrounded by the enemy, he continued courageously to direct the men, and by his heroism, bearing, and skill so inspired the few survivors that they were enabled to completely repulse greatly superior numbers of the enemy.

Robert B. Cable: (1309715) Near Monthrehain and Busigny, France, October 7–17, 1918. Residence, Tellico Plains, Tenn.; born, Carter County, Tenn.; General Orders, No. 46, War Department, 1919. First lieutenant, Company M, One hundred and seventeenth Infantry, Thirtieth Division. For repeated acts of extraordinary heroism near Monthrehain and Busigny, France. Leading two platoons of his company, after the officers had become casualties, Sergeant (First Lieutenant) Cable effectively cleared the ground on the right flank of the company of machine-gun nests, capturing two guns. Later in the day he took command of the company, when no officers remained with it, and contained to be in charge for a week, in which time he lead his men in six attacks, inspiring them by his fearlessness. On October 9 he led an attack on the town of Busigny, charging across an open field in the face of heavy machine-gun fire from the houses of the village, and clearing the town of the enemy. This gallant soldier was later wounded while leading two platoons against an enemy machine-gun nest.

Daniel B. Carroll: Near Bois-de-Cheppy, France, September 26–28, 1918. Residence, Santa Cruz, Calif.; born, Australia; General Orders, No. 39, War Department, 1920. First lieutenant, Three hundred and sixty-fourth Infantry, Ninety-first Division. Although wounded in the arm in the attack of September 26, Lieutenant Carroll gallantly led his platoon forward, under heavy artillery and machine-gun fire, through the Bois-de-Cheppy. Later, while leading his platoon in an attack near the Neuve Grange Farm, he continued on until severely wounded a second time.

Charles E. Chenoweth: In the forest of Argonne, France, September 29–30, 1918. Residence, Lima, Ohio; born, St. Johns, Ohio; General Orders, No. 20, War Department, 1919. Captain, Three hundred and sixty-third Infantry, Ninety-first Division. At the time when troops on the left had retired, Captain Chenoweth, with his company, covered the left flank of his division and thus prevented an attack by the enemy upon its flank. After being severely wounded he remained at his post until he had issued the necessary orders for holding the position he had seized.

John T. Comerford: Near Bois-de-Belleu, north of Verdun, France, October 28, 1918. Residence, Brookline, Mass.; born, Brookline, Mass.; General Orders, No. 56, War Department, 1922. Captain Machine Gun Company, One hundred and first Infantry, Twenty-sixth Division. Following five days' combat, during which his company made three attacks and repulsed four counterattacks in which his company was well-nigh exhausted by uninterrupted fighting, the enemy placed a barrage of minenwerfer, machine-gun, and artillery fire on a slightly entrenched front line, causing the Infantry to fall back, leaving a gap in the line. Captain Comerford volunteered to reestablish the line, gathered a group of 10 men, organized them, and led them into the gap, encountered an enemy patrol coming through, charged and drove them out, reestablished the line, and held it under a heavy machine-gun fire until reinforcements arrived. During this action he and a majority of his men were wounded, and some of the latter killed, but their heroic action prevented the enemy from inflicting heavy losses by flanking fire.

Charles C. Conaty: Near Crezancy, France, July 16, 1918. Residence, Taunton, Mass.; born, Taunton, Mass.; General Orders, No. 99, War Department, 1918. First lieutenant, chaplain, Eleventh Infantry, Twenty-eighth Division. Without regard for his personal safety, Chaplain Conaty, under intense shell fire following the attack of his troops from Crezancy to the Marne River, attended the wounded and throughout the night searched and assisted in carrying wounded to the dressing station.

John W. Cousins: Near Conflans, France, November 2, 1918. Residence, New Haven, Conn.; born, New Haven, Conn.; General Orders, No. 15, War Department, 1919. First lieutenant, Infantry, observer, Ninety-first Aero Squadron, Air Service. In the course of a photographic mission of a particularly dangerous character he and his pilot were attacked by a superior number of enemy pursuit planes. During the combat that ensued, with remarkable coolness and excellent shooting, he destroyed one of the attacking machines. Notwithstanding that the enemy aircraft continued to attack and harass them, Lieutenant Cousins and his pilot reached all their objectives and returned to our lines with photographs of great military importance.

George S. Crabbe: Near Cierges, France, July 31, 1918. Residence, Saginaw, Mich.; born, Saginaw, Mich.; General Orders, No. 64, War Department, 1919. First lieutenant, One hundred and twenty-fifth Infantry, Thirty-second Division. While advancing with his company he wrenched his leg severely in the crossing of the Ourcq River, but continued in the advance. Later he was severely wounded by machine-gun bullets in the left thigh, but again refused evacuation, and continued in command of his company until the objective had been reached and the position consolidated, remaining nine hours with his company after having been wounded.

James Cross: Near St. Souplet, France, October 15, 1918. Residence, Helenwood, Tenn.; born, Huntsville, Tenn.; General Orders, No. 74, War Department, 1919. Second lieutenant, One hundred and eighth Infantry, Twenty-seventh Division. Accompanied by four soldiers, Lieutenant Cross made a reconnaissance of the River La Salle, the journey being under constant heavy machine-gun fire. To secure the desired information it was necessary to wade the stream for the entire distance. On the following evening Lieutenant Cross tapped the line from which his regiment would launch their attack, and in the battle that followed he was severely wounded.

Howard Hubber Davis: In Templeux Quarries, France, January 8, 1918. Residence, Cleveland, Ohio; born, Cleveland, Ohio; General Orders, No. 138, War Department, 1918. First lieutenant, Medical Corps, attached to Twelfth Sherwood Foresters, British Army. He entered a dugout which had been caved in by enemy shell fire and ministered to the wounded. Although the dugout was under heavy shell fire, he performed an operation for amputation of a leg and thereby saved a soldier's life.

Charles W. Drew: Near Flirey, France, August 15, 1918. Residence, Philadelphia, Pa.; born, Rochester, N. Y.; General Orders, No. 15, War Department, 1926. First lieutenant, Thirteenth Aero Squadron, Air Service. Lieutenant Drew operated one of a patrol of four machines which attacked four enemy battleplanes. In the fight which followed he attacked in succession three of the enemy airships, driving one of them out of the battle. He then engaged another machine at close range and received 10 bullets in his own plane, one of which penetrated his radiator, while another pierced his helmet. In spite of this he followed the German plane to a low altitude within the enemy's lines and shot it down in flames. During the latter part of the combat he courageously refused to abandon the fight, although he had become separated from his companions, and his engine had become so hot, because of the leak in his radiator, that there was imminent danger of its failing him at any moment.

Luther E. Ellis: In Bois-d'Ormont, France, October 23, 1918. Residence, Montpelier, Ind.; born, Butler, Ky.; General Orders, No. 133, War Department, 1919. Captain, One hundred and second Infantry, Twenty-sixth Division. He personally led his company against a strongly held enemy machine-gun position. During the advance he was shot through the lung. When wounded, his men halted to render first aid, but he ordered them forward. His example of gallantry contributed greatly to the success of the attack.

Nathaniel Watson Ellis: Near Montbrehain, France, October 7, 1918. Residence, Tellico Plains, Tenn.; born, Elizabeth, Tenn.; General Orders, No. 46, War Department, 1919. First lieutenant, One hundred and seventeenth Infantry, Thirtieth Division. When his company was held up by sweeping machine-gun fire Lieutenant Ellis rushed forward alone, in the face of direct machine-gun fire, to an enemy machine-gun nest 60 yards in advance of his platoon, and by the effective use of his pistol killed five of the enemy and captured 26 prisoners, together with the machine gun. Although he had been seriously wounded in two places while advancing, he held the position until his platoon came up.

William J. Farrell: At Seicheprey, France, April 20, 1918. Residence, Dorchester, Mass.; born, Boston, Mass.; General Orders, No. 49, War Department, 1922. First lieutenant, chaplain, One hundred and fourth Infantry, Twenty-sixth Division. With great gallantry and with utter disregard for his own danger, he personally conducted an ambulance from the battalion command post to the position of a supporting battery, where he assisted in the evacuation of the wounded. At Villedevant, Chaumont, France, November 9, 1918, when informed that one of the men of his battalion had been mortally wounded, Chaplain Farrell, in spite of extremely heavy artillery and flanking machine-gun fire, made his way by running and crawling from shell hole to shell hole until he reached the dying soldier to whom he gave the last rites of his church and with whom he remained until the soldier died.

John Vincent Flood: Near Badonvillers, France, June 24, 1918. Residence, New York, N. Y.; born New York, N. Y. General Orders, No. 24, War Department, 1920. Second lieutenant, Three hundred and eighth Infantry, Seventy-seventh Division. After being severely wounded he continued to direct his platoon with great courage and determination.

Charles M. Fox: Near Bantheville, France, October 26, 1918. Residence, Chicago, Ill.; born, Stinesville, Ill.; General Orders, No. 66, War Department, 1919. Captain, Medical Corps, attached to Three hundred and fifty-third Infantry, Eighty-ninth Division. Although he was suffering from the effects of gas, Captain Fox maintained his battalion dressing station under a terrific bombardment of gas and high explosive shells, which had almost demolished his station, continuing to care for the wounded and refusing to be evacuated until blindness rendered him unable to work.

Richard G. White: Near Soissons, France, July 18, 1918. Residence, Charleston, S. C.; born, Marion, S. C.; General Orders, No. 15, War Department, 1919. First lieutenant, Sixteenth Infantry, First Division. He led his platoon through intense machine-gun and artillery fire, destroying machine guns that were causing heavy losses on an exposed flank and remaining in command of his platoon until twice severely wounded.

Merritt B. Wilson: Near Reddy Farm, France, August 2, 1918. Residence, Menominee, Mich; born, Menominee, Mich.; General Orders, No. 64, War Department, 1919. First lieutenant, One hundred and twenty-fifth Infantry, Thirty-second Division. With a party of 30 men he led the advance on the Bois Chenet, where a full company of Germans, supported by machine guns, were encountered. Due to his splendid leadership and example this resistance was overcome and the woods were taken. Although suffering great pain from a broken eardrum, caused by the explosion of a shell, Lieutenant Wilson immediately led his party to the flank of the battalion, where numerous attempts of the enemy to retake the woods were repulsed. He refused to leave his company for first aid until darkness had brought an end to the advance.

Alan F. Winslow: In the Toul sector, France, June 6, 1918. Residence, River Forest, Ill.; born, River Forest, Ill.; General Orders, No. 121, War Department, 1918. Second lieutenant, Ninety-fourth Aero Squadron, Air Service. While on a patrol, consisting of himself and two other pilots, he encountered an enemy biplane at an altitude of 4,000 meters near St. Mihiel, France. He promptly and vigorously attacked, and, after a running fight extending far beyond the German lines, shot his foe down in flames near Thiacourt.

David J. Winton (9604): Near Exermont, France, October 4, 1918. Residence, Minneapolis, Minn.; born, Warsaw, Wis.; General Orders, No. 59, War Department, 1919. Second lieutenant (sergeant) Company C, Three hundred and forty-fifth Battalion, Tank Corps. Sergeant Winton ran his tank into the woods to reduce a machine-gun nest, but it was hit and set on fire. He and the driver were wounded as they left the tank, but advanced on the nest and were both wounded the second time. While attempting to reach his companion, who had been hit the third time, Sergeant Winton was again wounded, but reached the driver. They then took cover and remained until darkness, when Sergeant Winton made his way back to our lines, being hit three more times while returning.

Jesse Walton Wooldridge: East of Chateau-Thierry, France, July 15, 1918. Residence, San Francisco, Calif.; born, Hopkinsville, Ky.; General Orders, No. 99, War Department, 1918. Distinguished-service medal also awarded. Captain, Thirty-eighth Infantry, Third Division. With rare courage and conspicuous gallantry he led a counterattack against an enemy of five times his own numbers on July 15, 1918, east of Chateau-Thierry, France; 189 men entered this counterattack and 51 emerged untouched. More than 1,000 of the enemy were killed, wounded or taken prisoners.

John F. Woolshlager: Northwest of Grand Pre, France, October 18, 1918. Residence, Castorland, N. Y.; born, Beaver Falls, N. Y.; General Orders, No. 16, War Department, 1920. First lieutenant, Three hundred and twelfth Infantry, Seventy-eighth Division. In the attack of morning of October 18, Lieutenant Woolshlager was severely wounded, both legs being broken. He nevertheless retained command of his platoon and that of an adjoining platoon. Throughout the day, exposed to heavy machine-gun and artillery fire, he encouraged and directed his men. Due to his efforts the position, gained at great cost, was held against enemy attacks.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on House Joint Resolution 278.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I wish to say a few words in regard to H. R. 6511, a bill to protect labor in its old age, and H. J. Res. 278, a joint resolution appointing a committee of 15 to inquire into the subject of old age dependency in the United States and proper methods of its relief, and to report back its finding within two years.

I am deeply interested in the subject. If I could eradicate poverty and its accompanying misery from the lives of men I would not exchange the proud satisfaction which I should enjoy for all of the triumphs ever decreed to the most successful conqueror. In that I am no different, I suppose, from the most of men. It is upon that assumption that I believe H. R. 6511 should be considered by the Committee on Labor at the next session of Congress and the entire subject matter of that bill canvassed, examined, analyzed, and published, as the first great step in ultimately securing congressional legislation upon the most important subject of human existence. Old-age pensions, in my judgment, is the act which, when performed, will completely justify the present civilization. "What profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul," and of what value is a civilization that is rich, powerful, and opulent in spots, with degredation, poverty, misery, hopelessness, and the haunting fear the specter of want dogging the footsteps of many men and women in their old age, who, with advancing years, become more and more terrified at the thought that they will not have food, raiment, and shelter in the wintry days before death closes all.

I frankly admit that a good part of my education and experience, which are almost synonymous terms from my standpoint, were gained as a result of my membership in a number of fraternal organizations. As soon as I attained the age of 21 I joined the Knights of Pythias. That order is based upon the inspiring story of the friendship that existed between Damon and Pythias and will last as long as the English language has power to enthrall the ear and command the attention of man. For its ritual, written in the purest and loftiest English, is yet as simple as the language of the Bible, and makes for an indelible impression upon the coldest hearts and the dullest imaginations. That fraternal order has made for the betterment of mankind. Its wonderful story has made men do noble things, not dream them all the day long, and so made death and that vast forever one grand sweet song, if I may be permitted to slightly alter Kingsley's immortal words so as to fit them into this sentence. The fundamentals that are its mudsills and its foundations, friendship, charity, and benevolence are really the support on which rests all of the other great fraternal orders of which I have any knowledge, such as the Elks, Moose, the Woodmen of the World, the Eagles, and the Knights of Columbus, each of which has a ritual which is a liberal education and a declaration of patriotism that attest an unfaltering devotion to American institutions and ideals. These fundamental principles, call them by what name you will, go back into the very twilight of man's existence and were the basis on which rested fraternal organizations in the dawn of the history of the world.

In Egypt's celebrated Book of the Dead, written long before Joseph was sold into captivity, and thousands of years before the dawn of Judaism had yet begun, there appear these words:

> He hath given bread to the hungry and clothes to the naked; he hath given a boat to the shipwrecked; he hath befriended the widow and the orphan; he hath offered due rights to the gods and honored the dead.

Those lofty sentiments and those ideals would justify the existence of any church in the history of the world and make appealing any religious formula, by whatever name it might pass through the ages. All men are deeply moved, I am sure, by words that convey such a meaning and such a throb as are found in these two stanzas:

> Open my eyes to visions girt
> With beauty and with wonder lit
> But never let me forget the dirt
> And all that spawn and die in it.
> Open my ears to music; let > Me thrill with spring's first flutes and drums—
> But never let me dare forget
> The bitter ballads of the slums.

Some of the finest men I know I met through these great, powerful American organizations that are, as it were, in each case an imperium in imperio, and which round out and harmonize, as far as present legal, social, and governmental conditions will permit, the human relations that exist even in our great Republic. In other words, benevolent organizations do for their members that which government can not do in view of the restrictions and restraints placed upon its operations. Governments have not yet reached the point, except in a few instances, where they are willing to take care of the people upon a broad and unlimited scale and guarantee them against want and the terrible fears that go with it, and make for so many specters in the shape of old men and old women who totter and dodder in dread to their graves.

But it must be admitted that we have done many things and created many institutions to help the afflicted. Hospitals, insane asylums, deaf and dumb asylums, institutes for the blind, homes for incurables, and many other similar institutions show that humanity is on the march, and that it is crowning itself with a greater glory than that which could ever be achieved through the construction of great subways, tunnels, wonderful bridges, inspiring skyscrapers, vast cathedrals, universities, and the solemn temples which adorn our educational structure, the great libraries and art galleries that are the outstanding public buildings in every municipality in America. But much remains yet to be done. We are on the march, and men like SIROVICH, torchbearers, are preparing for the great day that still lies ahead, when no man need fear that he and his companions will be without bread to eat or a roof to cover their heads when the storms blow across their lives, for "into each life some rain must fall, some days must be dark and dreary." There are, however, many of the advanced thinkers of this country along fraternal and benevolent lines, such as Frank Herring, of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, a hero in every strife for the uplift of the race, and James J. Davis, present Secretary of Labor, and intrenched in the affections of every member of the Moose order over this country, who believe that we should not attempt to hurry the great movement in behalf of benevolence lest we make the advance a disorderly instead of an orderly one. These really great spirits believe that nothing can happen permanently until the appropriate time arrives for its birth and development, and they both feel, I think, while impressed with the boldness and the vision and the courage of the advance guard, that perhaps it is well to observe and ponder over the wisdom of the maxim, "festina lente," "make haste slowly," and therefore mark time occasionally and then go forward again.

There are many, I think, who believe that H. J. Res. 278 would not accomplish as much as H. R. 6511, under which the Committee on Labor could hold hearings and give to the world the facts that have already been accumulated and which could be restated in such a manner that the great newspapers of the country which mold and crystalize public opinion, the mighty law that rules the land, would find it attractive and stimulating enough to make for numberless news stories which would pave the way for a fruition of the hopes of those who have through nights of sorrow foreseen the glories of the coming days.

As I understand it from a letter that I have received from a very dear friend who has investigated the subject, a wealth of information is awaiting the committee whenever it undertakes the investigation. I am informed that—

At least two very exhaustive State investigations have been made in regard to old-age pensions, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania. Three nation-wide organizations are studying and issuing propaganda material constantly on the subject of old-age pensions. In this group is the American Association for Old Age Security, whose headquarters address is Room 2004, 104 Fifth Avenue, New York City. One of the activities of the American Association for Labor Legislation, 131 East Twenty-third Street, New York City, is the furtherance of old-age-pension legislation. The Independent Order of Eagles has been studying this subject and advocating old-age pensions for a number of years.

A very informative article is in the issue of the American Labor Legislation Review for June, 1927. In 1927 two additional States passed old-age pension laws, Colorado and Maryland, which makes a total of six—Colorado, Maryland, Montana, Nevada, Wisconsin, and Kentucky, and the Territory of Alaska. In Wyoming a bill passed both houses and was vetoed by the governor. In six States—Idaho, Indiana, Nebraska, Texas, Utah, and Washington—such bills succeeded in passing one or the other of the houses. In Washington it was a question of repassing a bill over the governor's veto in 1926. Four States—Arkansas, California, Iowa, and New York—made provisions for an investigation of old-age dependency with a view to such legislation.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics of this department has in its reports and in its files all the information that any such a commission as H. J. Res. 278 proposes could obtain. They have and have published information relative to the pension systems of private corporations. They have all the information in regard to the unions that have established old-age pension systems, such as the bricklayers and masons, bridge and structural iron workers, electrical workers, granite cutters, locomotive engineers, and others.

On the question of old-age retirement I think the following material which has been published in the Monthly Labor Review of the Bureau of Labor Statistics would prove exceedingly valuable to the Committee on Labor should they ever conclude to hold hearings on the subject or publish investigations they may make of their own motion in newspapers where it will prove efficacious, instead of dry reports which are sepulchered on the shelves of rooms that really are vaults for dead books:

January, 1926: Industrial pensions for old age and disability. (Separate).

June, 1926: Public pensions for aged dependents. (Pp. 1–9.) Bibliograph. Public old age pensions in the United States. (Pp. 238–246.)

August, 1927: Public service retirement systems: Pennsylvania. (Pp. 10–24.)

December, 1927: Public service retirement systems: State employees. (Pp. 30–46.)

January, 1928: Trade-union provision for sick, aged, and disabled members, and for dependents. (Pp. 1–16.)

Public service retirement systems in Great Britain and France. (Pp. 33–42.)

February, 1928: Trade-union old age pensions and homes for the aged and tubercular. (Pp. 1–29.)

Federal employees' retirement act. (Pp. 37–47.)

Public service retirement systems in foreign countries. (Pp. 47–73.)

March, 1928: Public service retirement system of Belgium—a supplementary note. (P. 26.)

April, 1928: Retirement systems for municipal employees. (Pp. 38–43.)

I would also call your attention to an article by Secretary Davis in this month's issue of the North American Review on "Old age at fifty." The National Civic Federation has made two separate investigations of old-age pensions the results of which it has already published.

Let me close by saying that I believe that we should be liberal in meeting the request of the Department of Labor for funds for which to make investigations along the lines of the subject matter of H. J. Res. 278 and H. R. 6511. We want all the light we can get and all the information we can secure upon this tremendous possibility that has to be faced by so many men and women in moving across the stage of life—the fear of want. In the grand drama of life each any every one must play a part and our colleague Doctor SIROVICH is one of the principal actors of his generation in carrying to the hearts and minds of his countrymen the truth that civilization must justify itself by a finer fruit than mere material grandeur. "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make ye free" will always be upon the lips of the real reformer who desires to promote the interest of his country along benevolent roads. A civilization that can boast of having exercised the demon and evil spirit, poverty and dread, from the household of those whose only fear is that they will suffer want in their old age will endure. No other can survive the constant and steady stroke of remorseless time. All the kingdoms and empires that are buried beneath the sands of centuries were tried in the balance and found wanting. We too shall pass away, perish as a people if we have not the vision to see.

An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SAND ISLAND, COLUMBIA RIVER

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I introduce a bill relating to Sand Island, in the mouth of Columbia River, concerning which the Committee on Public Lands held hearings two years ago, but no decision was arrived at regarding it. I should like to have the bill printed in the RECORD, together with the statement I am about to make regarding the need for the legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 4396) for the purpose of authorizing payment of moneys received for fishing licenses on Sand Island to the bureau of fisheries of the State of Washington and the State fish commission of the State of Oregon and authorizing them to control fishing rights on Sand Island hereafter, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 4396, Seventieth Congress, first session

A bill for the purpose of authorizing payment of moneys received for fishing licenses on Sand Island to the bureau of fisheries of the State of Washington and the State fish commission of the State of Oregon and authorizing them to control fishing rights on Sand Island hereafter, and for other purposes

Whereas, August 29, 1863, Abraham Lincoln, then President of the United States, assumed that Sand Island, in the entrance to Columbia River, Oreg., was part of the public domain belonging to the United States, did upon recommendation of the Secretary of War issue an order reserving Sand Island from sale for military purposes; and

Whereas the War Department thereafter discovered that Sand Island did not rise above high tide, but laid between low and high water mark, and concluded that Sand Island was not a part of the public domain, but belonged to the State of Oregon, and September 26, 1864, the War Department requested an act be passed by the Legislature of Oregon ceding to the United States Sand Island; and

Whereas the Legislature of Oregon passed an act so ceding Sand Island to the United States, intending thereby to convey to the United States the use of said island for military purposes only; and

Whereas the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Washington v. Oregon (211 U. S. 127), found that Sand Island had been gradually moving northward until it has now moved north of what was formerly the north channel of the Columbia River, and said north channel has become so shallow that the channel to the south of the island is now the main channel used by ships; and

Whereas Sand Island is now on the Washington side of the point in the river where the north channel of the river was when the island was originally ceded to the United States and that it is a shifting, changing mass of sand above high-tide water and has never been used by the United States for military purposes; and

Whereas since the cession of said island to the United States, previous to 1905, the citizens of the State of Washington and of the State of Oregon did secure fishing licenses from their respective States for the use of said island as a public fishing ground and did use said island as a public fishing ground; and

Whereas beginning in the year 1905 the War Department asserted control over said island, advertised for bids for the privilege of fishing thereon, and did issue licenses to fish thereon for various terms of years and for various monetary considerations, and has ever since that time asserted control, advertised for similar bids, and issued licenses and permits for monetary considerations; and

Whereas the United States has received from various licensees and permittees for the privilege of fishing on Sand Island from the year 1905 to and including the year 1927 the sum of $—: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the bureau of fisheries of the State of Washington out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, one-half the sum of $— and the other one-half of said sum of $— to the State fish commission of the State of Oregon in full satisfaction of all claims for money had and received by the United States from the issuance or sale of fishing licenses, leases, or permits on Sand Island in the entrance to the Columbia River: Provided, That previous to the payment of said sum of money to the bureau of fisheries of the State of Washington and the State fish commission of the State of Oregon, as aforesaid, the supervisor of fisheries and the Governor of the State of Washington and the chairman of the State fish commission and the Governor of the State of Oregon shall sign a joint stipulation to the Treasury of the United States that all of said money will be expended jointly by them within five years after the date of payment thereof to the bureau of fisheries of the State of Washington and the State fish commission of the State of Oregon in the propagation and protection of fish in the Columbia River and its tributaries; and, too, that on and after April 1, 1929, the Secretary of War shall cease to issue fishing licenses for the use of Sand Island, if previous to that date the supervisor of fisheries of the State of Washington and the chairman of the State fish commission of the State of Oregon shall agree to issue licenses jointly for the use of Sand Island as a fishing ground and shall stipulate in said agreement with the Secretary of War that all fees received for said licenses shall be expended jointly by them for the propagation and protection of fish in the Columbia River and also that one-half of said licenses shall be issued to the citizens of the State of Washington and one-half of said licenses to the citizens of the State of Oregon, unless and except in case that a sufficient number of citizens of either State fail to make application for said licenses previous to an annual date to be fixed by them: Provided, That said supevisor of fisheries of the State of Washington and the chairman of the State fish commission of the State of Oregon shall make and enforce jointly all regulations for fishing on Sand Island: And provided further, That in time of war or in case said supervisor of fisheries of the State of Washington or the chairman of the State fish commission of the State of Oregon shall fail to carry out the agreement with the Secretary of War, as hereinbefore provided, the Secretary of War shall take control of the fishing rights on Sand Island and shall report said action to Congress within 30 days.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, this island was ceded by the State of Oregon to the United States during the Civil War for military purposes. The swirling waters of the Columbia have shifted this mass of sand across the river until it is now on the north side of the channel, which was formerly on the north side of the island. This mass of sand called an island has moved like a sand dune on the desert.

The War Department has never used it for military purposes. It has been used entirely for fishing purposes. There has been collected more than $400,000 for fishing license fees. This money is in the Treasury of the United States. It should be used for the propagation of fish in the Columbia River by the fisheries departments of the States of Washington and Oregon. It was collected because of the fish in the river and should be used to perpetuate the fish there. That is the purpose of the legislation. I hope to have the bill considered by the Public Lands Committee within a few days and have it reported favorably to the Senate.

WHEAT RATES

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two very thoughtful and informative editorials published in the Pendleton East Oregonian, entitled "Our wheat rates too high."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorials are as follows:

[Editorial of May 1, 1928]

OUR WHEAT RATES TOO HIGH

Canadian railroads haul wheat from Winnipeg to Port Arthur, Ontario, for 14 cents per hundred weight, the distance being 424 miles whereas the rate from Pendleton to Portland, a distance of 218 miles, is 18½ cents a hundred. The Canadian rate is 4½ cents a hundred lower than our rate yet the distance in Canada is approximately twice as far as from here to Portland. From Heppner to Portland, a distance of 196 miles, the rate is 22½ cents, whereas in Canada the rate from Drydon, Ontario, to Port Arthur, a distance of 215 miles, is 12 cents. Heppner farmers pay a rate that is 10½ cents higher than the rate charged for a greater distance in Canada.

As shown by the following table provided by the Oregon Public Service Commission, the rates from Canadian points to Port Arthur are invariably lower than the American rates and sometimes less than half the rates paid by farmers in this country:

Since the price of wheat is based upon the export market less the cost of transportation our present rates place our farmers at a disadvantage compared with Canadian farmers.

To-morrow the East Oregonian will publish a schedule showing rates from various points to Portland and the rates charged to Duluth from points comparable as to distance.

[Editorial of May 1, 1928]

OUR WHEAT RATES TOO HIGH

Wheat freight rates are much lower in Canada than in the United States, according to schedules secured by this paper from the Oregon public service commission. In many cases the Canadian rates are less than half the rates prevailing in this country.

But the rates from American points to Duluth are also lower than the rates from our interior country to Portland. The wheat rate from Heppner, Condon, and Shaniko to Portland is 22½ cents whereas the rate to Duluth from points comparable as to distance are but 13½ and 14 cents. That means that our friends in Morrow, Gilliam, and Sherman Counties pay vastly more in freight charges than do the Minnesota farmers who ship to Duluth from about the same distance.

Pendleton farmers pay 18½ cents for shipping their wheat from this point to Portland while from Lake Park, Minn., to Duluth, virtually the same distance as from here to Portland, the rate charged is only 14½ cents.

The following table provided by the public service commission shows a comparison between the rates charged to Portland and to Duluth from points of approximate distance.

As will be noted, the table above shows that the rate from Lake Park to Duluth is 4 cents lower than the rate from Pendleton to Portland. Since Pendleton is a main-line point and has a water-grade rate to Portland, why this differential?

The freight cost is borne by the grower and is deducted from the price paid him for his wheat. If Umatilla County farmers pay 4 cents a hundred more than they should for the hauling of their wheat to tidewater, they lose around $125,000 a year. That is a large sum and if our farmers were required to subscribe that amount each year for a useless purpose they would complain seriously because of the burden.

The East Oregonian is inclined to the belief they are making just such a donation. Read the schedules and judge for yourself.

LEON P. CHESLEY

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I have an embarrassing statement to make to the Senate. Last night when we were considering the Spanish War veterans' pension bill I offered an amendment, which will be found on page 8098 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in behalf of Leon P. Chesley. I made the statement that he is a Civil War veteran and completely disabled. I find this morning that that is partially incorrect.

He is a Spanish War veteran. The statement that he is hopelessly disabled was true. He is unable to work at all and for that reason the $50 pension was suggested, but he is not, as I stated, a Civil War veteran. I am willing to ask unanimous consent, if any Senator desires, for a reconsideration of the bill and the striking out of the amendment, but I do not want to have it remain in the bill under false pretenses.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, has the matter been before the committee and was there favorable action on it?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It was before the committee, but the committee did not include it in its report. I believe that was because he is a Spanish War veteran.

Mr. KING. In view of the fact that there will be many applications of the same character and the matter is before the committee, I think it should go back to the committee.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Then I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered, the amendment rejected, and the bill passed without the amendment.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, what bill is it to which the Senator refers?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. A pension bill for veterans of other wars than the Civil War.

Mr. BRUCE. And not a special pension bill?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It is an omnibus pension bill. When it was under consideration I offered the amendment and in support of it made the statement I have explained. Now, I ask unanimous consent that the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed may be reconsidered and that the amendment may be reconsidered. It is a deserving case.

Mr. KING. If the committee reports upon it I shall have no objection.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if this action will in any wise prejudice the bill? I do not want to take action that will deprive others of relief.

Mr. KING. No; the bill will be passed immediately.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. We will pass the bill without the amendment to which I have referred.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. If it is a deserving case, and if it ought to be provided for, why should we, because of an innocently erroneous statement made by the Senator from Pennsylvania last night, which he now corrects, go to the trouble of reconsidering the bill? The whole question with me would rest upon whether it ought to be done and whether or not the man is deserving. If he is, why not let the matter rest as it is?

Mr. KING. It relates to a different kind of case from those which we were considering. The committee will have other cases of a similar character, and I would like a policy to be laid down by the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. Here is a man disabled.

Mr. KING. Let the committee pass upon it.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is not my bill and I have no interest in it except from the statement made. My sympathy is entirely with the individual who is disabled and to whom the pension would be paid. I wish it were possible under these circumstances to permit the bill to stand with the provision suggested.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether the case properly belongs in the bill?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes; this is the appropriate bill for the amendment to be in if it is to go in at all.

Mr. BINGHAM. Has the committee considered the bill at all?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The private pension bill was introduced by me and referred to the committee, and they took no action upon it. Therefore I presented the case in the form of an amendment last night.

Mr. BINGHAM. The committee have already considered the case?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Apparently they have not; at least they have taken no action. The Senate approved of the case on an incorrect statement made by me, and I can not afford to have the Senate feel that I do not make correct statements.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course no one would suspect that. It would have gone in just as easily if the Senator had been correct about the war in which the man served. I am hopeful that the Senator from Utah will withdraw his objection.

Mr. KING. The only point I have in mind is that the amendment will necessitate the bill going back to the House again, whereas if it is not in we will pass the bill without it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senate committee put on a lot of amendments which will have to be considered by the House.

Mr. KING. If that is true, I have no objection.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, as a member of the committee, though not speaking for other members of the committee, I hope the vote will not be reconsidered and that we will let the passage of the bill last night stand.

Mr. KING. I have no objection, but I thought the amendment would require the bill to go back to the House and would delay procedure.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; not at all.

Mr. KING. Then I have no objection.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not understand that the committee to which the bill was referred ever made an adverse report or took adverse action on the amendment; they just did not reach it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. They did not do anything with it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it ought to pass.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, inasmuch as it seems to be conceded that the man is entitled to a pension and that his item is properly in the bill, and also conceded that the committee had not acted in the case or had not reached it and therefore had taken no adverse action, and some of the members of the committee think it a just provision, I think the way out is not to reconsider anything, and therefore I object to the granting of the request made by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

INCOME-TAX DECISION

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an editorial from the Grand Rapids Herald entitled "Tax tyranny."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TAX TYRANNY

The decision of the United States Board of Tax Appeals in favor of Senator COUZENS, of Michigan, terminates the most spectacular tax litigation in American history. It does not terminate the repercussions. These will be heard for many a day and year to come. Whether one agrees with Senator COUZENS in all of his Mellon warfare or not it seems to the Herald that no impartial study of the facts can justify the warfare which the Treasury itself has conducted against Senator COUZENS or can do other than sustain yesterday's verdict.

The very nature and circumstance of the dispute put the Treasury Department in unfortunate and untenable posture from the start. Here was an effort to revise an old assessment made on values fixed by the Government itself in the matter of COUZENS's sale of Ford stock. Here was an effort to collect $10,000,000 in back taxes against one citizen after this citizen long since had paid in full on the basis originally dictated by the Treasury itself. Thirty-one different bureaus and departments of the Government had rendered 63 separate and distinct decisions validating this original basis and approving the original assessment. In all common sense and all decency, as between a citizen and his government, this cumulative decision should have been conclusive and final.

But this did not happen in the COUZENS case. Instead, another decision finally overturned all these others. This subsequent decision, furthermore, was made within eight hours after Senator COUZENS launched his initial attack upon conditions in the Internal Revenue Department. Perhaps this was only a strange and fortuitous and unhappy coincidence, as the Treasury, of course, insists. But even the Treasury must admit that the coincidence could invite suspicion. There is a resolution pending in the Senate to investigate this latter hypothesis, which, of course, if true would be insufferable tyranny. Intimidation or reprisal would be a dangerous weapon in the hands of so powerful an agency as the Treasury. Whether this hypothesis be warranted or not, the whole story discloses an extremely dangerous possibility of the use of governmental power. A citizen less wealthy than Senator COUZENS would be ruined by such an experience long before a tax board could come to his relief. A citizen less pugnacious than Senator COUZENS would have been driven to composition and surrender.

The Government should take a lesson from the COUZENS case. It should be bound by its own decisions. It should give every honest citizen the benefit of the doubt. So far as this particular issue is concerned, Senator COUZENS has not been fighting for himself alone. He has rendered his country a useful service.

SHOOTING OF JACOB D. HANSEN

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I send to the desk a letter, which I ask may be read by the clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read, as requested. The Chief Clerk read the letter, as follows:

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y., May 7, 1928.

Hon. ROYAL S. COPELAND,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We desire to call your attention to the murderous assault committed on Jacob D. Hansen by two members of the United States Coast Guard Service situated at or near Fort Niagara.

When driving his automobile up the Lewiston Hill, just outside of this city, at about 3 o'clock on the morning of May 6 he was called upon to stop by a man in the road. This man was dressed in overalls and a sheepskin coat. Mr. Hansen did not stop and the man fired several shots at him. There was another man stationed farther up the hill dressed in the same kind of clothes, and as Mr. Hansen approached this man he fired a great many times at the car, which was approaching him, and one of the bullets struck Mr. Hansen in the right temple, put out both of his eyes, fractured his skull in several places, and lodged in the back of his head. Mr. Hansen is at the point of death and, as we are informed, will probably die within a short time. Even if he should recover, he will be totally blind.

Mr. Hansen is the secretary of the local lodge of Elks and is a prominent and respected citizen of this city.

In the interests of the public of this community generally it seems to us that an investigation of this matter should be ordered and that the man who fired the shots, if Mr. Hansen dies, should pay the penalty prescribed by law for murder in the first degree.

No law-abiding citizen is safe on the roads in and about the Niagara frontier so long as these men of the Coast Guard are allowed to hold up a car in the nighttime by shooting at the occupants thereof without any information whatsoever as to the character of the occupants of the car.

We hope that you will do whatever you can in your official capacity toward curbing these practices by the Coast Guard men and toward bringing the perpetrators of this crime to justice.

Very truly yours,

WALLACE & ORR.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, what committee of the Senate has charge of matters concerning the United States Coast Guard?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask that this letter be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and the committee requested to have an explanation made of this terrible situation.

In this connection I send forward an article from the New York Sun giving more details of this murderous attack upon this citizen and ask that it be printed in the RECORD, and that the whole matter be referred to the Committee on Commerce with a request for an early report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Sun of Monday, May 7, 1928]

DRY SPIES ADMIT MOTOR SHOOTING—VICTIM, PROMINENT ELK, IN SERIOUS CONDITION—UPSTATE FEELING RUNS HIGH—GUARDS SAY THEY WERE TRYING TO HALT CAR

NIAGARA FALLS, May 7.—The condition of Jacob D. Hanson, shot by United States Coast Guard men when he failed to stop his car on Lewiston Hill early Sunday morning, was unchanged to-day. Hanson has a bullet wound in the head, and physicians say if he recovers he probably will be blind. Hanson is secretary of the local lodge of Elks.

The shooting occurred within a stone's throw of the city's exclusive residential section at Lewiston Heights, and the road over which Hanson was traveling is a main highway leading to the summer homes of many Niagara Falls and Buffalo residents along the lower Niagara and Lake Ontario shores.

The two men held in the shooting—Glenn Jennings and Chris Dew, Coast Guard men—have admitted the shooting. Jennings fired the shot which wounded Hanson. Assistant District Attorney Edmund D. O'Brien made public to-day statements which Dew and Jennings had made to him.

According to the two Coast Guard men's version of the shooting, as given to the assistant district attorney, they had been assigned to duty on the hill by their superior officers, with instructions to stop and search any cars suspected of carrying contraband liquor.

Dew was stationed at the curve in the road under the overhead crossing of the New York Central Railroad tracks and Jennings was farther up the hill near the next curve in the road.

VERSION OF ONE OF THEM

Dew said that he saw the Hanson car approaching up the hill at what he claimed to be a high rate of speed, and as it rounded the first curve under the bridge he stepped in front of the car with a gun in one hand and a flashlight in the other, which he waved in a signal for the machine to stop. He said that the car increased its speed and he was forced to jump to the side of the road to avoid being struck; then, according to his statement, he fired four shots into the bank on the opposite side of the road in an effort to frighten the driver.

Jennings, who had seen what was taking place farther down the hill, stepped into the road, he said, with the idea of crippling the car by firing into the engine and forcing it to stop. He said that he fired five shots as the car approached and while it was passing the point where he stood. He fired one shot after the car had passed. He said that he then saw the car strike the curb and slide along, coming to a stop approximately 100 feet from where it struck. He did not know that any of his shots had taken effect and ran to the car and saw that the man was injured.

FEELING RUNS HIGH

BUFFALO, May 7.—Feeling in western New York runs high to-day against two Coast Guard men held on a charge of shooting Hanson.

Hanson was returning to the Falls after taking a party of friends to Lewiston following their attendance at the silver-jubilee celebration of the North Tonawanda Lodge of Elks. The Coast Guard men, clad in overalls and sheepskin jackets, came upon him on the Lewiston hill. Suspecting he was a rum runner they commanded him to stop.

EASILY PASSED FOR THUGS

From the rather nondescript appearance of the pair, Hanson apparently thought they were highwaymen. He tried to speed away. The guardsmen fired several shots. One went through the windshield and entered the driver's right temple. The car ran into the rocky bank and stopped.

Clarence R. Runnals, prominent Falls attorney, said to-day one of the Coast Guard men aroused him at daybreak and asked permission to use the telephone to call an ambulance. The man's appearance was so disreputable, he said, that he forced the stranger to remain outside and locked the door while he summoned the conveyance himself.

PLAN INDIGNATION MEETING

Citizens generally at the Falls are aroused. The management of one theater has offered the Elks the use of its house for an indignation meeting to-night to protest against the shooting of innocent citizens by Federal men. Stories of other shootings at motorists are freely circulated. Several lawyers who are members of the Elks in Niagara Falls and Buffalo have offered their services gratis to see that justice is done. Wealthy members of the order in western New York have offered financial aid to bring Jennings and Dew before the courts.

Hanson is one of the most widely known men in Niagara Falls. He is unmarried.

SPEECH BY HON. ROBERT F. WAGNER ON UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a speech on unemployment by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], delivered over WRC May 8, 1928.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is here printed, as follows:

To my mind the elimination of unemployment is a Federal task in a class with flood control and national defense. Fundamentally, it is a business question that has nothing to do with politics. We know that every so often, in fact six times within the past 35 years (1893, 1903, 1908, 1914, 1921, and 1927) we suffer depressions which shut down our factories and our mines, slacken our transportation systems, and reduce the volume of building and trade. We also know that on every one of those occasions millions of workmen are thrown out of work through no apparent fault of their own. Soon enough their savings are exhausted, their resources gone, and they are compelled to undergo the shame and degradation of applying for relief. How long they suffer in silent misery, going without the most elementary needs, is known to everyone who has taken an interest in their plight.

If you have ever knocked at one factory gate after another without gaining admittance, if you have ever stared at a sign "No men wanted," and felt that it was written especially to you, if you have tramped the city streets hour after hour without seeing a single doorway which meant welcome to you, and through which you could step to work and wages, if you have done any of these, then you have experienced the emptiness of heart, the drooping of the lips, the sinking of the knees, and the stooping of the shoulders of the man without a job.

Right now we have in this country a vast number of these men and women who are ready, able, and anxious to work to multiply the fabulous wealth of this Nation, but opportunity is denied them. They are treated as outcasts of industry. To me they present a very depressing yet a challenging picture. I can imagine them lined up in a single file reaching from the White House to Kansas City, and their wives and children stretching the line beyond to the Golden Gate of California. I do not mean to use figures of speech. The line of job hunters I have projected is a very real one for we have now mobilized a huge standing army of over 4,000,000 men and women who can not find work.

During periods of prosperity we forget. We have a proud people in these United States who do not like to complain or to recite old grievances. When the unemployment is over we return with renewed zest and added vigor to produce—produce, more and more, faster and faster, with ever-increasing efficiency—until once again we find that the very plenty we have created brings us poverty. The very progress we have achieved condemns us to idleness.

That is just where we are now. We are suffering from the ancient paradox, suffering want because we have too much—going idle because we have learned to work too well.

Now, I believe, the time is ripe to dissolve that illicit relationship between progress and poverty. Public opinion is now fully behind such an attempt and public interest has reached a high degree of intensity in every proposal honestly calculated to relieve the unemployment situation.

A combination of circumstances has made the present situation particularly intolerable. According to the report of the Secretary of Labor, we have a large number of men temporarily without jobs, because we are suffering from a business depression, which means that we have more goods on hand than the people have money to buy. In addition, we have a large number of wage earners whose jobs are entirely gone, because their work is now being done by machinery. Not only are their jobs gone, but their trade has disappeared. The skill which they had acquired is worthless. They must start all over again at the bottom if they can find the place to begin.

Everybody is agreed that this is so. Yet we have done nothing and are doing nothing to combat unemployment. The administration is, of course, in a dilemma. It has rested the entire justification of its policies on the ground that they have produced prosperity and it is afraid that to attempt to solve the unemployment problem might be construed as an admission that we have no prosperity.

To get out of the dilemma it has chosen to deny or to minimize the extent of unemployment. That is the only way that I can explain the declaration of the President that employment was plentiful at a time when jobs were so scarce that bread lines once again reappeared on our city streets. That is the only reason I can find for the declaration of one of Mr. Hoover's assistants that there was no unemployment at all, though the published figures of the Department of Labor showed a wholesale discharge of employees computed to be over 1,800,000 in number in the two years between 1925 and 1927. I can only explain these declarations as an apology for the know-nothing, do-nothing policy which this administration has adopted in spite of the suffering and depression which it has already once witnessed in 1921.

The truth is slowly dawning upon all that the price of freedom from unemployment is eternal vigilance, constant planning, incessant guard against the conditions which bring it about. The extent of the problem, the danger to our peace and security which it threatens, call for a permanent body whose task and burden it shall be to carry on a continuous offensive against conditions productive of unemployment. So long as we prefer to rely on emergency committees, so long will there be emergencies to relieve.

We want to do for the unemployment panics what the Federal Reserve Board does for the financial panics. It is a truism that prevention is better than relief.

I am asked why should the Government interfere in this economic problem? My answer is threefold:

First, that government was created for this very purpose, to solve problems cooperatively which we can not solve individually.

Secondly, because unemployment holds out a threat to the security of every American home and to the peace and safety of the entire American people; and lastly, because the problem is such that no one business man could solve it if he would, and he has not the necessary motive to solve it if he could. Only on a national scale and from a national viewpoint does it become both desirable and economical to solve this problem. Let me tell you why. A manufacturer I know had 1,400 men in his employ. Business slackened; he discharged 500 and let them shift for themselves. That may be sound economy for that one manufacturer who releases the men and then he is no longer responsible for them. But can America likewise release those 500 or 5,000,000 of wage earners who are similarly discharged by manufacturers throughout the land? Can its responsibility be shifted so readily? Must not those idle men and their families be fed and clothed and sheltered? Is it desirable for America to destroy their standards of living and uproot their essential faith in the fairness and future of America? Is it fair to the rest of the working men and women of this country to compel them to compete with men who, because of prolonged unemployment, are ready to work at any price?

The individual manufacturer who discharges his men saves their salaries. That is his economy. But for the Nation it is a total loss. For the Nation it is an inexcusable waste. Four million men who earn a minimum of $20,000,000 daily and would produce goods worth double that amount.

If you wish to forget the humanitarian aspect of this problem, at least, as business men and business women, you must attend to this flood stream of waste which unemployment produces on a national scale.

Is there a remedy? That is the practical question. Can I make a constructive suggestion to help solve this problem? I believe I can.

Three bills (S. 4157, S. 4158, S. 4307), which I recently introduced in the United States Senate, offer a plan which promises success. The most significant element of the plan is the creation of a permanent body, which shall quietly and uninterruptedly work away on the problem of unemployment, procure the elimination of conditions productive of unemployment, and advise the Government and the people what steps to take to avoid it. That body will not be a temporary committee of well-meaning citizens but a permanent organization officially charged with the task and the burden of safeguarding us against unemployment. That will be their responsibility and the extent of their success in office will be measured by the extent of their success in eliminating unemployment.

One of the bills declares it to be the policy of this Government so to use its spending power to bring about steadiness of employment. The Government is at all times engaged in vast undertakings, of building construction, of road construction, of river and harbor improvement, and flood control. These projects can be planned in advance so that work upon them can be accelerated in time of depression and retarded during times of prosperity.

The operation of such a plan will not cost the Government any money. On the contrary, it will save money for the Public Treasury because it will take advantage of the lower prices which prevail during periods of depression.

To care for the man whose job has been taken by a machine, as well as for the new industry that wishes to recruit a new labor force, one of the bills provides for a nation-wide system of employment offices, under the cooperative auspices of the State and municipalities and the Federal Government.

The third bill provides for the collection and publication of adequate information of employment. Without proper statistics we shall never be able fully to solve unemployment.

Briefly, then, this plan embraces the following:

(1) The collection of adequate statistics and information.

(2) A force of employment offices out in the field actually making the adjustments and bringing together the idle man and the vacant job.

(3) A central body continually getting information coming in from the field and interpreting it and converting it into governmental policy deliberately dedicated to the elimination of enforced idleness.

No guaranty accompanies this plan. It may prove successful beyond our dreams. Application may demonstrate that it requires change. At any rate, we shall have set up the machinery to make the changes. We shall have some one thinking, planning, and responsible for the results. We shall have left behind us the hopelessness and despair which now characterizes the official attitude toward unemployment.

TAX REDUCTION

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the next amendment passed over will be found on page 205, section 441, tax on sales of produce on exchange, to strike out lines 12 to 14, inclusive.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what became of the amendment in line 7, striking out the words "$1 each year"?

Mr. SMOOT. That went over.

Mr. FLETCHER. It has not been acted on?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it has not been acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] a question? We can not possibly finish the consideration of the revenue bill to-day, although we are making pretty good strides. Can we not take up the conference report on the flood control bill? I understand that the House has adopted it, and it is here before the Senate. I should be very glad if we could get that matter out of the way.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from Mississippi that I am very anxious to get rid of this flood-control conference report. I gave notice last night that I expected to take it up to-day, but the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], in charge of the revenue bill, and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the leader on this side, urged me very strongly to put the matter over at least until to-morrow in the hope of getting along with the revenue bill. Very reluctantly I consented to that course. I would like very much to have the conference report disposed of as soon as possible.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought perhaps the reason actuating the Senator from Utah in his stand was his belief that we could finish with the revenue bill to-day, but we can not conclude the consideration of it to-day, and I wish we could get up the flood-control conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator from Washington think we can complete consideration of the conference report to-day?

Mr. JONES. I do not suppose that it would take anywhere near all the day. Of course, I do not know how long anyone may desire to speak upon it. I understand the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] wants to make some remarks on it—I do not know how long—and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] wants to speak on it. I do not know whether anyone else desires to speak on the conference report. I had hoped that if we got it up probably it would take but an hour or so, even if it took that long.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have no information as to anyone on this side who desires to address the Senate on the flood-control conference report.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought perhaps the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] might want briefly to discuss the conference report. I do not think it would take any amount of time.

Mr. SMOOT. In order to save time, so as to arrive at something definite, I will consent that the conference report shall be taken up now. I give notice now that unless the consideration of the conference report is completed to-day I shall ask to have it laid aside to-morrow. For the present I ask that the revenue bill be laid aside for the sole purpose of taking up the conference report.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before that is done, so there will be no misunderstanding, I desire to say that I do not know that there will be any lengthy debate. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] and I want to talk a while on the report. It is perfectly immaterial, as far as I am concerned, whether it is taken up now or laid over until to-morrow, but I do not want to have any understanding that we will get through with it at any particular time.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no understanding, except that it may be considered for the whole day to-day.

Mr. NORRIS. I should think we would get through to-day, but I can not give any assurance of that kind.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us try to get through to-day.

Mr. FLETCHER. I can not see any reason why we should not get through to-day and dispose of the report.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Has not the conference report the right of way?

Mr. SMOOT. The conference report has the right of way to be presented, but that is all; it may be presented at any time; but if there is any objection whatever, the Senate has to vote as to whether it will take up the conference report or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report has been presented and now lies on the table. The Senator from Utah has asked unanimous consent that the revenue bill be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of the conference report on the flood control bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and lays the conference report before the Senate.

FLOOD CONTROL

The Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3740) for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes, and the report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3740) for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 14: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"No liability of any kind shall attach to or rest upon the United States for any damage from or by floods or flood waters at any place: Provided, however, That if in carrying out the purposes of this act it shall be found that upon any stretch of the banks of the Mississippi River it is impracticable to construct levees, either because such construction is not economically justified or because such construction would unreasonably restrict the flood channel, and lands in such stretch of the river are subjected to overflow and damage which are not now overflowed or damaged by reason of the construction of levees on the opposite banks of the river it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers to institute proceedings on behalf of the United States Government to acquire either the absolute ownership of the lands so subjected to overflow and damage or floodage rights over such lands."

And the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 4. The United States shall provide flowage rights for additional destructive flood waters that will pass by reason of diversions from the main channel of the Mississippi River: Provided, That in all cases where the execution of the flood control plan herein adopted results in benefits to property such benefits shall be taken into consideration by way of reducing the amount of compensation to be paid."

And the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "which, in the opinion of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, are"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

", including levee work on the Mississippi River between Rock Island, Ill., and Cape Girardeau, Mo., and on the outlets and tributaries of the Mississippi River between Rock Island and Head of Passes in so far as such outlets or tributaries are affected by the backwaters of the Mississippi: Provided, That for such work on the Mississippi River between Rock Island, Ill., and Cape Girardeau, Mo., and on such tributaries, the States or levee districts shall provide rights of way without cost to the United States, contribute 33⅓ per cent of the costs of the works, and maintain them after completion: And provided further, That not more than $10,000,000 of the sums authorized in section 1 of this act shall be expended under the provisions of this section.

"In an emergency, funds appropriated under authority of section 1 of this act may be expended for the maintenance of any levee when it is demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War that the levee can not be adequately maintained by the State or levee district."

And the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The sum of $5,000,000 is hereby authorized to be used out of the appropriation herein authorized in section 1 of this act, in addition to amounts authorized in the river and harbor act of January 21, 1927, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers for the preparation of the flood-control projects authorized to be submitted to Congress under this section: Provided further, That the flood surveys herein provided for shall be made simultaneously with the flood-control work on the Mississippi River provided for in this act: And provided further, That the President shall proceed to ascertain through the Secretary of Agriculture and such other agencies as he may deem proper, the extent to and manner in which the floods in the Mississippi Valley may be controlled by proper forestry practice."

And the House agree to the same.

Pursuant to House Concurrent Resolution 34, it is recommended that in the first proviso to section 10 the words "board created in section 1 of this act" be stricken out, and in lieu thereof the words "Mississippi River Commission" be inserted.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—FARM LAND BANK, COLUMBIA, S. C.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege. I am informed that on Saturday last the Committee on Banking and Currency met and took up for consideration the resolution which I introduced asking for an investigation of the land bank at Columbia, S. C. The Columbia (S. C.) Daily Record of May 6 contains an interview with the chairman of that committee, in which it is stated that he said that the vote against the investigation is "almost unanimous." I ask to have that article printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, without taking up the time of the Senate to read it.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BLEASE LOSES BEFORE COMMITTEE FOR PROBE OF LOCAL LAND BANK—VOTE AGAINST INVESTIGATION "ALMOST UNANIMOUS," SAYS CHAIRMAN NORBECK—ECHO BEAUFORT FAILURE—JUNIOR SENATOR MAY AGAIN TAKE MATTER TO FLOOR OF UNITED STATES SENATE

By Lewis Wood, Washington correspondent of the Columbia Record

WASHINGTON, May 5.—It took the Senate Banking and Currency Committee just 40 minutes to-day to decide upon an unfavorable report on Senator BLEASE'S resolution to investigate the joint stock land bank and intermediate credit bank at Columbia.

Mr. BLEASE has been unremitting in his fight for the investigation and has frequently charged that Treasury pressure was preventing it, but the committee decided that it would not support his proposal. It is expected that the Senator will renew his attacks upon the Senate floor. The committee arrived at its decision in an executive meeting.

After the committee meeting Senator NORBECK, the Banking and Currency chairman, alluded to the information presented to him regarding the Columbia bank.

"All of this information was placed before the committee, and it was practically unanimous in feeling that there was not sufficient evidence to justify an investigation such as Senator BLEASE proposed," he said.

The situation with regard to the Columbia bank grew out of the failure of the Bank of Beaufort and the conviction of several persons connected with that institution. According to Senator NORBECK, when the Beaufort bank failed it had received about $700,000 in funds which should have been applied toward redemption of notes signed by truck growers in the vicinity of Beaufort for loans from the intermediate credit bank at Columbia.

Supporters of the proposed investigation have argued that the Beaufort bank was the designated agent of the Columbia bank and that funds paid into the Beaufort institution should be credited toward the notes held by the Columbia bank.

But Senator NORBECK said the committee felt there was no evidence to justify this contention, and that the money had been paid to the Beaufort bank under instructions from the signers of notes themselves, but without any agreement on the part of the Columbia bank that the Beaufort bank should act as its agent to receive the payments.

Mr. BLEASE. In reference to that, at that committee meeting there were 9 members of the committee present, and the Senators voting for the resolution were Messrs. FRAZIER, PINE, BROOKHART, and FLETCHER; the Senators voting against the resolution were SACKETT, NORBECK, PHIPPS, GLASS, and one other Senator, whose name I do not know, making a vote of 5 to 4 to report the resolution unfavorably.

Mr. President, there are 94 Senators in the Senate, and there are 15 members on that committee. There were 9 votes cast. Six members of the committee were absent. There were 5 against the resolution and 4 for the resolution, making a majority of 1 against it. Consequently, according to this interview in the paper, 5 men are controlling the 94 votes in the United States Senate, and here is a unanimous report, according to the information in this newspaper given out by the chairman of that committee and circulated in my home town, to injure me and hoping to defeat me as a delegate to the State Democratic convention of my State.

I want to say without any spirit of egotism that on last Monday, the day after this paper was circulated, the county conventions of South Carolina met to elect their delegates to the State convention, which will be held one week from this day. The county convention where this bank is located elected me a delegate to the State convention. The county convention of Anderson, where the post office is located where this fellow who was brought over from Georgia was made postmaster, also elected me delegate to the State convention. That action shows that the people in the city where this land bank is located are behind me in this fight. It shows that the people of Anderson County, away up in the northern part of the State, 150 miles, possibly, from the city of Columbia, indorse my position in regard to their post office. Yet the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency says that there was an almost unanimous report. Nine members being present, 5 only out of 15, or one-third, in his opinion, I suppose, makes a unanimous report.

In the same newspaper, on the same date, appears an article by Lewis Wood, correspondent for this paper, giving an interview, or what is supposed to be an interview, with Senator NORBECK. It says that Senator NORBECK, chairman of the committee, received an exhaustive letter on the subject from Mr. Meyer. Here is what Mr. Meyer said:

Of course, some responsibility attaches to the management of the Columbia bank for these occurrences, particularly as to its failure more successfully to checkmate the conspirators.

I call for the chairman of the committee to make that report. It was last Saturday that the committee met; it was last Saturday that they voted 4 to 5. I have held this paper in my hand since Monday morning, waiting here for three days to get the unanimous (?) report of the committee. I want to see the letter in which Eugene Meyer is quoted as saying:

Of course, some responsibility attaches to the management of the Columbia bank for these occurrences, particularly as to its failure more successfully to checkmate the conspirators.

Yet this committee, with Meyer's report in their hands and those remarks in the concluding paragraph of his letter before them, says that there is no reason to investigate the land bank at Columbia, S. C. I most respectfully ask the chairman of that committee to make the report that was agreed on by the committee last Saturday by this unanimous (?) vote, as he calls it, of 4 to 5, with 6 members absent. Let us see whether or not the Senate of 94 Members is going to hide this stealing with a vote of five members, only one-third of the committee, stealing which Eugene Meyer himself admits and mentions in his letter, saying that the blame is on the Columbia bank because that bank did not stop the conspirators in their action. If that kind of a situation does not demand an investigation, I can not tell what would. But since then he tries to make his apology. He says the personnel of the bank has been somewhat changed.

Of course, when he went down and found that this rascality was going on, when he found that the farmers of South Carolina had been robbed of thousands of dollars, when he found that the United States Government had lost more than a million dollars, and was standing to lose nearly $2,000,000 more, when he found that out, he changed some of the personnel of the bank. Of course, when he found that out, he tried to hide it, and this resolution was brought before the Senate for the very purpose of showing that condition which he now admits in his report, if this newspaper speaks the truth

I ask again most respectfully that the report be brought in, that he not go around and have it signed by other members of the committee to show that it was more nearly unanimous, because here is the vote, just as the members voted in the committee, FRAZIER, PINE, BROOKHART, FLETCHER for the investigation; SACKETT, NORBECK, PHIPPS, GLASS, and one Senator whose name I have not been able to get, against it.

I ask leave to print as a part of my remarks the article from this newspaper by Lewis Wood and another article headed "Is the Senate afraid?"

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEYER COMMENTS

By Lewis Wood, Washington correspondent for the Columbia Record

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 5.—Eugene Meyer, head of the Federal Farm Loan Bureau, asserts that the officials of the Columbia land bank can not in any way be connected with any criminality arising out of the Beaufort bank matter.

Following the refusal of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee to-day to support Senator BLEASE'S resolution demanding an investigation of the Columbia bank, it was learned that Mr. Meyer had written an exhaustive letter on the subject to Senator NORBECK, chairman of the committee. After reviewing the case in great detail, Mr. Meyer concluded:

"The fact that the special examination made by the Farm Loan Board, and the searching investigation over a period of 18 months by the United States attorney and expert accountants of the Department of Justice, connected no officer of the Federal intermediate credit bank at Columbia with any criminal act, indicates clearly that these officials had no part in the conspiracy.

"On the other hand, the fact that, following a trial of some six weeks' duration, during which every means was afforded to bring out the truth, three defendants were found guilty, as charged, establishes their responsibility for the criminal acts committed.

"Of course, some responsibility attaches to the management of the Columbia bank for these occurrences, particularly as to its failure more successfully to checkmate the conspirators, but since then the personnel of the bank has been strengthened, certain remedial measures have been put in effect, and others will be adopted as time and opportunity permit."

IS THE SENATE AFRAID?

EDITOR OF THE SUNDAY TIMES:

On February 24, 1928, Senator BLEASE, of South Carolina, submitted Senate Resolution 159 to the United States Senate, calling for a complete investigation of the Federal Land Bank and Intermediate Credit Bank of Columbia, S. C.; this because of certain criminal convictions obtained in Federal court wherein some of the testimony is said to have involved officials in connection with those banks. The resolution was referred to the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, of which Senator PETER NORBECK, of South Dakota, is chairman.

On March 13, in response to numerous requests and much testimony, Senator BLEASE submitted Senate Resolution 167, which calls for a complete investigation of the entire Federal farm loan system, including the Farm Loan Board, the 12 Federal land banks, the 12 intermediate credit banks, the fifty-odd joint-stock banks, and any of the 4,700 national farm-loan associations necessary for a complete review of the system. This resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, of which Senator CHARLES S. DENEEN, of Illinois, is chairman. The other members are SIMEON D. FESS, of Ohio; FRANK L. GREENE, of Vermont; THADDEUS H. CARAWAY, of Arkansas; and DAVID I. WALSH, of Massachusetts.

Since those two committee references literally thousands of letters urging these investigations have been pouring through the mails. More than 150 columns of closely printed matter, some of it voicing the very gravest of criticisms and presenting evidence against farm-loan officials, have appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, bringing direct charges of mismanagement, incompetence, dishonesty, and absolute stealing, specific cases being cited and the evidence submitted. Some of these charges involve local officers, some include Federal bank examiners and officers, members of the Farm Loan Board itself, and the charges have been neither vague nor indefinite. They have been made against specific officers, and they have been made by and through the most trustworthy sources. Here are a few of the authorities cited: The New York Times, Farm and Fireside, Farm Journal, Farmers National Magazine, American Thresherman, Pennsylvania Farmer, American Grain Trade, Pacific Homestead, Efficiency Magazine, Good Business Magazine, Breeders Gazette, Farm Leader, Forum, American Farm Bureau Federation, and many others. An entirely impartial though very much interested committee, sent from Canada by farm banking interests for the purpose of studying our farm-loan system with a view to its adoption, reported against it recently, largely on account of its mismanagement.

For about two months Senator BLEASE urged the reporting of his resolutions, either favorably or unfavorably, so that he could take them and his evidence to the floor of the Senate. Possibly some one was afraid to have him do that; he could get no action whatever. Finally about the middle of April, Senator NORBECK, it is stated, announced that Resolution 159 had been referred to the Farm Loan Board for recommendation. To its Sinclairs and Falls had been awarded the right of judgment in this farmers' Teapot Dome. To Arnold himself had been referred the question of his treason. Guiteau had been appointed his own judge and jury in his trial for the murder of Garfield. Judas himself was to decide whether he had betrayed Christ.

There is no doubt about the decision of this Farm Loan Board, for they have been under fire many times before. They will decide themselves immaculate and that they need no investigation. All of their subsidiaries will be declared as sinless as a dead saint reposing in some cathedral vault. Andrew W. Mellon recently announced that he knows of nothing materially wrong with the land banks; no doubt he can be induced to pronounce them, along with the Pennsylvania slush fund, as immaculate and innocent as a donation to a church. There will be only one material difficulty with their reports upon the land banks; that is, to get any credence for them among people who have real personal knowledge of the land-bank system.

Senator NORBECK has been a specially conspicuous word champion of the farmer on the floor of the Senate the past few years. The hardships of the farm have caused him much bitterness and many rhetorical tears. He comes from a farming district; his constituents are practically all farmers. His denunciations of political and financial intrigues that have crippled agriculture have been frequent and eloquent. Few other Members of either House have won sincerer or more general confidence among farmers by fearless defense of their interests on the Senate floor. Right now he is facing an opportunity to do something more than talk; he may confirm or refute by his deeds this rural admiration, and it is entirely out of his hands to avoid the issue. Here is a man who has been wailing for a term of years over the great things that he would do for the farmer if he only could. Now he can; he has that opportunity. Furthermore, he can not avoid declaring himself "for 'em or agin' 'em." As chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee he can not, of course, pass this resolution, but he can, if he pleases, force it before the committee for action of some sort, and that is exactly what Senator BLEASE charged on the floor of the Senate he was not doing; in fact, he has charged that the South Dakota Senator, perhaps at Secretary Mellon's request, has neglected to call meetings of his committee to avoid any action on this bill.

For at least a half-dozen years repeated efforts have been made by friends of the Federal farm-loan system to secure an investigation of its personnel and management. FLETCHER, BORAH, HOWELL, WALSH, and others have tried, only to find the same invincible defense, the same official stone wall, and with the Treasury Department or the Farm Loan Board all the time declaring that nothing was wrong. To sustain these assertions there have been numerous "special investigations," each declared absolutely all right, and when that became untenable, each in turn displaced by a different one prepared by the same bank examiner from the same accounts. Secret bank deposits that have been concealed for years from their rightful owners have been brought out under the compulsion of discovery as a commercial triumph instead of a disgrace. Certified directors' resolutions of 1922 have been produced for the first time as recently as 1927; resolutions signed by officials who in 1924 had signed a denial of the statements therein contained. In the meantime courts have convicted a few of these individuals who have been so strenuously defended; there has been an occasional prison sentence, one or two suicides, a few millions of dollars of the farmers' money acknowledged to have been lost through crookedness and mismanagement; still there is nothing wrong. Mellon says there is nothing—all is as sincere and sacred as that Pennsylvania slush fund or a contribution to a church. Surely, these conglomerate results are in the strictest harmony with the jazzy personnel that has been kept in control of the system; not men who know anything about farm problems or cooperative banking, but lawyers, sailors, office clerks, Wall Street brokers, ex-prison wardens, politicians galore.

Something over $3,000,000,000 of farm property had been pledged up to March 1, 1928, as security for nearly one and a half billion dollars which had been handled or is now being handled by the 12 Federal land banks that are now owned but not managed by farmers. Nearly two-thirds as much has passed through the management of these same officials to the joint-stock banks which are privately owned. The same final management, too, has control of the intermediate credit bank funds. This amount can not be brought nearly to date, because at this writing Secretary Mellon is still withholding the annual Farm Loan Board report, which he is required by law to make, and which he is expected to transmit to Congress in time to govern and direct its legislative activities about the first of the year. If any of this money is being juggled with, the owners have a right to know it. If it is being properly handled, these pure and innocent saints who handle it ought to gladly join with their critics in bringing out the facts. The farmers are not afraid of these facts; if the Farm Loan Board is afraid of them, or if the land banks are, or if the invisible empire guarding the system from investigation is afraid, or if Andrew W. Mellon has any specific reason for not wanting the truth about the system to be known, all these are entirely beside the question. The actual owners of this or of any other stock company have a right to an occasional accounting of their own property, no matter who is afraid to have it rendered.

Shall these Senate committees prevent a half million of men from securing that right by a trick of evasion or of cowardice? Shall a handful of men, just because they are Senators and have been specially trusted over a few things by their fellows, refuse to the rest of the Senate the right to decide a question upon which these few are afraid to vote? There is no question about their right to vote adversely if for any reason they feel like it. For an insignificant minority to throttle the expression of the majority by the cowardly tactics of a committee filibuster tempts one to think of ex-Congressman Reed's statement that "a statesman is only a dead politician," and to feel that we need a few more statesmen. To certain members of these two committees I would specially commend parts of a letter which appears on page 7791 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for May 4, 1928, as follows:

"'LET IT GO OVER!'

"'Let it go over!' These politicians will soon infest the various States with a message of 'what we did for you dear farmers.' The answer to that should be shouted from every seat, 'Let it go over!' * * *.

"The battle cry of the Coolidge administration now is, 'Let it go over!' Along next November millions of American voters will let it go over—to the Democrats, who gave them first a farmer-owned land-bank plan, which was pillaged away from them by dishonest Ohio politicians at the time that Daugherty, Sinclair, Fall, and company were in the saddle.

"Let it go over!"

If Senator NORBECK or any of these committee members are afraid to vote in the interests of the farmers they protest to love so devotedly, when the real test comes let them be manly enough to vote against them and give the farmers a chance to find out whether the United States Senate is afraid. Certainly the more this cowardice—if that is what it is—can be smoked to the surface the sooner will the people rally to the task of supplying men who are not afraid to the Senate and the better it will be for both the Senate and the people.

Respectfully,

XENO W. PUTNAM.

WORLD PEACE

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter printed in the New York Post, signed by Mr. Frederick H. Allen, on the subject of the conversations taking place between Mr. Kellogg and Mr. Briand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUGGESTS WE BLOCK WAR BY BEING "ASSOCIATED POWER" WITH THE LEAGUE COUNCIL

To the EDITOR OF THE EVENING POST:

SIR: The conversations that have been taking place between Mr. Kellogg and M. Briand in an effort to aid the cause of peace, which is of supreme importance not only for us but for the whole world, lead me to make the following observations:

As all the European powers are members of the League of Nations and subject to the provisions of the covenant thereof, it is apparent that whatever arrangements we do make must not contravene the terms of the covenant, which in article 20 thereof sets forth that the members of the league "solemnly undertake that they will not hereafter enter into any negotiations inconsistent with the terms thereof."

In article 11 it is provided "that any war or threat of war * * * is a matter of concern to the whole league * * * and at such a time the secretary general shall, on the request of any member of the league, forthwith summon a meeting of the council."

In article 16 it is provided that if a member of the league resorts to war in disregard of the covenants contained in articles 12, 13, and 15, which provide for arbitration or judicial settlement or inquiry by the council, such member shall be deemed to have committed an act of war against all the other members of the league, who are then to sever all trade and financial relations or intercourse between their nationals and the covenant-breaking State. The council is also to recommend what military measures shall be taken by the other members of the league.

Any uncertainty as to the attitude that our country might take would certainly greatly weaken the efforts of the other powers to keep the peace, just as the uncertainty in regard to England's attitude before the outbreak of the Great War made that war more easily possible, for had Germany known that England would join with Russia and France it is certainly possible to conceive that the war might not have taken place at all.

The treaty that Mr. Kellogg has submitted to the six great powers provides that "they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another." It further provides that the "solution of all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature * * * which may arise among them shall never be sought except by pacific means." But should not the pacific means to be employed be definitely set forth?

Senator BORAH, in the very interesting interview he gave to Mr. Kirby Page some time since, said that "another important result of such a treaty would be to enlist the support of the United States in cooperative action against any nation which is guilty of a flagrant violation of this outlawry agreement." He went on further to say: "Of course, in such a crisis we would consult with the other signatories and take their judgment into account."

Why, then, could we not state definitely that just as we were an associated power in the war, we would become an associated power with the council of the league and would appoint a representative to meet with the council whenever a dispute had become so acute that war was threatened, so that a nation threatening to go to war might know that we were acting at such a time in conjunction with the other nations in an effort to keep the peace, and so that in case a war should break out we would have a hand in the decision to be made as to the nation that had violated the treaty? If we had a representative meeting with the council at once, who would, of course, be in constant communication with the Government at Washington, the necessary economic pressure could be exerted if all were in agreement, and I can not but think that the prospect of an economic boycott would calm a war fever.

We could limit our association with the league solely to a situation where there was danger of war, it being fully understood that we were in no way obligated to go to war in case a war had broken out, Congress being the only power in our Government which can authorize such a declaration. Quick decisions at such a crisis are of the greatest moment, and resistance against a nation threatening to violate the treaty should be so powerful and so certain and the consequences of breaking the peace so likely to be disastrous that any nation, no matter how powerful, would not dare to let loose the dogs of war.

FREDERICK H. ALLEN.

AIRCRAFT CARRIER

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD two articles by the Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Aeronautics, Edward P. Warner.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AIRCRAFT CARRIER KEY TO NEW NAVY—ASSISTANT SECRETARY WARNER CALLS IT "INDISPENSABLE" FOR FIGHTING FLEET—PLANES ITS PROJECTILES—AVIATION HEAD FORECASTS DEVELOPMENTS FROM LEXINGTON AND SARATOGA

By Edward P. Warner, Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Aeronautics

(Copyright, 1928, by the New York Times Co.)

WASHINGTON, March 28.—One evening late in February the captain of a coastwise passenger steamer approaching the eastern end of Long Island Sound beheld an apparition. The grouping of the lights off to the north indicated a ship, and a ship of enormous size, but in what eccentric form! Either it was traveling sideways, which no proper vessel does, or the navigating bridge had been plucked from its normal position and moved 40 feet to one side, its lights out of line with everything else on board.

The captain looked again and his curiosity grew. He gave an order and a blinker light breathlessly flickered the international code in frank and brief inquiry, "What ship is that?"

The reply flashed back, "U. S. aircraft carrier Lexington," and the merchant captain understood.

He was entitled to his bewilderment, for the Lexington and Saratoga and their fellow ships devoted to the carriage of airplanes in the fleets of other nations are among the very oddest craft in appearance that have ever traveled the seas, as well as among the most interesting and most vitally important at the present time. Their superstructure either suppressed entirely or dizzily perched on one edge of the ship to make way for a clear exchange of deck for landing and taking off, they are a living proof that invention is necessity's offspring.

LAST WORD IN SPECIALIZATION

The days when a ship had no function except to carry goods, and possibly fighting men, from one port to another, with little regard to comfort or to arrangements for the loading and discharge of cargo, are far in the past. The universal tendency to specialize for increased efficiency has made itself felt afloat as well as ashore. There are vessels that carry nothing but automobiles and others designed solely for the transportation of crude petroleum. There are ships that are essentially floating hotels and ships that are planned as floating fortresses.

Never before, however, has naval construction displayed more sheer audacity in transplanting of purely terrestrial activities to the high seas than now in building these floating flying fields. The Navy's airports travel under their own power and go where they are wanted.

Bold though the concept is, the airplane-carrying ship is no longer an experiment. With six years of experience behind it, and with more than a dozen examples now in service in the various navies of the world, it has solidly established itself. The full degree of its importance may not yet be realized, nor can the extent to which the carrier may take the place of ships of other types be appraised with certainty until more have been built and even more experience gained in their operation, but it is already plainly apparent that such ships are indispensable for the safety of any fleet that has to approach anywhere near enemy shores in time of war or that may meet enemy vessels carrying airplanes.

The effectiveness of attack on ships by aerial bombing, given reasonably favorable conditions, has been amply demonstrated. Plentifully proved, also, is the conclusion that it takes airplanes to put up successful defense against airplanes. Antiaircraft guns are by no means negligible, but taken by themselves they can not suffice. Airplanes must be at hand both to repel attack and to make the counterstroke, and only by the provision of ships specialized for carrying aircraft can their presence in considerable numbers be assured.

STRIKING POWER AT LONG RANGE

As against all other naval vessels, in direct combat the airplane-carrying ship would have enormous advantage in the combination of speed to keep the enemy at the desired distance and enormously effective range of action to make it possible to strike him crippling blows while he, outside his own range of fire, is powerless to strike back.

The heaviest ship of the line of a generation or two ago, brought to face a modern cruiser, to say nothing of a battleship, would be blown to bits at leisure before her own guns could be brought to bear. Obviously analogous would be the prospective fate of a vessel possessing no airplanes, finding itself at a distance of 30 or 40, or for that matter 100, miles from a fighting craft disposing of bombing planes and capable of flying them from its deck.

Lacking a sufficient margin of speed either to escape or to close within gun range, lacking the ability to make any defensive effort except by fire against the individual planes during the few seconds available while they are dropping their bombs and starting back for their base, the only hope would be in bad marksmanship by the bombers to permit of escaping serious damage until the merciful fall of darkness gave hope of evasion. That offers but a slender reed to lean upon.

"Indispensable" is a strong word, but, indicating the need for airplane carriers in a fleet such as ours, operating normally on the high seas far beyond the effective military radius of action of airplanes based on friendly shores, its use is fully justified.

The value of the ship that uses bomb-dropping airplanes in place of guns, and observation from a score of planes flying far out in all directions to supplant a lookout from the crow's nest or bridge, has not been reduced but rather enhanced by the sensational developments of the past year.

Enthusiasts with but superficial knowledge either of sea power and its strategy or of airplane design and its limitations have sought to graft onto the flights of Lindbergh, Chamberlin, Byrd, and others an interpretation which those who are in the best position to know would probably be first to deny. It did not need new crossings of the Atlantic by air to demonstrate that the airplane alone can be a tremendously, even a decisively, effective factor in protecting a coast from attack.

In the broader problem of protecting trade which may originate thousands of miles from home, not even the ability to fly from the United States to Europe without stop renders the airplane self-sufficient. Trade must still travel on the surface of the sea. Trade routes require constant surveillance. Merchant ships need convoys capable of staying with them throughout their danger zone. Not only distance travel but time as well is involved.

If the problem of naval aviation were merely one of attacking an enemy fleet of which the approximate location is known in advance, airplanes might now be built for effective operation to a radius of a thousand miles or more. When it becomes necessary to scout to and fro over hundreds of thousands of square miles of sea and to furnish constant protection for a convoy of freighters wallowing along at 12 miles an hour, even an airplane that can fly 4,000 miles without stop is likely to be of little direct use unless it can also slow down so as to remain aloft for a week or so.

Failing that yet unattainable accomplishment, the aircraft-carrier deck is essential as a mobile base offering far greater efficiency than the fixed point of departure, on some very remote shoreless hazard, and the assurance of being able to concentrate a force of 40 or 50 airplanes at any point within 150 miles of the ship in but little more than an hour.

SAME FUNCTION AS OTHER NAVAL CRAFT

The carrier has the same ultimate function as the cruiser, the destroyer, or any other type of naval vessel—to scout and to fight.

In so far as it does what can not be done at all by any other means, or provides safeguard against a danger having no other antidote, it is absolutely necessary. In so far as it is able to do more expeditiously and certainly and with greater economy of force and effort what would have to be done in some way in any case, its procurement in quantity as a substitute for vessels of other types is desirable. Seldom are any two instruments wholly interchangeable.

Seldom, on the other hand, are two types of naval vessel mutually exclusive in their employment or incapable of doing a certain part of each other's work. In measuring relative economy, if it befell that the cost of constructing their floating airports runs into high figures, the comparison must be made with the cost of other ships able to cover the same ground and do the same things, so far as other ships could do them at all.

To compare the expenditure on airplane-carrying ships with those of shore-based airplanes would be ridiculous, for the ship is the essential adjunct without which the airplane can not usefully function in general operations upon the oceans. It would be no more absurd to condemn the building of battleships merely because eight 16-inch guns mounted on a capital ship cost more than a like armament installed in a fort on solid ground.

Any believer in aviation, and all those who look forward expectantly to continuing progress in the aeronautical field, and their name is now legion, must extend his approbation over the airplane carrier and hold it worth all it cost if we are to maintain any naval force at all.

STILL AN OBJECT OF STUDY

The time is not yet ripe to say how large a place the carrier may come to deserve in the naval organization. That it can be used for many purposes is obvious, but the relative advantage of doing some of those things with carriers and doing them with other vessels can only be determined by more extensive trial. That no carriers would in any case be wasted, that a considerable number of them could be made continuously useful either in peace or in war, is evident.

The exact scope of their use, and the extent to which it may be wise to seek to increase their numbers a few years from now, can only be determined by constant study in maneuvers simulating battle problems. Problems must be worked out with carriers on both sides in such maneuvers, working with each other and against each other. Aerial combats, attacks on enemy carriers, convoy, long-range scouting and a host of other activities must be not merely imitated but actually practiced up to the limit of possibility. A single carrier is of but little use in such studies. Two, our present total, if one experimental ship of painful slowness be omitted from the count, are better.

Four or five, all of good speed, begin to constitute a fair force with which to work. In studying the tactics of cruiser, destroyer, or submarine, even five units working together in maneuvers would be all too few. Airplane carriers, like all other ships, need trial in groups as well as singly.

It would be a bold prophet who would undertake to say just what ships we shall be laying down for naval purposes 10 years hence, or what characteristics will be most stressed in their design, but it may be confidently predicted that the fleet will then embody much that results from experience with airplane carriers completed during the first 6 years of the 10-year interval, together with those already in existence. That forecast requires only the proviso that commanders in chief during the next decade must have had the opportunity of working with carriers in such number and variety as to make it possible to draw valid conclusions.

Enthusiasts for aviation and those interested primarily in the development of naval science will share with the plain citizen, concerned with the efficient and economical maintenance of a proper national defense at sea, an intense desire that knowledge of naval flying and of the ships upon which the breadth of its usefulness largely depends should be expanded with all possible rapidity.

AIRCRAFT CARRIERS NATION'S BIG NEED—USE OF PLANES IN CONJUNCTION WITH SHIPS DEPENDENT ON OFFSHORE BASES—NAVAL AIR SERVICE GROWING—COOPERATION OF LAND, SEA, AND AIR FORCES NECESSARY FOR DEFENSE, NAVAL OFFICIAL SAYS

By Edward P. Warner, Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Aeronautics

Among the many points of similarity between ourselves and our friends in the British Isles, with whom we share the heritage of English speech, is a common regard for the sea. For the American people and the British alike the oceans have been the channels of flow of a vitally important trade. No less important, they have offered us security against direct attack by land. Freed from such apprehensions as commonly beset continental powers concerning the probable action of great and powerful states, removed only by land frontiers, we, like the British for the last century, escape the necessity of keeping continuously under arms a great force either of professional military men or of conscripts. The sea itself becomes our safeguard if we keep ourselves in position to make it so. The Navy becomes our first line of defense, the action of sea power a national interest. There has long been among the American people an instinctive confidence that our national existence can not be very gravely endangered while the integrity of our naval force is preserved.

The advent of the airplane has made changes. It has modified, though, of course, it has not entirely destroyed, the military insularity of Great Britain, for practically the whole industrial area of that country now lies open to direct attack by air from the territory of other great powers. For us it has had a different effect. The range of flight of airplanes has not yet attained such figures that an air attack in force upon the United States from overseas would be feasible. For us it is not the airplane standing alone and taken by itself that is of greatest significance, but the airplane correlated with military and especially with naval instruments already existing. The Navy has long been accepted as the first line of defense of the continental United States, of our overseas possessions, and of our commercial interests abroad. In that it is likely to be earliest brought into use in naval engagements the airplane to-day occupies the van of naval force. As the first line of the Nation's first line the airplane carries a mighty responsibility.

AIR SERVICE A PART OF NAVY

It is hardly possible to say that aircraft support any single part of the burden alone, great as is their share, for the airplane has not been superposed on the naval organization. It has been woven into it. It is not engaged in doing things that were not done at all before and that could be stopped without affecting the remainder of naval activity. The service of the airplane at sea is to make it possible to do more efficiently work that was already being carried on after some fashion. The airplane and the surface ship are not mutually destructive rivals. They work in conjunction for mutual support, one in fact often being a part of the permanent equipment of the other. The commonly entertained picture of an airplane with a bomb on board going out to drop the bomb on a ship and to sink the ship is too simple by more than half. It has always been an axiom of the national defense when amphibious operations were in prospect that the Army and Navy should be used together, so that a desired end might be attained with a minimum of hazard and a minimum of sacrifice of blood and treasure, and it makes no difference which of the two services working together with a common aim may actually deliver the final or the most spectacular strike.

Similarly with the airplane. It matters not whether the final result is accomplished by shell, bomb, or torpedo, or whether the missile is launched from upon the surface or above it or below, and the airplane has done its work as well if it contributes to the chance of a successful attack by battleship, destroyer, or submarine, as if it plays a lone hand with the same successful result. Often it is possible to do the first when there is no chance for the second, and it follows that there are as many different modes of employment of aircraft as there are types of naval operations. It is even less possible to get along with one kind of airplane than with one kind of ship. They must vary in size, in speed, in carrying capacity, and even in the most general arrangement of landing gear, for the machine intended to operate on aircraft carriers, those to be used on battleships and cruisers, and those which are expected to rise normally from the surface of the water must be of fundamentally different design.

EQUIPMENT FOR WAR

The employments of the Navy in peace are varied, but taken by themselves they make explicit demand upon but a relatively small part of the naval organization. Navies, like armies, exist primarily for war, and not merely for police duty in the more backward areas of the earth and those where life and property are unsafe, but in conflict with major maritime powers.

In such a war the fleet and the naval vessels and aircraft assigned to various detached duties have three clear responsibilities. It is for them, if their strength permits, to defend American commerce, including the transport of troops and their supplies; to deny the seas to enemy trade; and to protect American territory from attack. It may also become necessary at times to participate directly in assault on hostile shores or to support landing operations by troops, but that is a special case somewhat infrequently arising.

It is toward the naval battle, then, that naval aviation must first look. The use of aircraft in conjunction with ships engaged in battle on the high seas is absolutely dependent on provision for basing them on board of surface vessels. We have actually in commission at the present time one aircraft carrier, the Langley, slow and experimental. Excellent results have been obtained with the ship and much has been learned, but she does not constitute an effective unit to be relied upon in emergency. Two more carriers, the Saratoga and Lexington, will go in full commission within a few weeks, but we shall still be limited to two points within the whole area of all the seas upon which our fleet might operate to which our planes can return and reprovision and prepare for fresh flight. Many of the other vessels of war carry airplanes and have provision for catapulting them into the air, but can only pick them up again by stopping to hoist them out of the water after they have made landing alongside the ship. For steady use with the fleet under conditions of stress the carrier is the prime reliance, and the concentration of all our existing tonnage in two very large units occasions a serious shortage of flying decks. There is real need for provision of further ships of that type if the fleet is to be rounded out and if airplanes are to be able to do their proper part of its work. The President in his message to Congress during the past week directed attention to that need.

Given a sufficiency of mobile bases, it may be anticipated that in scouting for an enemy fleet, for isolated surface vessels or submarines, or for commercial craft the airplanes will take a leading part. A carrier equipped with only 40 planes can while traveling at a moderate speed in order to economize its own fuel expenditure minutely cover an area 150 miles or more in width and still have a number of machines held in reserve on the ship for emergencies.

The carrier can also, by sending scouting airplanes straight ahead on its own course during the afternoon, decrease the probability that the fleet to which the ship is attached will be surprised by an enemy attack during the hours of darkness.

The airplane justifies its claim to be considered as the Navy's first line of action, in that it would be likely to be through the medium of air force that contact would first be made between vessels of the opposing fleet and information first furnished. It establishes its position again in the probability that airplanes would be first to take actual offensive action. As a naval weapon the airplane has a range exceeding that of any gun yet imagined, save the legendary one which took Jules Verne's readers on a trip to the moon. The range of the naval gun is 15 or 20 miles. That of the airplane is limited only by fuel capacity, and accuracy does not decrease with increasing distance from the point of departure to the target. Were it possible to mount on a naval vessel such a supergun as that which fired on Paris in 1918, and to increase range to 60 or 80 thousand yards, there could be little expectation of making a hit on a ship, but the bombing airplane can work at two or three times that distance, starting from a floating base which is in complete security unless the enemy, too, employs aircraft, and can be directed by its pilot's intelligence to within a few thousand or perhaps even a few hundred feet of the object of its attack.

In the days of John Paul Jones, of Decatur and Hull and Nelson, fleet actions were fought at a few hundreds yards' range, and might even culminate in contact of the ships and boarding expeditions crossing from one to the other. The improvement of armaments and the increasing deadliness of fire have been such that it would have been most unusual for capital ships of the era of 1915 to approach each other within ten or twelve thousand yards during an action.

It might easily happen that a future naval engagement, or many of them, would be decided and one fleet or the other sent down to total defeat without the main bodies ever having come within 40 miles of each other. There is no suggestion that anything of that sort would be typical, but it might happen, and the possibility would in itself indicate the indispensability of aircraft, for it is too obvious to require discussion that if a battle is begun and finished at a range at which one of the two contending fleets is unable to use its weapons, that fleet is not going to emerge victorious.

In recapitulation, if naval battle is joined the degree of success gained, at least in the first stages of that battle, is likely to be influenced very largely by the relative strength in aircraft of the opposing forces. That, in turn, is dependent on the number and nature of aircraft-carrying ships possessed. From this time on the aircraft carrier is a vital element in naval power, and it is unusual among naval vessels in that it combines extreme speed and mobility for scouting purposes, and relatively small displacement for economical construction and operation, with the ability to strike effective blows against even the heaviest and best protected capital ships without waiting for cover of darkness or fog, and without exposing itself to a virtual certainty of destruction.

To return to the fundamentals. They were enumerated as three. The prime objects of navies were declared to be the support of friendly commerce, the extirpation of commercial activity under the enemy flag or friendly to the enemy, so far as that is compatible with international law on the freedom of trade at sea, and the protection of friendly soil.

In protecting friendly commerce the airplane service is a most effective instrument of convoy, especially against submarine attack. Successful action by submarines against merchant ships well convoyed by airplanes was virtually unknown during the late war. Attacks on a convoy by a substantial force on the surface, of course, would be met by airplanes and surface ships in conjunction. Most important, however, is that the airplane, together with the submarine, makes a close blockade virtually impossible. To station ships within 200 miles, or thereabouts, of an enemy coast and keep them there on blockade duty is to invite constant harrying attacks both by submarine torpedo and by bombing of all kinds destructive to upper works and to the installation of accessories, and extremely damaging to the morale of the crew, if not actually fatal to the ship.

WIDENED SURVEILLANCE

In attacks on enemy commerce airplanes are most useful for reconnaissance, to find and identify ships for search or seizure. Treaties prohibitive of the destruction of merchant vessels, without due provision for the safety of the crew, would make it impossible without open violation of those humanitarian agreements to attack merchant craft with bombs, but the airplane can enormously increase the area kept under observation by a single ship, and the aircraft carrier accordingly becomes a most useful instrument for commerce raiding or surveillance.

Most effective of all, however, is the airplane in protecting our own coast and overseas possessions. The coast defense of the continental United States and also of the islands and other areas flying the American flag has always been built up of successive layers. The first line of coast defense has always been the fleet, which went forth from bases on shore to hold the sea for varying periods, for as long as American vessels held the seas secure so that it was unsafe for enemy ships to slip past, singly or as a group, so long would the coast behind the fleet be immune from attack. The next recourse behind the fleet in olden days was the coastal fort, with its artillery, which protected important harbors and bases in which ships might take refuge for refitting and repair.

Recent developments have thrown in an intermediate stage. If the fleet is evaded, or if it is occupied elsewhere, or even if it should by mischance be insufficiently strong to contend directly with the enemy force for the time being, attacks on the coast should be detected in advance of their delivery by the scouting of patrol planes or large flying boats and airships. Attacks may be delivered by sea or by air, but if they come by air, except for the possibility of a sporadic raid for moral effect by a single machine flying an enormous distance over water and carrying a trivial military load, they must take their departure from a floating base to strike anywhere along our coast or at Hawaii. Even in the Canal Zone the same general conclusion holds as a strong possibility, although not with the absolute rigor that it does in Hawaii where there is no land available as a point of departure, outside the Hawaiian group, for well over a thousand miles. The problem of patrolling is therefore that of scouting for enemy ships, and it is handled in essentially the same way as it would be if the scouting airplane were based on an aircraft carrier instead of ashore, except that the distances covered are likely to be longer, and the importance of navigation is therefore greater. Patrol aviation is of the very first significance to the coast defense, and especially to the defense of the Panama Canal, and it deserves the increased attention that it is now receiving. Vigorous steps are being taken to secure metal flying boats of the most modern design to replace the antiquated wooden craft upon which the operations in our mid-Pacific territory and the Canal Zone have so far had to depend.

METHODS OF ATTACK

If enemy activity were detected from the air, an attempt would be made to repulse it from the air. In the case of submarines or light surface craft, not well equipped with antiaircraft guns and not having airplanes of their own, the patrol machine itself should be prepared to bomb on the spot immediately after detection. If a more specialized attack were needed, as it would be in contending with battle cruisers or other heavy forces, or with any considerable number of ships, it would be delivered by any naval vessels located in the neighborhood, and especially by submarines and bombing aircraft in close conjunction and cooperation. The provision of aircraft and submarines in such areas as Hawaii and the Canal Zone, as well as in strategic proximity to points of our continental coast line critical in a particular campaign, ought to be such that the chances of turning back any enemy thrust, either in an attack in force or a light raid, would be bright. If the effort and repulse should, however, fail, there would still remain the Coast Artillery, the final resort prior to the arrival of landing forces at the shore line.

The danger of exclusive dependence on coastal fortifications, or on bombing aircraft operated to comparatively short distances offshore, would be that any raid carried out from the sea in war, especially against the Panama Canal, would be likely to include the use of aircraft carriers, which would launch their planes when they themselves were still far from the coast. To attack the carriers directly would then not suffice, and to find airplanes and bring them down when they have once left their base and are actually on their way to their objective has repeatedly been shown by theory and in maneuver experience since the war, to say nothing of the actual test of 1916–1918, to be a matter of extreme difficulty.

As it is easier to sink an armed vessel and so put all guns out of action at once than it is to pick off individually a like number of guns independently mounted on permanent foundations ashore, so it is far better in the planning of a defensive organization to prepare to contend with aircraft carriers when they are far enough offshore to have all their planes still aboard, and thus to seek to get rid of all the planes at one stroke, rather than to wait for them to get into the air and then try to hunt them down separately. The problem of defending the territorial possessions of the United States against attack from the sea is largely a problem of coordinated effort by aircraft and surface and subsurface vessels at the greatest practicable distance offshore, and as soon after the first notice of impending enemy action is received as the necessary forces can possibly be mobilized.

The functions of naval aircraft are divided in general under five headings, patrols, bombing—including torpedo carrying—observation, fighting, and training, but in each of these general titles there is a diversity of employment. No greater mistake could be made than to interpret the naval aviation of 1927 in terms of recollections of 1918, and to think of it as engaged exclusively in cruising the coast line looking for submarines, or as employing exclusively flying boats, or nothing but seaplanes, or nothing but very large and slow machines. All naval airplanes are adapted to use over the water, as all naval aviators are especially trained to fly there, but that is a very slight limitation on the variety of their type. They include landplanes, seaplanes, and large machines and small ones, and the fastest airplanes that are to be had and others comparatively slow. Quietly and without seeking or getting great public acclaim, the air arm of the Navy has built for itself a new and a sound place in the national defense organization within the last seven years. Within the last three years $69,000,000 has been expended and 880 airplanes have been purchased. Its importance is constantly growing, the magnitude of the organization is expanding under provision made by Congress and in general accord with the recommendations and desires of the Navy Department, and the scope of the work is broadening in proportion.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3598) authorizing Dupo Bridge Co., a Missouri corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a combined highway and railroad bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Carondelet, Mo., which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Dupo Bridge Co., a Missouri corporation, its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Carondelet, Mo., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. The Dupo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, is authorized to construct, maintain, and operate such bridge and the necessary approaches thereto as a railroad bridge for the passage of railway trains or street cars, or both, or as a highway bridge for the passage of pedestrians, animals, and vehicles, adapted to travel on public highways, or as a combined railroad and highway bridge for all such purposes; and there is hereby conferred upon the said Dupo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, if the same is constructed as a highway bridge only, either the State of Missouri or the State of Illinois, any public agency or political subdivision of either of such States, within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation, in accordance with the laws of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of 10 years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value, (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property, (3) actual financing and promotion cost, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property, and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 4. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the States or public agencies or political subdivisions thereof, or by either of them, under the provisions of section 3 of this act, and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 10 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 5. If such bridge is constructed as a combined railroad bridge for the passage of railway trains or street cars, and a highway bridge for the passage of pedestrians, animals, and vehicles, then the right of purchase and condemnation conferred by this act shall apply to a right of way thereover for the passage without cost of persons, animals, and vehicles adapted to travel on public highways; and if the right of purchase or condemnation shall be exercised as to such right of way over the bridge, then the measure of damages or compensation to be allowed or paid for such right of way shall be a sum equal to the difference between the actual fair cash value of such bridge determined in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of this act and what its actual fair cash value so determined would have been if such bridge had been constructed as a railroad bridge only. If the right of purchase or condemnation conferred by this act shall be exercised as to the right of way over such bridge, then that part of the bridge which shall be purchased or condemned and shall be thereafter actually used for the passage of pedestrians, animals, or vehicles, shall be maintained, operated, and kept in repair by the purchaser thereof.

SEC. 6. The Dupo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge, file with the Secretary of War and with the highway departments of the States of Missouri and Illinois a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and at the request of the highway department of either of such States shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge. For the purpose of such investigation the said Dupo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, shall make available all of its records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 3 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The Dupo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized and empowered to fix and charge just and reasonable tolls for the passage of such bridge of pedestrians, animals, and vehicles adapted to travel on public highways, and the rates so fixed shall be the legal rates until the Secretary of War shall prescribe other rates of toll as provided in the act of March 23, 1906; and if said bridge is constructed as a railroad bridge, or a joint railroad and highway bridge, as provided in this act, the said Dupo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix by contract with any person or corporation desiring the use of the same for the passage of railway trains, or street cars, or for placing water or gas pipe lines or telephone or telegraph or electric light or power lines, or for any other such purposes, the terms, conditions, and rates of toll for such use; but in the absence of such contract, the terms, conditions, and rates of toll for such use shall be determined by the Secretary of War as provided in said act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 8. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the Dupo Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 9. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act authorizing Dupo Bridge Co., a Missouri corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a combined highway and railroad bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Carondelet, Mo."

FLOOD CONTROL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3740) for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, there has been a great deal of interest taken in the Mississippi flood-control situation, and it is a mighty important question. It is one in which the people of the lower Mississippi Valley are vitally interested. It is one in which the people throughout the Nation are interested, because it affects such a large portion of our country, and because the waters that do the damage there come from some 38 States through tributaries to the Mississippi.

For something like 40 years there has been a commission which has had charge of flood control in the Mississippi Valley. A majority of that commission have been Army engineers all these years, and the chairman of that Mississippi River Commission is an Army engineer. These Army engineers, through all these past years, have said that the levees were sufficient to take care of the floods of the Mississippi River, and they have kept building the levees higher in places, and building them up where they wash out, and in spite of complaints that have been made and damage that has been done by floods in previous years they have maintained, until the flood of a year ago, that the levees were high enough to protect the valley there, and that nothing else was needed. Since the flood of a year ago they have admitted, reluctantly apparently, that they have been mistaken, and that there is need of something more than levees.

The flood control bill as passed by the Senate provided for a commission consisting of the Secretary of War, the Chief of Engineers, the president of the Mississippi River Commission, and two civilian engineers. The House amended the bill by striking out the Secretary of War and changing the two civilian engineers to a civilian engineer, which would leave the control of this board, whose duty it will be to investigate and report on the methods of taking care of the flood situation, absolutely in the Army engineers.

The Army engineers have made a dismal failure of the flood-control situation in the lower Mississippi Valley for the last 40 years, and yet the committee of the Senate that held hearings on this measure, and also the committee of the House, and the Senate itself and House itself, and the committee of conference, have agreed to leave this whole situation up to the Army engineers, in face of the fact that they have made a failure of handling the situation during all these past years.

Some days ago I spoke briefly here on the floor in regard to a letter written by Major General Jadwin, Chief of Army Engineers, and his criticism of the so-called Riker spillway plan after he had visited the model that is in the subway of the Senate Office Building. I want to comment a little further upon some of the statements made by General Jadwin. Among other things, he stated in substance that—

> Flood ways in the St. Francis Valley are not essential for flood relief of the main river above the mouth of the Arkansas.

On this map that has been prepared the blue lines represent routes that were suggested by the Mississippi River Commission, four different routes through the St. Francis Valley, spillways to take care of the flood situation, although General Jadwin now says that they are not needed.

The Mississippi River Commission did consider them at one time and said:

> Route 1. Its chief disadvantage is that it passes through the most highly developed portions of the St. Francis Basin.
> Route 2. This route was abandoned after preliminary estimate of cost, which was $1,000,000,000.
>
> Route 3. This route was selected for more detailed investigation.
>
> Route 4. Its chief advantage is a relatively short length.

On page 89 of the Mississippi River Commission's report the further statement is made:

> Diversions through the St. Francis Basin are deemed worthy of further study.

Yet the Chief of Engineers stated in his letter to the Senate of April 28 that in his opinion flood ways in the St. Francis Valley are not essential to flood relief.

General Jadwin further said:

> The lands in the St. Francis and Yazoo Valleys have not been subjected to overflow frequently in recent years, and flood ways are not essential for relief of the river.

The flood of 1927, a year ago, was rather recent, and it did overflow those valleys and did a great deal of damage. Yet General Jadwin says they have not been flooded frequently in recent years and seems to draw the conclusion that it is not necessary to have any spillway to take care of the situation through the Yazoo and St. Francis Valleys, because the floods come only infrequently. But the damage that was done there last year, I am sure, proved to the people living in those valleys that they need some sort of a system to take care of the situation and to take care of the infrequent floods General Jadwin mentions.

Furthermore, on General Jadwin's own map there is shown in dark the portions that were flooded in the 1927 flood. His own map shows that there was a great deal of land flooded and evidently a great deal of damage done there a year ago.

General Jadwin further stated that "the Riker-Mississippi spillway, 3 miles wide, will have insufficient flow below Red River junction to relieve the Mississippi River at New Orleans." The Mississippi junction with the Red River comes in at the point I indicate on the map. The proposed spillway will go directly straight down to the Gulf, a distance of 90 miles. It is proposed to be 3 miles wide, with a levee on each side 50 feet high.

General Jadwin said that the slope from the junction of the Red River with the Mississippi to the Gulf is not sufficient to take the water out of the Mississippi River, yet the water now courses down the Mississippi in a crooked channel a distance of 300 miles, and the slope or fall is exactly the same from the mouth of the Red River by the way of the Mississippi, which is 300 miles to the Gulf, as it is from the mouth of the Red River by the way of the proposed spillway, 90 miles to the Gulf. In other words, General Jadwin says the water will not run down a straight course 3 miles wide and 90 miles long as fast as it will down a crooked course 300 miles long and about a mile wide. Yet an engineer who will make a statement of that kind is proposed to be put at the head of the commission that will survey the flood situation in the Mississippi Valley.

The spillway would have three times as much fall as the river in every mile of its length, and at the same velocity as the river would discharge more than twice as much water, while, if its velocity was safely checked by proposed dams that will be put in there, the discharge would be more than four times that of the Jadwin predicted possible flood.

General Jadwin further said:

> The proposed levees along the Riker spillway are, in my opinion, too high for safety.

The Riker flood way or proposed spillway, 3 miles wide, runs down the lowest part of the valley from Cairo to the Gulf. The proposal is for a width of 3 miles and a levee on each side 50 feet high, built from earth taken on each side through the valley, forming a drainage ditch of the same depth and the same width as the levees will be. With a width of spillway of 3 miles and a 50-foot height of the levees we have merely a proposed plan. If the engineers shall investigate and say they do not need a 50-foot levee, all well and good; it may be 30 feet or whatever they may decide upon. If they decide the spillway is not wide enough and that it should be wider, it could be made 4 or 5 miles wide. The suggested width of 3 miles, Mr. Riker thinks, will be sufficient.

According to the amount of water that went down the valley last spring in flood time, it is estimated that in the proposed spillway 3 miles in width the water would not be over 20 feet deep. That would leave a safety margin of 30 feet above the water line to the top of the levee. In the opinion of Mr. Riker the levees should be at least 50 feet high, 300 feet wide at the base, and about 130 feet wide at the top. That will give sufficient weight with the width to hold the earth compact in the levees, so that no water will seep through it, and so that if any little cut is made in it by a cloudburst it will still be sufficient to carry the water.

Under the proposal of General Jadwin, in the spillways he has suggested at certain places, the water would be practically up to the top of the levees along the spillways, while in the proposed Riker plan it would not be within 30 feet of the top of the levees in ordinary floods, although if a greater flood came than we had last year, and it may be possible that we will have twice as great a flood, the spillway, it is believed, would handle even twice as large a flood as the one we had last year, and perhaps even more than that.

The Jadwin levees can not be made high because of insecure foundations on the river bank, lack of available material, river erosion, sand bars, and so forth; but not one of these objections is likely to be made to the proposition of the Riker levees because of their being so much higher, wider, and larger and made of soil along a practically level valley. No sand bars are likely to form in a straight spillway, for in order to form sand bars there must be an obstruction, such as a bend in the stream, which will cause silt to deposit and thus form the sand bar. But in going straight down the spillway there would be no sand bars likely to form. If silt should be deposited it could be removed by the use of dredges.

Members of the committee will recall that General Jadwin made a statement when Mr. Riker appeared before the Committee on Commerce with reference to the bill; that he objected to the proposed spillway because, he said, they had found that the water in rivers did not generally tend to take a straight course. A spillway is not a river. It is a spillway to take care of flood waters or excess waters. It is not a river. Of course, any child knows that the reason why the river runs in a crooked course instead of a straight course is because of obstructions. A level, straight spillway will take the water, of course, a great deal more rapidly than would the crooked course of the river. In order to prevent a too swift current it is proposed to put dams at certain places, some 12 or 13 of them throughout the spillway, to regulate the water with gates, to allow the amount of water to go down that is wanted, or to hold the water in the spillway, 3 miles wide, as a reservoir for the flood water, to be let out afterwards in case of low water in the river.

General Jadwin further said that the dredge proposed by Mr. Riker for use in building the levees is of a design that has not been proved. I want to read just a sentence or two from the report of the Secretary of War, volume 2, part 2, 1888. There was a contract let to fill in along the Potomac River what is now known as the Speedway down at Hains Point. The Army engineers estimated the cost of that work. A company took the contract to do the work. Mr. Riker designed, patented, and built the dredge that filled in the Speedway along the Potomac flats. The Army engineers at that time seemed to think it was impossible that the work could be done for anything like it was estimated the cost would be.

Mr. Riker requested an extension of time of 48 hours in order to get the machinery in better shape to commence the work. The Army engineer said, "We will not give you 48 seconds. You must start to work on schedule time." So the work was started on schedule time, the flat was filled in at practically half the cost that was estimated by the Army engineers, saving the Government on the contract a million dollars. I am told that is the only case in the history of the United States where a saving of that kind was made.

In the above-mentioned report Colonel Hains, who was afterwards Chief of Engineers, made this statement, speaking of the dredge which the Chief of Engineers now says is unproved:

> The suction and discharge pipes were each 30 inches in diameter in the apparatus used on the flats, and one stone weighing 1,300 pounds was pumped through them and forced out on the flats. At another time an old iron safe 25 by 16 by 14 inches was pumped out. * * * Under favorable circumstances the pumps discharged about 1,500 cubic yards per hour.

That is what Colonel Hains said about this dredge which General Jadwin says is unproved. Of course, Mr. Riker says that on a project of this kind, if it were undertaken, the dredge should be larger than the one used on the Potomac Flats; that while that was a pipe 36 inches in diameter, this work would probably need a pipe 60 inches or perhaps 6 feet in diameter. But that is only a matter of engineering. Yet the present Chief of Army Engineers says this dredge is unproved, even though by the use of it they reduced the contract price on the filling of the Potomac Flats by 50 per cent, saving the Government a million dollars on the contract.

During short periods in the maximum output of the dredge when they were filling in the Potomac Flats the output exceeded 90,000 cubic yards of solid material in 24 hours, many times greater, I am told, than the output to that elevation of any other dredging device ever yet constructed. They moved much of that dirt 30 feet above the water line. Of course, it may take larger pipes and a larger dredge to do this work, but it will be on the same principle as the dredge used on the Potomac Flats.

The work on the Potomac Flats was completed for 10½ cents per cubic yard. The estimated cost of dredging 2,000,000,000 yards on the Riker-Mississippi spillway is 30 cents per cubic yard. They used the estimate Mr. Riker made in his total of $785,000,000 for the total project, which would include the right of way for the spillway, the levees, the drainage ditches, and the dams.

Mr. President, I have reason to believe that from an engineering standpoint the other statements of General Jadwin in his letter of criticism of this plan are as childish from an engineering standpoint as are the ones I have mentioned when considered from the standpoint of a layman.

The proposed spillway would come down through the lower part of the valley from Cairo, the junction of the Ohio and the Mississippi. The ditch or drainage canal, which would be made in the excavation to build the levees, would drain the whole valley. In many places where it is lowland now and in some places swamp, it would make good agricultural land of it. There may be some places where the water will have to be pumped, but in most places it will flow into the river because the water of the river will be lowered in flood times by more than 30 feet, by use of proposed spillway. If it has to be pumped, of course, there can be plenty of power generated there that can be used for that purpose.

With the plan as shown are included storage dams on the larger tributaries of the Mississippi River. These storage dams, of course, could be used to generate power, if it were desired to use them for that purpose. If a spillway of this kind is put in, regulating the flow of the water in the Mississippi River and keeping it at a normal flow of, say 30 feet above low-water mark, it would make it possible to put in dams along the Mississippi River, dams of sufficient height, because there would be a comparatively uniform flow of the river, which would generate power enough to supply the whole Mississippi Valley and the power generated on the tributaries would furnish power for the valleys of the tributaries as well, if that feature of the project is gone into. However, what we are interested in now is taking care of the flood situation.

In my opinion, it is a grave mistake to reduce this commission as it has been done by the House and the conferees. I read into the RECORD a few days ago the resolution which was adopted by the American Society of Civil Engineers, wherein they recommended that a commission of nine disinterested engineers be appointed to study the situation and report to Congress. It seems to me that the suggestion of the American Society of Civil Engineers is worth considering and worth following. Their suggestion is that a board of nine disinterested engineers be appointed to study the situation.

To be frank about it, Mr. President, the present Chief of Army Engineers is apparently prejudiced in favor of his own plan, known as the Jadwin plan, and apparently can see nothing good in anything else.

You know, we sometimes meet some old-fashioned attorneys who will hunt through the records and go back a couple of hundreds years to find some case somewhere as a precedent upon which to base their opinion; and that sometimes, it seems, applies to engineers. The Army engineers apparently are very much interested in precedents, following along the precedents of previous Army engineers. It seems as if the present chief is a man of that type, and is looking for precedents from engineers who have held in the past the same position that he now holds.

The yellow portion on the map along the river is what would be flooded, according to General Jadwin's flood-control plan. It would involve some 9,000 square miles when that is flooded, doing a great deal of damage, undoubtedly. In some places there are levees to be built. In other places it goes back to the hills at the edge of the valleys; but it would flood a great territory here, and it is said by some who claim to know something about it that it would probably flood a lot more than that. On the other hand, the Riker spillway, 3 miles wide, would flood only about 2,000 square miles, and would be a permanent proposition, used to take care of the excess flood waters when we have great floods. At other times it would be dry, and could be used for other purposes, I suppose, if desired—at least for pasture land.

The levees along that spillway would make automobile highways in each direction. There would be room for railroad lines on each of the proposed levees. They are to be 300 feet wide at the base, about 50 feet high, and 130 feet wide at the top. That is the proposal, although that can be changed to any height or any width that is needed; and, according to the estimates, the whole work can be done for $785,000,000.

It seems to me that this question is of enough importance that it should be investigated by disinterested engineers. Speaking for myself, at least—and I think I voice the sentiment of a great number of others here in the Senate—I believe that the Senate should insist that the provision as contained in the bill when passed by the Senate should be insisted upon, including in this board the Secretary of War, the Chief of Engineers, the President of the Mississippi River Commission, and two civilian engineers. That would be a great deal better than it is at the present time, although I am inclined to think that still more civilian engineers should be included on the board and given a chance to investigate and report.

It is my intention, if this bill is passed and signed by the President, at some future date to offer an amendment to this law, as it would be then, providing for the repeal of that particular paragraph and including the proposition that the American Society of Civil Engineers adopted some time ago, providing for a disinterested group of engineers, nine in number.

I do not know that I have anything further to say at this time. If there are any questions that anyone wants to ask, I shall be glad to answer them if I can.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit a question, I should like to ask him whether this proposition of Mr. Riker was submitted to the committee—either the committee of the House or the committee of the Senate—and whether it was fully explained to either of those committees, and, if so, what action was taken by the committees with respect to the plan?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the plan was submitted to both the committee of the Senate and the committee of the House—the Flood Control Committee of the House and the Committee on Commerce of the Senate—and explained to some extent, and some of the members seemed to be quite interested. So far as I know, however, no action was taken, largely, I think, because both committees had plans of their own, or at least had something of the kind worked out; and the Chief of Army Engineers was opposed to this plan of Mr. Riker's and ridiculed it; and for that reason—or, at least, that is the only reason I know—it was not given more attention.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator whether other engineers aside from Mr. Riker appeared before the committee and supported his plan?

Mr. FRAZIER. I know of no other engineers who appeared before the committee on the plan. A number of other prominent civilian engineers, and some Army engineers—that is, engineers who have been in the Army service—have studied the working model over in the basement of the Senate Office Building, and a number of them have expressed themselves very favorably to this plan.

Mr. KING. As I understand the Senator, Mr. Riker's plan would cost approximately three-fourths of a billion dollars?

Mr. FRAZIER. Approximately; yes.

Mr. KING. My understanding is that the plan that is contemplated in the bill now before us will cost about the same amount.

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes. It is undetermined, I think, how much this plan will cost. It is estimated all the way from half a billion up to a billion dollars, as I have understood.

Mr. KING. It seems to me, from all I can learn, that the bill now before us is practically the same as it was when first reported by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], and that all of this talk by the President and others about the cost being too great, and the President having secured a compromise which will save the country a vast amount of money, is wholly without foundation. Is that the way the Senator understands it? That is to say, we are confronted now with the same bill, with a few little frills added to it, that was presented to us by the Senator from Washington a few weeks ago—a bill that costs about the same now, that has the same implications, the same obligations, which will be probably three-quarters of a billion dollars, and perhaps a billion dollars, and covering only that part of the Mississippi River below Cairo?

Mr. FRAZIER. That is practically the way I understand it.

Mr. KING. Then Mr. Riker's plan is just as cheap as the other, besides having the advantages which the Senator attributes to it?

Mr. FRAZIER. I think so; yes; and it seems to me it would be a permanent solution of the situation.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that constructing the spillway on straight lines, with abrupt turns here and there, angles in the channel, would be a feasible plan?

Mr. FRAZIER. I think it would. There will be a series of dams there to control the water, with gates that can be opened or closed, either to retard the flow or to increase the flow.

Mr. KING. Then this plan contemplates that the river will still exist, but the spillway will run alongside it?

Mr. FRAZIER. Just the spillway for the excess flood waters. In normal times no water will go into it at all. At the head of the spillway, up near Cairo, and where it crosses the Mississippi River at two other places, the lip of the spillway will be level with what is called the normal flow of the water, which is only about 30 feet above low-water mark; and when the river rises above that, the water naturally will go out of the spillway. When it goes below it, the spillway will run dry.

Mr. President, judging from letters that have come to my office from various parts of the country, and especially from the section of the lower valley that has been flooded, I am satisfied in my own mind that the people who are affected in those States are not going to be satisfied with this bill as it is about to be passed. They are not going to be satisfied to leave this whole situation up to the Army engineers, who for the past 50 years have made a failure of taking care of those flood waters, who have let that valley be flooded time after time, and last year damage was done running into millions and millions of property and an untold amount of distress. They are interested in this, and vitally interested, because it means the welfare and protection of their homes; and it seems to me preposterous that the United States Congress will vote to leave this proposition up to the same Army engineers who have attempted to control it in the past and have failed. It seems to me preposterous, in view of the statements made here recently on the 28th of April by the present Chief of Army Engineers—statements that I think are childish, and I believe I have proved it to the satisfaction of everyone here who heard my statement—that the United States Senate will vote to give control of this commission to the Army engineer who has made these childish statements in regard to flood control.

FARM LAND BANK, COLUMBIA, S. C.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I have listened to one of a series of speeches by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BLEASE] in which he accuses the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency of some wrongdoing.

This time he says I gave out a statement that there was a unanimous report in the committee against favorable action on the Blease resolution to investigate the Federal Farm Land Bank and the Intermediate Credit Bank of Columbia, S. C.

I might easily be able to prove that there was a unanimous report, but I certainly did not say it.

The Senator has placed in the RECORD an article from the Columbia Record, published at Columbia, S. C., which carries my statement. I have secured same from the official reporter and I want to read exactly what it says and I want to read it correctly. It speaks for itself and disproves the wild statement of the Senator from South Carolina. It is as follows:

> After the committee meeting Senator NORBECK, the Banking and Currency chairman, alluded to the information presented to him regarding the Columbia bank. "All of this information was placed before the committee, and it was practically unanimous in feeling that there was not sufficient evidence to justify an investigation such as Senator BLEASE proposed."

The committee has carefully examined the so-called evidence, which was personally submitted to the Secretary of the Senate. Most of it is not evidence at all. It is composed mostly of letters from his admiring friends commending him for his effort. Some of the letters complain that the Government is not liberal enough in making loans. Some of them may be from those who failed to pay last year. One letter suggested that a halter be placed upon a certain southern Senator, whose name I will not put in the RECORD. One complains that he has been driven off the farm on which he was born. He does not say whether he had a lease or patent to the land or whether he had anything. He may have been foreclosed on. The letter does not say.

The Senator complains about the delay in the committee making the report. I am to blame for that. I plead guilty. There has been more work here this last week than I have been able to attend to. The report is not only delayed on the Blease resolution but it is also delayed on the La Follette resolution relating to brokers' loans.

Many charges have been made against this bank. The preamble to the resolution declares "there is much talk of mismanagement" and "there are rumors that the manner in which the affairs of said bank have been managed has worked a hardship to the farmers in the various sections of the district."

One might gain the impression from the preamble of the resolution that these convictions were connected with the Federal Land Bank or the Intermediate Credit Bank of Columbia, S. C., which is not the case.

I shall not attempt offhand to make a comprehensive speech on this matter. The report will be filed in a day or two and that will be the complete answer to the ridiculous charges that are being made by the Senator.

The record shows that the farmers in the neighborhood of Beaufort, S. C., believed that their situation was favorable to the greater production of truck crops for the early northern markets. Additional credit was needed but could be secured through the intermediate credit bank at Columbia. The necessary steps were taken by the organizing of an agricultural credit corporation to make loans to farmers, taking the necessary security, including a mortgage on the crop to be grown, which notes would in turn be guaranteed and sold to the intermediate credit bank at Columbia, S. C.

Mr. W. E. Richardson, president of the Beaufort Bank, a leading citizen of the community, a former State senator, and a man connected with many banks and business enterprises, became chairman of the board of directors of this agricultural credit corporation—the South Carolina Agricultural Credit Co. He had apparently been successful in all his undertakings and enjoyed the good will and the confidence of the entire community. Mr. Richardson became the directing head of this credit company.

A cooperative marketing association was also formed by the same people for the purpose of shipping in bulk and marketing their crops collectively to the best advantage. Mr. Richardson was also selected a director in this association and was very influential in the affairs of same.

The first crop was grown in the summer of 1924 and is referred to as the 1923–24 crop, as the arrangement for the finances would be made in the fall previous. The paid-up capital of the Agricultural Credit Co. was $50,000. Their rediscounts with the intermediate credit bank amounted to $321,475. The first year's crop was good, and equally important was the fact that the marketing conditions were quite satisfactory. The community benefited greatly and the indebtedness to the intermediate credit bank was paid up in full.

The natural result was that there was a still greater demand for funds in the following year. The Agricultural Credit Co. increased their capital. The cooperative marketing association equipped itself to take care of additional business. A larger crop was planted. The intermediate credit bank met the increased demands for the 1924–25 season, discounting more than a million dollars' worth of paper for this Agricultural Credit Co. The crop returns were quite satisfactory. Of the $1,000,000 borrowed during the second year, all was paid back that fall except $2,000, and this was paid a little later. The intermediate credit bank suffered no loss from loans extended to the Beaufort community for growing and marketing the 1924–25 crop.

The satisfactory results for the first two years led to further expansion and a greater demand for funds with which to plant an increased acreage. The credit company again increased its capital—this time to $260,000, 90 per cent of which, invested in Liberty bonds and other securities, was pledged with the intermediate credit bank as additional collateral.

The cooperative marketing association increased its operations so as to handle the business. The intermediate credit bank met the increased demand for funds, and this time rediscounted about $2,018,000 of farmer paper for the local credit company.

The weather conditions in the summer of 1926 were not favorable. The harvesting and marketing of the crop was delayed. Payments came in very slowly to the intermediate credit bank and inquiries were answered by the officers of the local credit company to the effect that the slow payments were entirely due to the lateness of the season and the delay in marketing. The continued delay in remittances aroused the suspicions of the officers of the intermediate credit bank. They sent their investigator to Beaufort and found that the Agricultural Credit Co. had a record of only $300,000 worth of products sold by the borrowers of their association.

This did not look right. A further investigation revealed the fact that $900,000 had actually been marketed, but that the funds had been diverted and this sum of about $600,000 had been deposited in the Beaufort Bank, a State bank of which Mr. Richardson, previously referred to, was president. This deposit had been made upon the written order of the officers of the cooperative marketing association, who had instructed their New York representative to make his sale remittances to the Beaufort Bank or deposit same in New York to the credit of the Beaufort Bank.

The intermediate credit bank held the notes and the security, and they had notified the cooperative marketing association to that effect, and acceptance of the notice had been made by said association. But notwithstanding this, the directors of the association ordered the money sent to the Beaufort Bank instead of to the intermediate credit bank.

A demand was made upon the Beaufort Bank for the funds belonging to the intermediate credit bank and improperly deposited in the Beaufort Bank. Said bank was unable to make payment and was closed by the State banking department. It was later found to be in very bad condition, and no substantial dividends from the liquidation are expected. But other losses were also suffered by the intermediate credit bank in connection with these loans made through this Agricultural Credit Co. It was later found that many of the notes that had been discounted with the intermediate credit bank were irregular or fraudulent. Some were accompanied by false financial statements and others were actual forgeries.

When the conditions at Beaufort were brought to the attention of the Farm Loan Board in the summer of 1926 by the Federal Intermediate Credit Bank of Columbia, the board immediately notified the Department of Justice, which promptly sent investigators to South Carolina to work in cooperation with the United States district attorney in ascertaining the facts, with a view to prosecuting any persons who might be found guilty of violation of the Federal law. The United States district attorney and the investigators spent 18 months in a thoroughgoing investigation of the situation at the inception of the investigation. Because of suggestions that the officers of the intermediate credit bank might be implicated, investigation was directed toward the conduct of these officers as well as the conduct of the defendants, who were subsequently found guilty.

As the investigation progressed, the investigators became satisfied that the officers of the intermediate credit bank had not in any way violated the law. They found the books and records of the intermediate credit bank complete and satisfactory, and all information available. The district attorney went to the extent of arranging for the appearance of the president of the intermediate credit bank, Mr. Arnold, before the grand jury so that the grand jury might have an opportunity to determine for itself from his testimony, and Mr. Arnold waived any immunity in connection with the investigation.

While the investigation by the Department of Justice was in progress, the Farm Loan Board also sent its chief examiner and members of the examining force to South Carolina to make an examination of the affairs of the intermediate credit bank with reference to the situation in Beaufort. In addition, the State banking department made an investigation of the affairs of the Beaufort Bank. This was brought out in the trial at Columbia.

As a result of the investigation by the Department of Justice and the examination department of the Farm Loan Board, indictments were returned by a grand jury in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of South Carolina for violations of section 37 of the Criminal Code of the United States, for conspiracy to violate the farm loan act. Indictments were not returned against any of the officers of the intermediate credit bank, because the United States district attorney had satisfied himself that they were in nowise guilty of any violation of the law.

The trials under these indictments began on January 9, 1928, and consumed about six weeks, resulting in the conviction of Richardson, Horne, and Miss Harvey—Richardson and Horne each being sentenced for two years in the penitentiary, the maximum punishment that could be imposed under the conspiracy statute, and Miss Harvey being sentenced to jail for six months. The other defendants were acquitted of the conspiracy charge. The trials under the indictments for violation of the farm loan act were deferred and are expected to take place in the summer of 1928.

The president of the intermediate credit bank, Mr. Arnold, appeared as a witness for the Government and testified at considerable length, being subjected to intensive cross-examination by the counsel for the defendants; and the Federal judge before whom the case was tried, in his charge to the jury, practically exonerated Mr. Arnold from all blame and from the various accusations made against him during the course of the argument.

The convictions above referred to were W. E. Richardson, R. C. Horne, and Miss Harvey—all three of whom were officers in the Agricultural Credit Co. and all three were connected with the Beaufort Bank.

It was discovered that the Beaufort Bank had been in financial difficulties for some time, but conditions were growing gradually worse and became acute in the summer of 1920, when it developed that the crops did not bring the returns that were expected on account of unavoidable delay in marketing same. For instance, the tomato crop shipped from the neighborhood was expected to bring more than a million dollars, but arrived in the markets too late to be salable.

Frauds and forgeries were evidently committed with a view to helping the Beaufort Bank—possibly in the hope that the future would bring the necessary magic to save the bank.

Besides the convictions in Federal court, there have also been convictions in the State court of Mr. W. E. Richardson, as president of the bank at Beaufort, and Mr. Jay, cashier, for violations of the State banking law. The convictions in Federal court were on the conspiracy charge only and they were given the maximum sentence for same.

There are still a large number of indictments pending for violation of the farm loan act, which provide heavy penalties. Some of these indictments are against those already convicted of conspiracy. These are expected to come to trial during the summer. The frauds committed by Mr. Richardson were of such a nature that they were not suspected by the community.

They had not even been detected by the State banking department, which had made regular examinations. The frauds were not even suspected by his associates, except those involved in the same irregularities.

Congressman HARE, of South Carolina, has a bill pending in the House (H. R. 11384) to authorize and direct the Intermediate Credit Bank of Columbia, S. C., to credit certain notes and mortgages discounted for the South Carolina Agricultural Credit Co. The purpose of this bill is to reimburse those farmers who had secured loans from the intermediate credit bank and had suffered misfortune through their own acts or through the acts of the officers of their own organization. Mr. HARE appeared personally before the Banking Committee in support of such a plan.

An attempt is naturally made to lay the blame upon the intermediate credit bank, and while I might well admit that if they had been more alert they would have suffered less losses, the cold fact of the matter is that they were imposed upon by those who received favors from the bank, and the Government must bear a loss of over $1,000,000.

Among others were some members of the association who were "pikers" and refused to keep their agreement of selling their crops through the association. They sold them individually. They put the money in their pockets. They deposited the money in the Beaufort Bank. When the bank closed they lost their money. Now they are not only hoping the Government will reimburse them for these losses, but they are actually demanding it.

There has been considerable of a clean-up in the farm-loan bank and the intermediate credit banks since the board appointed last summer took charge. The less efficient at the Columbia bank have been dismissed. The bank now seems to be functioning in good shape.

From the convictions made and the number of indictments pending of men who had been prominent in business and politics, it is quite natural that a big howl will go up. There are those who believe that there is an effort being made right here to mislead the public and create some sentiment in favor of these criminals who are under indictment.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I want to congratulate the Senator from South Dakota on being a very shrewd lawyer. From a reading of his biography in the Congressional Directory I would not think he was a lawyer. But down in my section of the country we have some lawyers who will go into court and take a court decision and read the part that is favorable to their side of the case, but do not read the other part of the Supreme Court decision. If my friend had looked at the top of this paper he would have seen this:

BLEASE loses before committee for probe of local land bank.

Mr. NORBECK. That is the headline. I read my interview.

Mr. BLEASE. The headline reads:

Vote against investigation "almost unanimous," says Chairman NORBECK.

Mr. NORBECK. But the other appeared also, in which I do not say that at all.

Mr. BLEASE. That is in quotations.

Mr. NORBECK. That is the one I read.

Mr. BLEASE. It says, "Vote against investigation 'almost unanimous,' says Chairman NORBECK." That is in quotations. Down below it says, referring to the committee:

It was practically unanimous in feeling that there was not sufficient evidence to justify an investigation.

Yet only five voted against investigation, and four voted for it. Certainly the four men who voted for it out of the nine who were present did not feel that it was unnecessary, or they would not have voted for it, and certainly it was not practically unanimous when only a majority of one voted for an unfavorable report.

I shall not answer the Senator at this time. I will wait until the report comes in in reference to the other part of his speech on the merits of the resolution.

FLOOD CONTROL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3740) for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, since I concluded my remarks a few minutes ago one or two Members have asked me about this man Riker, who is the author of this proposed spillway. I want to read a letter dated March 20, 1921, on the letterhead of George W. Goethals & Co. (Inc.), 40 Wall Street, New York, as follows:

GEORGE W. GOETHALS & CO. (INC.),
40 Wall Street, New York, March 30, 1921.

Mr. CARROLL S. RIKER,
East Falls Church, Va.

DEAR MR. RIKER: The plans for an international terminal, transportation, and shipbuilding undertaking, outlined in your recent letter to Senator WESLEY JONES, a copy of which I have read, appeals so favorably to me that I should be willing to afford them my personal support, and the engineering support of my corporation.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE W. GOETHALS.

I want to say further that Mr. Riker was consulting engineer, at the request of General Goethals, during the construction of the Panama Canal. He was called down there to consult with General Goethals at that time, and has been affiliated with General Goethals in several other undertakings.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] I know desires to speak about this conference report, and if there is no one else in the Chamber who desires to address the Senate I shall suggest the absence of a quorum, in order that the Senator from Nebraska may have time to get here. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the importance of the flood-control legislation can not be well overestimated. We are confronted with a problem that is national in its scope, and nothing of the kind has ever before been presented to any body of men in the history of the world.

I am informed that the water from 38 States flows into the Mississippi River. The Mississippi Valley comprises two-thirds or more of the area of our country. This is a problem that has been with us for a century, one which I think we all realize now has never yet been solved. It is because I feel that we ought to take a broad national view of the situation that I am detaining the Senate while I give to them what to my mind would be the proper method of solving this great question.

It is not solved, in my judgment, by the bill which we have passed or by the conference report which is now before us, although we have taken a step, it seems to me, in the right direction in this legislation. It is a subject that can rightfully command the careful and candid consideration of the greatest engineers of the world. I do not believe we ought to confine ourselves in its solution or in hunting for a method of solution to Government engineers. We ought to have the best engineers that the country or even the world affords to lay out and form a program which, if possible, should be a permanent solution of this great national problem. I say this without casting any reflection upon the ability or the integrity of the Government engineers. I believe it is generally agreed now that no system of levees alone will solve the problem; that while we build the levees higher and higher, the silt that comes down from the tributaries for thousands of miles and fills up the bed of the rivers gradually raises the bed higher and makes it necessary for higher levees, with the knowledge all the time that we can not indefinitely continue that kind of a program and that sooner or later—it may be soon and it may not be for years—the levees constructed by man will be destroyed by nature in the very natural course of events. If the river has built itself up and the levees are extremely high, when the break comes the destruction is much greater than under any other circumstances.

I have listened with a great deal of interest to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER]. It occurred to me that he had presented to us a plan which to me is practically new, and

I think is new to most of us, but one well worthy of the careful and candid consideration of the best experts we can possibly procure. We are not fully providing in the proposed legislation for that plan or for any plan or for the investigation of any such plan. I could not refrain from thinking as I listened to the Senator from North Dakota that it is an exceedingly interesting plan which he proposes, having the backing at least of some of the engineers, and which comes from a man who lives near the source of the great Mississippi River. I was reminded that heretofore I have until within the last few years, and I think the country has as well, considered this problem as one in which only those living in the Mississippi Valley were interested. It has dawned upon me and I think upon the country that no matter where we live, especially if we are in this great valley, we are directly interested in the solution of this great problem.

It is going to cost a great deal of money, and some have backed away from it because of its enormous cost. While we have only an indefinite idea as to what its cost will be, we all know that it will be enormous. While I regret that the expense is going to be so great, yet I feel it is a problem which we must meet, and we ought not to try to side-step it because of its cost. In my judgment a billion dollars will not meet the expense that will be necessary to properly handle the question; and yet, Mr. President, if it is solved properly I think it would be found that much of the expenditure would be returned in the way of benefits which should and no doubt will come from a plan national in scope, which would control every tributary and every tributary of every tributary of the Mississippi River.

Mr. President, I would like to get the proper solution of the problem regardless of its cost. We can not think of such a thing as placing the country in the lower Mississippi Valley in the jeopardy that we know it is continually in under present conditions and under all the conditions that have existed during the years that have passed. Yet I believe if we meet it unselfishly and treat it as a national problem and try to banish from our hearts all selfishness, at least all selfishness that is unfair, we will reach the conclusion that a national settlement of the question upon a broad, humanitarian scale will show that the benefits which will come from a proper solution of the problem will to a great extent take care of the expense. If we will spread the cost over the years in the plan I am going to advocate, it will amply repay every dollar of investment that we make.

It should be remembered that every gallon of water that does damage in the lower Mississippi Valley is needed for the sustenance of human life in the production of crops in many of the tributaries away up in the northern and western part of this great valley. The water that is doing damage in the far South would be welcome for the benefit it would bring to humanity if it were spread upon the thirsty soil of the semiarid regions of the West and Northwest. It seems to me it is a proper solution of the question, making such a disposition of the water that instead of doing damage it will render benefit not only, as I think I will be able to show, to the particular locality where it is used, but everywhere else in our country where people wear clothes or eat food. After all, if we are unselfish and honest in the settlement of all these great questions it will be found that we are all equally interested and all to a great extent ultimately benefited by a proper, honest solution of any governmental question that can properly or possibly come before Congress. I believe that the people of New England, while their interest may be indirect, are nevertheless vitally interested in the proper settlement of this question and they will realize it as the years go by.

We have tried levees. The plan has not worked, although it has been very beneficial. I am not advocating the abandonment of levees. They ought to be utilized wherever they can properly be utilized in connection with any other remedy we may have. But it seems to me the proper way to settle the question is to hold back the flood waters of the Mississippi River in every tributary, both on the eastern and the western shores of the Mississippi River, particularly on the western shores where much of the country is semiarid and where that water, instead of doing damage, will be beneficial. We ought not only to store it in reservoirs wherever nature has provided a reservoir site but wherever it can be used for irrigation purposes it ought to be so used.

After all the best place in the world to store flood waters is in the soil itself. There are millions of acres of the semiarid country that have never been wet down to the bottom of the soil since man has inhabited the country. If properly soaked, if properly filled with moisture, that land will not only produce crops, but will hold back that moisture and that water which is going down the stream unrestrained to become a menace farther down the Mississippi River. If we can prevent a river like the Missouri, for instance, from changing its course and washing away hundreds of thousands of acres of fertile and valuable soil, we will do two things. We will save for beneficial purposes the land that it carries away and we will save the expense that will be necessary to take that same soil out of the Mississippi River farther down, where it interferes with flood control and interferes with navigation.

It will be found that if we make a proper survey and in a national way build dams wherever there is a natural reservoir in any of its tributaries, much of the expense can be properly borne by the sale of the electric power, because there will be hundreds of thousands of horsepower generated all over this great valley. The income from the power and the income from the irrigation will go a long ways toward paying the expense of the investment. In the course of time it will more than repay it. It depends upon the length of the period that we are going to select for amortization. The water which is now destructive of human life and of property farther down the stream would be used for the production of food, for the production of power, and in a general way used for the happiness, prosperity, and contentment of the people throughout the entire valley.

It can be historically proven, I think, that the storing of flood waters in the soil will have a great deal to do with the navigability of the streams, so that navigation and flood control and irrigation and power all dovetail into each other and each help the other. Quite a number of years ago the Reclamation Service built a great dam in Wyoming holding back the flood waters of the north bank of the Platte River. It has been shown since those flood waters were held back, and that water spread out over the land in northwestern Nebraska and in Wyoming, that the flow of the Platte River in the State of Nebraska, hundreds of miles away from the place where the flood waters were stored in Wyoming, has been made nearly constant the year around. In round numbers, the flow of the river in the dry season has been increased by 50 per cent, and Senators know what that means to those who want to use the water still farther down for irrigation or for navigation in the Mississippi and some of its tributaries. It has likewise been shown, and is historically true, that the high waters in the same river have been decreased about 50 per cent; I think the exact figures are in one case 45 per cent and in the other 47 per cent. It all works together for navigation, for flood control, for power, and for irrigation.

We would in that way get the maximum amount of navigation, the maximum amount of irrigation, the maximum amount of power, the maximum amount of flood control, all for the minimum amount of cost. When we do that, as it seems to me we ought to from every angle, and see how these different parts of the question will dovetail into each other and bring us one harmonious whole, it seems to me it is worthy of statesmanship if we could provide, by a comprehensive statute, that there should be selected a corps of the best engineers we can get, and lay this program before them, give them ample funds, and time and opportunity to make a complete survey of the entire Mississippi Valley, with the view and the object of bringing about navigation, flood control, development of power, and irrigation. If these things work out as I think they will, as it seems to me they must, we will have solved the problem of flood control and several other problems besides.

It is true that in the power aspect of the question much of the power would be secondary power. I realize that. In that respect it would not be nearly as valuable as primary power, because a reservoir utilized as a flood-control proposition must always be empty when the water is low so that it can be filled up with the flood waters and must be emptied so that it can be filled up in time of flood. But it would be found, under the proper management of all these matters of flood control dams, that we would not let all of the water out of all of them perhaps at the same time. It would depend upon conditions. It would be necessary perhaps to utilize that power and, to make the best use of it, to have auxiliary plants with it. That is something about which we need not bother ourselves in solving the flood control proposition. It is one of the incidents that will naturally come if the commercial necessity for it is demonstrated.

Then Senators ought to remember that there are many times when the rivers are too low for practical navigation purposes. That is because all the water that ought to be then flowing in the streams has passed on down at a time when it was not necessary for navigation, indeed, at a time when it interfered somewhat with navigation—has passed on down to the lower Mississippi Valley and destroyed millions of dollars worth of property and sometimes human lives. By saving the property in one place we will have made more valuable the property in another place.

As to how much should be contributed toward this great scheme by each one of the various elements I am not prepared to state. It necessarily will be somewhat of an estimate when these questions are settled, as settled they must be. Each one, however, should bear a part of the expense, including, in my judgment, the lands farther down that are prevented from being overflowed by the works above, or by the levees in the immediate vicinity; but when they are all put together, each one contributing its proper share, including the Government, we will have attained the cheapest navigation, the cheapest flood control, the cheapest power, and the cheapest irrigation that can be obtained in any possible way.

In this connection I want to say a word to my senatorial friends from New England and from the East who are not in the Mississippi Valley, and who perhaps, at first blush, think they have no interest in this great question. I want to call their attention to the fact that they do not produce enough food to feed their own people; that the great Mississippi Valley is the food-producing part of the United States; and that when, in the semiarid country, the drought comes and blights the farmer's prospect, and he does not raise any wheat, the price of bread in New England goes up. When he produces an abundant crop the price of food in Boston and in New York and in Chicago goes down.

Then we must not think that even as far west as Ohio and that great country we can get all the food that the people of this country need; but those who must produce our food under the uncertain circumstances of drought ought to be considered also. It is true that when drought comes those who happen to be in some small favored localities make larger amounts of money than though they produced a large crop. That, however, is an unnatural condition, a condition that we want to avoid, because those same communities probably lose it all by drought the next year. What would conduce and go toward promoting and maintaining the happiness of all the people, both West and East and North and South, would be a regulation of the water supply of this great valley so that, taking one year with another, we could have about the same crop production, and with the same consumption taking place we would have less variation in the prices that the producers get and the consumers must pay, because, after all, those in the East who depend upon the West and the South for the food they eat and the clothes they wear must remember that they can not permanently prosper while a part of the country is in distress.

It is a law of human nature that one portion of the country can not permanently and properly and honestly be prosperous and happy while other great portions of the country are in distress and suffering from lack of the necessaries of life. If the food supply of the great West were practically constant from one year to another, it would not only to a great extent take the gambling out of farming in the West but it would to a great extent take away the uncertainty of the cost of living in the East. So, after all, no matter where we live or what may be our occupations, assuming that we are honest and that we are unselfish, that we want to do what is right for ourselves and for our fellow man, we must reach the conclusion that in this great problem, as well as in all other national problems, we are all in the same boat, and we are all going up or down together when we take one year with another.

This legislation in one place hints at and takes the first step toward this kind of a survey. If I had my way about it, I would make it much broader. I wanted to say this much, however, because I believe the time will come—perhaps after many of us have disappeared from the scene, but it will come; and it will commence to come within the next few years—when the people of this country who study this question will reach the conclusion that in order to control the flood waters of the Mississippi River we must consider it on a national basis, and we must go into every tributary of the Mississippi River and develop restraining dams wherever God has made a reservoir site. When we have done that we will have contributed much to the equalization of the cost of living, and particularly to the solution of the farming problems of the West, and the promotion of the real happiness and contentment of all the people of the United States.

There is just a little in this bill that starts on the survey. It ought to be done in a much more comprehensive way. After this bill is passed and signed and has become a law, I look to see the time come when Congress will provide for a complete survey, as great as the problem may be, and that in carrying out such a program we will ultimately start on what to me seems to be the proper solution of the flood-control problem—that is, to consider it as a national question; to consider not only the people in the lower Mississippi Valley who do not want the water but the people in North Dakota, in South Dakota, in Nebraska, and Kansas, and Oklahoma, where they do want the water, where they need it not only for their own good and their own prosperity but in the long run on the broader principle, for the prosperity and happiness of every soul who lives within the United States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to detain the Senate very long. I appreciate the disadvantage in attempting to discuss a measure of such magnitude as the one now under consideration, where an opportunity has not been afforded me to listen to the hundreds of witnesses who have testified, or examine the thousand of pages of testimony which have been taken before committees of the House and the Senate in connection with the Mississippi flood-control problem. Aside from the general proposition involved technical questions have been considered which require prolonged study to fully appreciate. Engineers of eminence have testified before the committees of the House and the Senate, and differences of opinion have arisen between them as to the project and the plans under which it is to be worked out. A great divergence of views has developed upon the part of many interested in the project, and many who have given it some consideration, as to just what is contemplated and how far-reaching will be the effects or consequences of the proposed legislation.

When the matter was first brought to the attention of the country following the disastrous flood of 1927 the general thought was that the Federal Government, in cooperation with the States and with the districts and sections involved, would proceed to strengthen the levees of the Mississippi River and thus prevent further inundations of contiguous territory. But during the latter part of 1927 there developed a movement of no small proportions which grew in volume as interested parties made known their views, which had for its object the taking over by the United States of practically the entire region between the Allegheny Mountains and the summit of the Rocky Mountains upon the theory that such course was necessary to provide against recurring floods.

Many conferences and meetings were held in various parts of the Mississippi Valley for the purpose of arousing public sentiment and creating a demand for prompt action by Congress when it convened in December. Before the meeting of Congress one of the important committees of the House gave weeks to the consideration of the matter and heard the testimony of a large number of witnesses, who urged that the Government adopt a policy, which they denominated "national and comprehensive" in its character, for the protection of lands in the Mississippi Valley from future damages. Many plans were urged before the committee, and later before the Senate Commerce Committee. Some of these plans, as I have stated, required the Federal Government to practically assume control over all springs, rivulets, and streams between the Rocky Mountains and the Allegheny Mountains. The question of the rights of the States to control the waters within their borders was wholly ignored by many who were urging Federal action. They proceeded upon the theory that there were no limitations upon the power of the Federal Government; that it was supreme and sovereign in dealing with domestic and local matters and could enter States and take over their functions and restrict or destroy their authority. Under this view the States did not own nor did they have any control over the beds and banks of navigable streams within their borders or have any right to control the nonnavigable streams or exercise any supervision over the same, notwithstanding the fact that more than 100 years ago the Supreme Court of the United States had decided that the States had sovereign power over all the streams within their borders, subject only to the limitation that they could not interfere with navigation.

That view of the Supreme Court has been consistently adhered to by the courts of our country until the present time. In harmony with that position many States have adopted the riparian doctrine, while others have approved what is known as the doctrine of "appropriation." The Western States generally, because of the importance of irrigation, have enacted laws granting to prior appropriators the right to use the waters so appropriated for beneficial purposes. The States referred to enacted statutes providing for the method of appropriation and defining with more or less particularity the use to which the waters might be put and the conditions and circumstances under which rights might be acquired, distribution made, and the interests of the public generally served. But, as stated, during the consideration of the Mississippi River flood situation, accepted and uncontested legal propositions became obsolete. Views were announced that the Federal Government had supreme and unrestricted authority to control all of the waters navigable and nonnavigable within all States of the Union.

Under that view neither State nor individual could acquire any rights in and to the beds or banks of streams or the waters flowing therein. Under no interpretation of the Constitution can such a view be justified. The rights of the Federal Government, as I have stated are restricted to navigable streams, and it may proceed no further than to prevent interference with navigation. Under the pretext that the Government was preventing interference with navigation it has made large appropriations for the construction of canals and the building of levees and other protective works upon the banks of rivers and waterways within the United States. It has gone further, and under the interstate clause has assumed the right to control floods and to protect private lands from inundation by the waters of navigable and nonnavigable streams.

The theory upon which this bill rests, dealing with the Mississippi River project, is that the Federal Government may pursue any plan it desires in connection with all streams, springs, and sources of water supply which, directly or indirectly, find their way into the Mississippi River and finally into the Gulf of Mexico. It may go into the Rocky Mountains and build reservoirs, or, as indicated by the Senator from Nebraska, who has just spoken, it may convey waters upon the arid and semi-arid lands where, as he averred, they would percolate into the soil and there be held as in a reservoir, finally reaching the Mississippi River through subterranean channels and fissures in the earth's crust. It is also contended by some who are advocating the Mississippi River project that lands may be acquired by the Federal Government and a policy of reforestation employed in order that the snows and rainfalls may be held back and reach the lowlands at such times as to prevent floods.

Serious objection to the pending bill is justified because of the uncertainty and ambiguity of its provisions. But little discussion of the measure has taken place in the Senate, but divergent views have been expressed by Senators as well as others who are proponents of the bill with respect to its meaning, purposes, and consequences. A few days before the bill was reported to the Senate the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] indicated that the project would cost a billion dollars or more, and that the Government should issue bonds in order to finance the undertaking.

When the bill was brought to the Senate the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] reported the bill, and explained some of its provisions. In reply to questions which I propounded to him he stated that while the bill carried an authorized appropriation of $325,000,000, no one could determine what the cost would be, and that it might reach the gigantic proportions of more than three-quarters of a billion dollars. So far as I can learn, no one has definitely declared that this project will cost only $325,000,000, and we are advised that some of the engineers who have been connected with the investigation of the project report that it will cost more than $425,000,000. Senators will bear in mind that this bill only provides for a part of the contemplated Mississippi flood-control project. This deals only with a segment of the river between Head of Passes in Louisiana and Cape Girardeau, Mo.

It is contemplated that the Mississippi River project shall not only provide levees and other works along and upon the banks of the Mississippi River between the points I have just referred to, but that it will comprehend the entire river and all of its tributaries. Indeed, the act declares—> that surveys of the river and its tributaries which are authorized in the Sixty-ninth Congress shall be prosecuted—> as practicable, and the Secretary of War, through the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, is directed to prepare and submit to Congress at the earliest practicable date projects for flood control on all tributary streams.

As speedily—

It further declares that some of these projects shall be the—

> Red River and tributaries, the Yazoo River and tributaries, the White River and tributaries, the St. Francis River and tributaries, the Arkansas River and tributaries, the Ohio River and tributaries, the Missouri River and tributaries, and the Illinois River and tributaries.

The bill also provides that the reports and surveys to be submitted and made by the Secretary of War, through the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, shall include—> the effect on the subject of further flood control of the lower Mississippi River to be attained through the control of the flood waters in the drainage basin of the tributaries by the establishment of a reservoir system; the benefits that will accrue to navigation and agriculture from the prevention of erosion and siltage entering the stream; a determination of the capacity of the soils of the district to receive and hold waters from such reservoirs; the prospective income from the disposal of reservoired waters; the extent to which reservoired waters may be made available for public and private uses; and inquiry as to the return flow of waters placed in the soils from reservoirs and as to their stabilizing effect on stream flow as a means of preventing erosion, siltage, and improving navigation.

The bill also authorizes an appropriation of more than $5,000,000 in addition to the various other sums authorized in the bill and in the river and harbor act of January 21, 1927, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers for—> the preparation of the flood-control projects authorized under section 10 of the bill—which means, of course, all of the tributaries of all the rivers and streams flowing into the Mississippi River. And that these flood surveys shall be made—> simultaneously with the flood-control work on the Mississippi River provided for in this act: And provided further, That the President shall proceed to ascertain through the Secretary of Agriculture the extent to and manner in which the floods in the Mississippi Valley may be controlled by proper forestry practice.

I repeat, an examination of the bill justifies the statements which have been made repeatedly during the past few weeks in the press, and by persons giving this subject consideration, that the ultimate cost can not be determined but that it may reach the stupendous sum of one and one-half billion dollars. The President has signified his opposition to the bill, and statements have been attributed to him that it might cost between a billion and a billion and a half dollars. Since the bill passed the House a few weeks ago Members of the Senate and of the House have been holding conferences with a view to composing differences existing between the two bodies, and for the purpose also of trying to meet the objections of the President to the bill. Senators know that conferences have been held between the President and Members of the House and Senate, and that the President has indicated that if changes were not made the bill might be vetoed. We are now advised that the President, while not satisfied with the bill, will approve it.

I am compelled to say that the conference report presents a bill but slightly changed since it passed the Senate. If the President was then opposed to it, and there is no doubt upon this point, it seems incomprehensible to me that he should now consent to approve it. The bill is just as uncertain, just as ambiguous, just as all-comprehensive and embracing, just as subject to criticism and objection now as it was when it received the approval of this body.

The President by his conferences with the committees of the House and the Senate has gained no victory, or if one it is a Pyrrhic victory. There is no doubt that the President has been opposed to the bill; that he perceived its imperfections and uncertainties, dangers and uncertainties which will be emphasized as the days go by. I regret that the President did not use in the contest the weapons at his command. He could exercise his constitutional right to veto the measure. I believe that if the President had indicated that he would pursue this course, we would have before us a measure relieved of some of the uncertainties and dangers which we find in the bill under consideration.

I have referred to the uncertainties of the bill and to the indefinite realms into which it enters. I have just referred to a number of the rivers and tributaries of the Mississippi, surveys of which are to be completed at an early date together with—> reports of projects for flood control of the same and of all tributary streams of the Mississippi River system subject to destructive floods.

I have also called attention to the bill which it declares contemplates—> further flood control of the Mississippi River to be obtained through the control of the flood waters of the drainage basin of the tributaries by the establishment of a reservoir system.

In other words, the bill contemplates the building of reservoirs upon the tributaries of the Mississippi River, the purchase of lands for such purposes, and the construction of all of the extensive works incidental to the undertaking of such a project so stupendous.

The bill also requires the project to take into account the benefits that will accrue to agriculture and navigation, and requires that the capacity of the soils to hold and receive waters shall be determined and the income that will be obtained from the reservoired waters.

The Secretary of Agriculture is also to—ascertain how the extent of floods in the Mississippi Valley can be controlled by proper forestry practices.

In view of the contention that all streams between the Allegheny and the Rocky Mountains constitute a part of the Mississippi River, I suppose that this entire region will be held to be within the periphery of the Mississippi Valley. Apparently the bill contemplates that a great national work of reforestation is to be undertaken within the 21 States which, it is claimed, send their waters to the Mississippi River.

Mr. President, I repeat the bill is ambiguous and uncertain. It is bewildering and uncomprehensible. Its implications, its consequences, no one can foresee or determine. A measure so uncertain and so indefinite should, in my opinion, not be enacted into law. It should be perfected and made definite and certain, We should know at least within $100,000,000 what the cost will be. Even if the project is confined to that part of the Mississippi River alone between its mouth and Cape Girardeau, we are left absolutely in the dark as to what the cost will be. The bill does not limit the cost. It authorizes an appropriation of $325,000,000, but it does not restrict or limit the cost to that amount.

Senators know that authorizations are often but the beginning of an ever-increasing drain upon the Treasury. Reclamation projects have been authorized said to cost but a few million dollars, but when completed exceeded by several hundred per cent the estimates and the first authorization.

When the chairman of the committee admits, as he did, that the projects authorized may cost more than three-quarters of a billion dollars, I am justified in declaring that we are making a leap into the dark. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] has just explained the plan submitted by Mr. Riker for the control of the waters of the Mississippi River. The map, prepared, I presume, by Mr. Riker, and which is hanging here upon the wall, has just been explained by the Senator from North Dakota. It indicates that the plan which the committee and the President have been considering, known as the Jadwin plan, with perhaps modifications, will require that the Government secure either the title to 900 square miles or the floodage rights over the same.

I am advised that this project will call for the purchase of a great amount of land, and that the flowage rights will have to be secured for hundreds of thousands of acres. Mr. Riker has demonstrated that he is a man of ability and is familiar with the question. If 900 square miles will be inundated by this project, that means that the Government will be called upon to pay tens of millions of dollars, perhaps more than a hundred million of dollars, for lands the fee of which must be obtained or the same subjected to a perpetual flowage servitude.

A Senator has told me within the past hour that, comprehensive as the bill is and costly as it will prove to be, there are 70,000 persons within the project who have not been reckoned with, and that they must be cared for because of the damages which they will sustain in the execution of the plan which seems to have been agreed upon. It is quite certain that the claims of these 70,000 people whose lands are to be inundated or subjected to perpetual easements, will be entitled to large damages, thus adding to the uncertainties and indefiniteness of the bill and making it impossible to even approximate what the enterprise will cost the Government.

Mr. President, my reference to these matters is not for the purpose of indicating that I do not think that the Government should do something to protect the people of a number of the States who have been damaged by the flood waters of the Mississippi River. The Government has assumed from time to time the task of protecting certain regions from the floods of navigable streams. I shall not discuss the question as to the power of the Federal Government to provide flood control. I shall assume that there is some obligation upon the part of the Government to provide at least partial protection against floods in behalf of those residing upon the banks or in close proximity to the Mississippi River. My recollection is that Congress has already appropriated more than $100,000,000 for that purpose. I might add in passing that the entire appropriations made by the Government from the time of Washington until the present for rivers and harbors, including flood control, do not exceed $1,250,000,000; and yet we are now about to commit the Government to a policy the extent of which no one can determine, but which in all probability will cost at least a billion dollars.

And it should be said that under this bill we are establishing a new policy, the results of which, as that policy shall be applied to the entire country, will probably call for expenditures of billions of dollars. As I have stated, this bill contemplates the entrance of the Federal Government into 21 States and the control of substantially all of the streams therein. It in effect means that the Government is responsible for the control of the waters and streams of that vast area between the two ranges of mountains to which I have referred. It means the nationalization of the waterways of our country. It contemplates that all streams, navigable and unnavigable, shall pass under the control of the Federal Government and that it will assume the responsibility of conserving the waters by reservoirs and other means and of utilizing and distributing them for power and irrigation and other purposes. Apparently the States are to be deprived of prerogatives and rights which belong to them. This policy, if carried out, will restrict, if not prevent, the utilization and development of streams by private enterprise or by States or municipalities. I call attention to these questions for the purpose of showing how important, how revolutionary, indeed, how dangerous is the step which we are about to take.

I invite the attention of the Senate to another feature of this policy: In the past where the Government made appropriations for flood control and to protect property from inundation, contributions were made by the districts or political subdivisions or States, based theoretically, at least, upon benefits to be derived from the improvement. That, as I understand, has been a certain and fixed policy. It seems to be that that policy is being abandoned and the unwisdom of its abandonment with respect to the project provided for in the bill is obvious when it is conceded that hundreds of thousands—if not millions—of acres of privately owned lands will have to be acquired by the Government or floodage easements obtained therefor. If the Government is to bear the entire expense of acquiring this land or securing the perpetual right to overflow the same, it is quite likely the cost will be much greater than if the district or the State was required to pay a proportion of the costs. It is quite natural that if the State or the district benefited had to pay a proportion of the costs incident to acquiring the lands or the easements over the same the obligation would be less than if the entire costs are to be borne by the Federal Government. The bill makes a gesture, and it is only a gesture, of indorsing what was formerly the policy of the Government of requiring local contribution. It declares—that the principle of local contribution toward the cost of flood-control work, which has been incorporated in all previous national legislation on the subject, is sound, as recognizing the special interest of the local population in its own protection, and as a means of preventing inordinate requests for unjustified items of work having no material national interest.

But having made this solemn gesture the bill declares that it has—been fully complied with because of past contributions.

This admission that no future contribution is required is made in the face of the certain fact that the Government is about to assume a tremendous though unknown obligation which may exceed a billion dollars, and in the face of the fact that the bill announces a policy which, in effect, is that the Federal Government now takes over all of the streams between the Rockies and the Alleghenies; and, of course, with this new policy will assume control and jurisdiction over all the rest of the streams, big and little, great and small, between the Atlantic and Pacific and Canada and the Gulf.

Mr. President, one of the uncertainties of the bill so far as the liability of the Government is concerned is found in the provision which declares that in carrying out the purpose of the act it is impracticable—to construct works for the protection of adjacent lands, and that such adjacent lands will be subject to damage by the execution of the general flood-control plan, it shall be the duty of the board herein provided to cause to be acquired on behalf of the United States Government either the absolute ownership of the lands so subjected to overflow or floodage rights over such land.

It seems to me that the Government, in addition to this liability for the costs of acquiring easements or title to the large area which may from time to time be inundated, will be required to purchase further tracts of land or obtain floodage rights over the same in those districts where it is—impracticable to provide adequate works to protect adjacent lands.

It is known that there are stretches of the Mississippi River where large areas have been flooded almost annually since white men have known the river. Those who have acquired these lands know of the frequent inundations.

Under the bill the Government, though it is impracticable if not impossible to build levees and dikes because of physical conditions to prevent the water flooding these low, swampy lands, nevertheless is to be held liable for damages whenever the lands are flooded.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should not construe the latter part of the language as going to that extent. I think that is a general declaration, with reference to general flood damage and flood loss, that the Government will not be responsible for anything of the sort; or, in the case of a flood along these levees, if a levee should break, that the Government is not responsible for the damage growing out of the break. That is my impression. That is a provision put in by the House and agreed to by the conferees.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I believe that an examination of the provisions of the bill will demonstrate that the interpretation which I have placed upon the language referred to is the correct one. On page 6, section 4, this language is found:

The United States shall provide flowage rights, for destructive flood waters that will pass by reason of diversions from the main channel of the Mississippi River and shall control, confine, and regulate such diversions.

Mr. JONES. That is modified in the conference report to read in this way:

The United States shall provide flowage rights for additional destructive flood waters that will pass by reason of diversions from the main channel of the Mississippi River: Provided, That in all cases where the execution of the flood-control plan herein adopted results in benefits to property such benefits shall be taken into consideration by way of reducing the amount of compensation to be paid.

That is the way it reads now. In other words, the words "and shall control, confine, and regulate such diversions" are omitted, and this provision with reference to the benefits is added.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the provisions just read by the Senator which is not in the bill, but as he states is in the conference report, is an improvement upon the bill, or at least may be an improvement. I had not seen this supplemental provision which has emanated from the conferees. However, it must be construed in connection with section 2 which states that—the local interests of the alluvial valley of the Mississippi River have fully complied with the principles of local contribution and that because of the national concern—

In this project and—in the interests of national prosperity no local contribution to the project herein adopted is required.

If there is no contribution it will be probably contended that full payment should be made by the Government for damages regardless of benefits to the owner, upon the theory that if benefits were to be taken into account and deducted from the damages resulting from the overflow of the waters of the river, it would be equivalent to local contribution. But the provision just read by the Senator has the vice of uncertainty and compiexity. It says that the—United States shall provide flowage rights for additional destructive flood waters by reasons of diversions from the main channel of the Mississippi River.

We are told that the flood waters cover large areas of territory. How can it be argued that there will be "additional destructive flood waters" caused by the Government when the Government does not create the floods. As I understand the project contemplated, it calls for the creation of new channels and the overflow of hundreds of thousands of acres of land not heretofore affected by the floods. The owners of these lands can set up no benefits from the project, and these are the lands which the Government must acquire in fee or an easement over the same, the cost of which will be, as I have indicated, very great. The provision just read by the Senator, I repeat, is uncertain; it adds further mystification and bewilderment to an indefinite bill and is an admission that this bill should not become a law until it is further clarified and its terms made more certain and definite. Of course, the United States will not create "additional destructive" flood waters. What are "additional destructive flood waters"? Who shall say? I submit that this provision is meaningless, and as interpreted will prove a snare to the Government and a pitfall in its path.

Mr. President, the measure before us needs clarity with respect to the agency which shall be paramount and controlling. Is that agency to be the Secretary of War or the Chief of Engineers, or a board to consist of the Chief of Engineers, the president of the Mississippi River Commission, and a civil engineer chosen from civil life by the President—or the Mississippi River Commission?

Obviously, the bill contemplates that there are differences of opinion now existing as to the project and its execution, and that after further study by the commission and the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers and "the engineer chosen from civil life," an attempt is to be made to reconcile the differences, and then, if they succeed in effecting a reconciliation, they are to recommend to the President such action as they may deem necessary to be taken in respect to such—engineering differences, and the decision of the President upon all recommendations or questions submitted to him by such board shall be followed in carrying out the project herein adopted.

This is a most remarkable provision and reveals that no one is yet satisfied with the project or the plans. Indeed, it seems to prove that there is no definite plan. It will be observed that the President, with respect to the controversy and differences of opinion upon the project and plans, is only to give a "decision with respect to engineering differences" that may arise among the groups of persons comprised within the Mississippi River Commission and the board consisting of the Chief of Engineers and the president of the Mississippi River Commission and the engineer chosen from civil life.

Mr. President, there are other provisions of the bill as uncertain, unsatisfactory, and indefinite as those to which I have called attention. They will be provocative of controversy and lead to strife and litigation to the great disadvantage financially and otherwise of the United States. I regret that a suitable bill has not be offered, one that will fairly meet the situation, afford reasonable protection to the people in the Mississippi Valley, and impose upon the United States responsibilities and obligations which are just and fair. I appreciate that the Mississippi River presents a problem in which the National Government is interested. There rests upon it a responsibility which must not be overlooked and obligations which it must cheerfully assume. I am ready to vote for any measure that will provide for the assumption of that responsibility and the discharge of such obligation. And I might add that my support of the measure will not be affected or influenced by the amount involved; whatever sum, great or small, should be paid by the Government to meet its just obligations I shall gladly vote for. The measure before us does not meet my approvel. I have given some of the reasons for my position, and why I can not support the conference report.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a few minutes in discussing the conference report. We who live in the valley feel grateful for the unwavering support of the Senators and the Representatives who live outside the lower valley. We shall always be grateful to them for the support they gave us in framing this legislation. It does not carry all we had hoped it would do in the way of relief. We who have lived with this problem have not felt that it had any of the characteristics of a local problem. It is one of those efforts which the Government occasionally puts forth to increase the wealth and the happiness of all the citizens of the United States by some act within some locality that is too great to be cared for by local interests.

If one had time to recall what the conditions were last year, and a map to point out the territories flooded, it would be easy to disclose that quite one-fifth of all the cotton grown in America is produced in the territory that was under water this time last year. While the cotton, of course, was the product of the toil of the people who dwelt within that area, it produced a wealth that paid a larger dividend in other sections of the country than in the area where it was produced. It kept the spindles busy in New England. It furnished the balance of trade to this country, and has done so every year since the Civil War, except for a few years during the World War. It furnished the clothes of half the people of America who wear cotton. As I said a moment ago, it kept the spindles in New England busy, and, almost alone, it kept the commerce between this country and the Orient from being destroyed.

It has, in addition to that, another side to it. Between one-fifth and one-sixth of all the colored population in America who live upon farms dwell in this area. It is an agricultural area. There are no industries there to absorb the labor of that race if they should find it impossible to remain upon the farm. Therefore, unless this condition were remedied, it meant that between one-fifth and one-sixth of the colored population who live on farms in America now would have had to be transported anywhere from 500 to 1,000 miles. That would have happened to a race that has been illy equipped by training to compete in an industrial community. They have been reared upon farms. Their inclination, their training, made farmers out of them. If you should drive them away from the farms they would have to go to the industrial centers of the North and East. As I said, they are illy equipped to compete in the fierce struggles in those centers.

In addition to that, they would bring to those centers of the North and East an industrial, social, and political problem with which those communities are illy equipped to grapple. It would add to the unemployment. It would add to the unskilled labor in those communities. They would become factors, social and political, difficult to deal with. Therefore, if that alone were to be considered, I think the Government would be amply justified in making the experiment in seeking to make it possible for those people to remain where they are and where they have been for a hundred years.

It would be of no advantage to any section of America, no advantage to any class in the United States, to let conditions continue as they have been, and let them grow more acute every year, more difficult for the people who live in the valley to handle on account of the increasing floods in the valley. If Senators will look at the map, it will be seen that all the water that falls between the Allegheny and the Rocky Mountains finds its way down the lower valley of the Mississippi River. Therefore, in the area between these two great mountain chains, a territory which embraces the whole central part of the United States, every cutting down of a forest, every draining of a swamp, every canalizing of a river has hastened down this great flood that falls between these two mountain chains, and adds to the difficulty of controlling that flood when it reaches the lower valley.

At common law there was a cause of action of the lower riparian owner against the upper riparian owner who accelerated the flow of water from above, down to, and over the property of one who lived below. Therefore, while we can not exercise the right, if it were private individuals, we would have the right to restrain the development of the upper courses of the river in order to protect those people who lived on the lower reaches of that stream.

With all those things to be considered, I have not been able to follow with any sympathy any argument that this was a local problem and ought to be cared for by local communities. I am not unmindful of the fact that some special advantages do come to people who own property in the lower valley which possibly do not come to people who dwell in other sections of the country; but those things are mere incidents of the improvement. They are not uncommon in the development of any governmental activity, and no one has ever thought heretofore that the local communities should contribute locally for incidental advantages which grow out of governmental activities.

We spend hundreds of millions of dollars every year in maintaining an ample Navy; I think it is a wise national policy so to do; but everybody realizes that the cities along the seacoast have a special interest in the Navy that is not shared by the people living in the valley of the Mississippi. During the late war we spent many millions of dollars in keeping a naval patrol on the sea to protect New York and Boston and other seacoast cities from a German raid. It was said, and I do not doubt but that it was true, that if a ship of war could approach New York it could do incalculable harm in a few hours. Therefore, to avoid any catastrophe like that, we spent hundreds of millions of dollars. Anyone knows that the people living in New York or Boston had very much more at stake than the citizens of St. Louis, because no ship that floated on the sea could have done any physical damage to St. Louis. But there is nobody so wild anywhere who would have thought of proposing that we should have put into the Navy appropriation bill a provision that the people living along the seacoast should make a local contribution toward maintaining the Navy, because incidentally they got a greater protection out of it than people living away from the coast.

We did not do that, because we realize it is a national obligation to protect every square foot of America's soil from the incursion of a foreign enemy. Therefore no one would be so unpatriotic as to object to maintaining a navy. But if it be wise that the individuals living along the seacoast, where the protection is greatly needed, should not contribute locally for that protection, I am unable to follow the reasoning of those who insist that we who live in the Mississippi Valley should contribute, because connected with the protection of a part of the territory of these United States from destruction by flood there is an incidental advantage to the people living there. I have not been able to follow that reasoning, and I never shall be able to follow it. Therefore I shall not be able wholeheartedly to assent to the provisions of this bill.

I am not unmindful that it is the best that can be had, and we are grateful to those who made it possible to have this much assistance. But there is not a man, woman, or child in America who has not something at stake in the protection of the great central plain from floods. The food they eat, the clothes they wear, the commerce that flows from one section to another, all depend, to a certain extent, upon this improvement.

We furnish a very substantial market for the manufacturing institutions of this country. We buy more when our lands are free from floods. What we produce we may expend in that way, instead of having to expend it in fighting floods. We are very much better customers. I say this as an illustration, that New England can sell us much more of her manufactured products if we are protected from floods than she can sell us if we have to devote our time and all of our resources to fighting water. Therefore there is a very substantial advantage going to that section of the country.

Certainly everybody realizes the advantage in having the balance of trade in our favor instead of having the balance of trade against us. It tends to make prosperity in every section of the United States, and unless this country can produce the staple that heretofore has given us the balance of trade, that balance of trade must turn against us instead of being with us.

In conclusion, I want to say that I shall vote for the conference report, but I shall do it not believing that it does all for that section which it is entitled to receive. I shall do it because it is the best that can be had. I have examined the amendments that were recently written into the bill. Just what they are expected to accomplish I am unable to determine. The first amendment insisted upon adds the word "additional." The only measure of recovery that one who owns property there that is taken, or partly taken, for public use, is the difference between the value of the property before and after the improvement is made. You can not take that right from the owner, because the Constitution guarantees it to him, and the word "additional" does not add to or take from the liability of the Government or the right of the citizen whose property is appropriated. Some of the other amendments possibly make a more substantial change.

I regret that one provision in the Senate bill which provided for a larger civilian engineering force, and more power to the civilians instead of to the Army engineers, has been stricken out. I say that not with a view of reflecting upon the Army engineers. I think they are a very competent body indeed, and in one hundred and odd years that they have handled the Government's funds, hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars, there has been one instance only in which they misappropriated money. That is a record for any profession to feel proud of.

This is the objection I have to that: It tends more to concentrate in the hands of the Executive the control over the development of the improvements that are to protect the valley from floods. When the Chief of Engineers can largely veto the plans, we know that to a very large extent that is putting into the hands of the President of the United States the power thus to control the rate at which the development shall go forward, and, to a certain extent, the plans which shall be adopted for carrying out the purposes of this act.

I do not want it to be understood that I am reflecting on the President, but it is obvious that he can not understand that problem as one who is in control of it ought to understand it, and as men do understand it who live with it and who work with it year in and year out. The President has too many other duties to perform. It frequently happens that the President, like any other individual, is more impressed by that thing with which he comes in daily contact than he is with a problem that is further removed. As an illustration, we read without any very great emotion of wars of 100 or 200 years ago. We can contemplate whole cities devastated, and thousands of people massacred, if they are far removed from us in time and space. If a disaster were to fall upon the city of Washington to-day and a thousand men, women, and children were to lie dead in the streets, we would be very much more impressed about it than we are by reading of all the bloody wars that attended the building up and the destruction of the Roman Empire, because it would be nearer to us both in time and space. Therefore, I would rather that the development of this project were in the hands of men who lived with it, who were familiar with it by seeing it every day, who knew the problem, and had that human sympathy which comes from contact, rather than that it should be controlled by some one who has not that intimate personal knowledge and therefore that sympathy which would come from having actual contact with the problem.

I regret very much that the present President, Mr. Coolidge, did not find it in his heart to come down and see the conditions which existed a year ago in the valley. It was worth anybody's time and it seems to me that it imposed an obligation upon the Chief Executive to acquaint himself with those conditions. In my own State of Arkansas we had 16,000 square miles of territory under water. Thousands of people were stranded in the flood where they had to be brought out by any means of transportation that could be secured. I am sure the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] witnessed that some of them were brought out who had been marooned in treetops, on housetops, on railroad embankments, and other places where they could escape the flood, so long that they had become almost wild. I saw them bring out people down in the southeast part of my State where they had to prevent them jumping off the boat into the water as they approached land. They came out with the scantiest of wearing apparel. Everything that they had was gone. Everything that breathed in that territory, except those human beings, had been drowned. Their livestock was gone; even their chickens were gone. Their household effects were gone. While they might not have had much, it was all they had.

There were stretches of country miles in width and miles in length in which there was not a single thing left that man had put there. Every house, every barn, every outbuilding of every nature, even the fences, were swept away. It was as desolate as this earth was when the flood subsided. So far as their little effects were concerned, it was just as destructive. Where nearly a million people who had paid their taxes, who had discharged every obligation to the Government that the Government imposed upon them, who had shed their blood on every battle field where American honor was at stake, I felt then and I feel now that they were and are entitled to a consideration which they did not get. I am persuaded that if the President of the United States, instead of going to South Dakota to fish, had gone down there he would have waged no fight upon this legislation, and he would not have been insisting that the word "additional" should be added by way of amendment.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, there are but a few features of the bill which I shall discuss. I hope within the next two hours, by the same vote registered in the Senate when the bill was originally presented, that we will send to the President the greatest peace-time domestic proposal he has been called upon to sign.

Just a year ago the flood passed down the Mississippi River. It created damage to property of $250,000,000. Many lives were lost. It was only a repetition of floods that had preceded it, totaling in all, in a period of some twenty years, a loss of $400,000,000.

During the same period the States in the lower valley had expended $292,000,000 in their own defense.

Mr. REID, chairman of the House Committee on Flood Control, a committee composed of 21 Congressmen, called that committee together in November and they remained in session for nearly three months. The Commerce Committee of the Senate, composed of 19 Senators, devoted practically two months to a study of the subject. There has been such agreement between the House committee and the Senate committee and the expression of opinion by the whole House and the Senate that when this bill shall be interpreted there are one or two phases which seem to me should be amplified in the RECORD now.

This is not the bill that some of us desired. It does not contain the vision of the valley. It does not contain those things discussed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], nor does it do for the tributaries the things that friends of the tributaries wanted done. It is a distinct compromise, a compromise begun at the head of the flood waters of the Mississippi. The legislation is confined to the States that suffered. It is confined to that district which must care for the overflow waters of 31 States and 41 per cent of the territory of the United States.

Personally I have been amazed at statements which have appeared in the newspapers about the supposedly stupendous sums which were to be expended by Congress in this matter. Two plans were presented to the House committee and the same two plans were presented to the Senate committee. One was presented by the Chief of Engineers, General Jadwin. The other was presented by the Mississippi River Commission composed of seven members. The Jadwin plan provided one method of flood control. The Mississippi River Commission provided another method of flood control. Your committee provided a special board to reconcile the differences between the two plans and if necessary, to agree upon a composite plan.

Mr. President, I am one of those Members of the Senate who believe there should have been greater latitude in the matter of civilian engineer representation upon this board.

There are over 250,000 civilian engineers in the United States, more than twice as many men as we have in the United States Army, all graduates from colleges and universities. In every State in the Union there is a State college which graduates civil engineers. This great body of 250,000 engineers has its own special organization of 20,000 members controlled by the highest standard of conduct. When we approach this subject, involving as it does nearly three times the amount of money that was spent upon the Panama Canal, it seems to me that the civilian engineer should have his full part in the planning of the enterprise. I regret to say, Mr. President, that while we talk of bureaucracy and clerk-made laws, while we denounce bureaucratic control, it was bureaucratic dictation that denied to those 250,000 civil engineers their proportion of representation in this great plan.

But out of it came finally a board, and whether the plan is a failure or a success will depend upon the kind of men who will go upon the board. The Chief of Army Engineers is to be one of the commissioners. A second commissioner is designated as the president of the Mississippi River Commission. This position is now held by a man who served 18 years upon the river, a man who knows the river. Those who study the problem of the river know that experience counts at least 50 per cent with engineering skill in solving problems of that great stream. But unfortunately the term of office of Colonel Potter, the head of this commission, a man who knows more of the river than any engineer on the river, has expired. Therefore, both the House and Senate committees wrote into the bill a request to the President for the reapointment of Colonel Potter. So that there might be no misunderstanding, the intent of Congress was expressed by the unanimous vote of the 19 Senators on the Commerce Committee, by the unanimous vote of the 21 Congressmen on the Flood Control Committee, and by a vast majority in the House and a unanimous vote in the Senate, that the President should, in all fairness and to preserve the philosophy of the bill, reappoint Colonel Potter as president of the Mississippi River Commission.

This is the language used in the bill:

Provided, That the present incumbent of the office may be appointed a brigadier general of the Army, retired, and shall be eligible for the position of president of the commission if recalled to active service under the provisions of existing law.

That would give the people of the United States the Chief of Engineers, who can explain and expound the Chief Engineer's plan, and it would give the people of the United States the president of the Mississippi River Commission, who could present his plan. Then the President may select a civilian engineer, who could compose the differences between the two.

Mr. President, I am sure the President of the United States understands the situation. He understands that it would be unfair to those who believe in the Mississippi River plan not to have a representative of that commission appointed. All we ask of him, and I am sure he will do it, is to give us an engineer of great civil ability and experience who will reconcile the differences between the two plans.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SACKETT in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HAWES. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think there is any conflict or will be any conflict between the so-called independent board, composed of the Chief of Engineers, the head of the Mississippi River Commission, and a third party to be appointed by the President, and the Mississippi River Commission? Who will ultimately control in determining the project and the plans to be pursued in the execution of it? I am asking for information.

Mr. HAWES. If there is disagreement, the discretion will lie with the civilian engineer. The so-called Jadwin plan, which was an incomplete plan, called for $296,000,000. The Mississippi River Commission plan called for $406,000,000. The committees of the House and Senate provided for $325,000,000 as the total sum to be spent. The board is appointed to compose the differences between the two plans, the limitation being placed at $325,000,000.

Mr. President, I have been amazed at some recent statements which have appeared in the newspapers. There seems to have been a confusion in the minds of men regarding the work to be performed by the United States Government. It is not a work of reclamation. It never was a work of reclamation. It was not a thing that affected the landowners. It is a work of controlling flood waters.

The great proportion of the work will be done in one State, the State of Louisiana. When men talk of profits out of a spillway or something wrong about the purchase of land for a spillway, they confuse reclamation with a Government direction to drive over a man's land. It may interest the Senate to know that the waters from Louisiana do not flow down the Mississippi River. They enter into the Gulf of Mexico through its rivers and its bayous. The flood that passes through Louisiana is the water that comes from outside the State of Louisiana. Both engineering plans provide for spillways. They are not down the course of the river. They do not follow previous overflows. They are diversions to be created by man for the benefit, not of Louisiana, but for the benefit of 31 States in the Union.

There has been a difference of opinion among the engineers, and the public should understand that there is a difference today, so that the public may look forward to seeing that when we have one tribunal, one forum, which is to decide between the plans of the Mississippi River Commission and the plans of the Chief of Engineers, it may be a fair forum composed of fair men, so that the Nation will have the best advice given to it in both plans.

Mr. President, I know of no subject since my service began in Washington which has been given such careful attention by the committees of the Senate and House. I must not fail to say before I take my seat one word for the chairman of the Senate committee, the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], for his great patience, his fairness, his perseverance in preserving in the bill a philosophy which has gone through it all, a philosophy of fairness, in reconciling two plans that the American people might in the last analysis secure the best plan.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, this bill proposes a great internal improvement. I am in favor of the Government undertaking such great works of improvement. However, this bill reverses policies that have been heretofore in effect recognized by Congress; and I feel that we should all realize that as a consequence readjustments in connection with other similar public improvements will be demanded and can not well be refused.

From time immemorial the Mississippi River and its tributaries have been making a pathway to the sea. We recognize, under the common law, that the use of a track after a certain number of years entitles the public to travel over the same as a highway without restraint. In other words, the right to use the track as a highway is secured by proscription. If there ever was a right by proscription obtained, certainly that right has been secured by the Mississippi River for its course to the sea.

Man has been infringing upon that right, gradually contracting this pathway, and as a result now and then the Mississippi has reasserted its full title to this route to the sea and has occupied it. The consequence is that we are now confronted with a demand for flood control because man wants permanently a part of the pathway of the Mississippi River for his own use.

This occupation has been developing for a long time. It has been urged, however, that even though these infringements upon this right of way have taken place, the necessity of flood control has been accentuated by the fact that forests have been removed from upper tributary areas. However, we have but to go back over history to find that in 1881 there was an equivalent flood, and still further back to 1844, before practically any forest was removed from the upper regions, to find that there was a corresponding flood to that which was sustained in the last year. Therefore, so far as deforestation is concerned, it is probable that it does not greatly affect this problem.

As a matter of fact, this bill provides for reclamation—a great reclamation project. We have to deal with two classes of reclamation. The first class of reclamation is leading water on dry land to make it livable. A second class is keeping water from wet land, thus making it livable. In connection with legislation for reclamation of the first character, we have recognized this principle: That it was an economic problem, practically in its entirety. The question being, Is Congress justified in providing for a particular reclamation? And Congress has had to be shown that if it spent, on an average, a hundred dollars for the reclamation of an acre of land, it would be worth at least a hundred dollars after reclamation was accomplished; and if that could not be demonstrated, reclamation has been denied.

Furthermore, it has been provided that those who were the beneficiaries of reclamation should pay for reclamation. At least they should pay the cost of reclamation, if not interest upon that cost during the repayment period.

That has been the policy of Congress. Under that policy Congress has expended or authorized the expenditure of about $170,000,000; and, as a result of these expenditures, certain repayments are being made each year. Now, however, it is proposed that in connection with this great reclamation project there shall be practically no contribution by the owners of the lands that are benefited.

The President recognized this great change in policy and has opposed it; but I understand that now he has finally agreed that the people of the United States shall pay practically all the cost of this work, including sixty or seventy millions to landholders for lands and rights. In short, the President has surrendered.

This being the case, we are indeed confronted with a new policy respecting reclamation in this country, and I do not see how we can very well insist that the husbandman, upon the plains in the West and the Northwest, shall pay for the reclamation that he has been afforded, or how, in the future, we can say to those who ask for the reclamation of dry land, "You must pay therefor, or else you can not expect consideration from Congress."

I accept this situation; but I represent regions that are interested in dry reclamation and I should like to have it understood that hereafter we will be entitled to come to Congress and ask for corresponding consideration. In fact, we are entitled to come and ask not merely for reclamation of arid lands but of subarid lands.

A drought is nothing but a natural phenomenon, a lack of water in the form of rain. The trouble in the lower Mississippi Valley has been a surplus of water because of rain. It is now proposed to reclaim and prevent the suffering that results from an excess of water due to such cause. Have not our western settlers the same right to come to Congress and ask relief because of the lack of rain? These are simply two natural phenomena quite akin. That is what this is to lead to, and Congress can not fairly refuse to consider favorably our requests.

In my State there are three counties that up to last year for three or four years had practically no crops whatever. The people were practically wiped out so far as their fortunes were concerned. Under similar circumstances again they will have a right to appeal to Congress. We have in the past appealed to Congress and asked that a reclamation project should be authorized in this region, but up to the present time have been refused, because the reclamation project might involve the expenditure of some $15,000,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I was interested in the statement made by my able friend from Missouri [Mr. HAWES]. It seemed to me a very proper one—namely, that we ought not to confuse this project, dealing with the flood waters of the Mississippi River, with the sources of streams and irrigation projects.

In this case it is claimed that 41 per cent of the area of the United States is involved; that the waters of 21 States are sent into the Mississippi River; and that the effect of those waters is to work serious injury in a few States. The States that are inundated and damaged are not at fault. Their situation is caused, perhaps, by the sins of omission or commission, whichever view may be taken, of a large part of the United States. Does not the Senator differentiate such a situation as that from propositions to irrigate private land?

May I say that I was in the House when the so-called Newlands bill was passed, and I wrote a minority report concurring generally in the proposition that Congress had the right to reclaim its own lands, though it was paternalism that might be carried to an extreme, and we could justify appropriations from the Treasury of the United States to irrigate the lands which were owned by the Government, because by so doing we would facilitate the salé of those lands; but I believe the committee were unanimous in the opinion that it was not within the power of the Federal Government to irrigate private lands.

I express no opinion now. I wanted simply to ask the Senator if he did not differentiate between this project and the project of the Federal Government going into States and building reservoirs for the purpose of irrigating the lands of private persons?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, of course this project of reclamation as proposed in this bill is not identical with one where it is necessary to lead water upon dry land. However, as the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] stated, 17,000 square miles in his State were submerged as the result of last year's flood. If works are provided that enable these 17,000 square miles to be freed from subsequent flooding so that they may be utilized for the raising of crops without interference, is not that a form of reclamation? There can be no question about it; and the necessity for reclamation in both cases is due to water—too little or too much.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator if that is not merely an incidental result? Is not the reclamation of a portion of the land along the Mississippi merely incidental in this case?

Mr. HOWELL. If it were not for the advantages of reclamation there would be no urgency for this measure.

Mr. GEORGE. For reclamation?

Mr. HOWELL. For reclamation.

Mr. GEORGE. Is that the Senator's idea about this bill?

Mr. HOWELL. I have no question about it.

Mr. GEORGE. If I entertained it I should vote against the bill.

Mr. HOWELL. There is no question about it.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator contends that that is the urgent reason for the passage of this bill?

Mr. HOWELL. That is the urgent reason for its passage. Reclamation is necessary, and permanent reclamation.

Mr. GEORGE. I have not thought so, Mr. President. If the Constitution of the United States gives to the Federal Government power to control the navigation and commerce upon this great stream—and the United States, of course, will brook no interference with commerce and navigation upon this stream—it seems to me that there is a national obligation that grows out of that power, and that the reclamation which benefits the land adjacent to the river, derived from the proper control of flood waters in that river, is purely incidental to the duty and oblition that rests upon us under the Constitution.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, if the purpose, or if the advantage, to be achieved by this measure were merely navigation this measure, meaning the ultimate expenditure of $1,000,000,000, would not now be before Congress.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VANDENBERG in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. The very word "reclamation" carries with it what meaning to the Senator?

Mr. HOWELL. It means making land livable and useful that otherwise is not livable and useful.

Mr. CARAWAY. It means to change the conditions of that land, does it not?

Mr. HOWELL. It does.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did it ever occur to the Senator that there might be this difference between his idea of reclaiming desert land and preventing overflows? To take the water off land does not reclaim it. It does not take care of local conditions. It simply prevents a moving body of water that originates in another section, much of it a thousand miles away, from destroying what already exists.

There is no such thing as something moving down on the arid lands. Your condition is local. You are not protesting against something that occurs outside your region. You are asking, when you ask for reclamation, that a changed condition may take place within your local area. You are fighting a local condition. The idea of flood control does not look to taking local water to change a local condition. It is to prevent a flood rising in anther section from sweeping down and destroying the section to be protected.

Does not that appeal to the Senator as a difference?

Mr. HOWELL. West of the one hundredth meridian there is a region about 150 or 200 miles in width that has been called semiarid. Some years we have crops, and splendid crops. Other years Nature does not smile on us; she frowns upon us, and then we suffer. Sometimes those years succeed each other and leave the land practically barren. That is exactly what takes place in the Mississippi Valley. People settle upon its low, fertile lands. Suddenly, after several years of successful cultivation, they are overwhelmed by flood water, just as our people are overwhelmed—by what? Lack of water.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, let us take New England. There came a flood there last spring that washed away their roads and bridges. This bill carries a provision that the Government shall help restore them. Suppose these bridges had crumbled on account of some purely local condition. Does anybody in the Senate believe that there would have been an appropriation in this bill to build them up? Suppose the concrete out of which they were made had proven faulty, and they had crumbled and the bridges had fallen down. Nobody would have said that the Government ought to go in there and rebuild them. We undertake to do it, wise or otherwise, because of a condition which does not originate with them.

A great flood of water comes down the valley and destroys property. It seems to me to be so obvious that I certainly just miss the Senator's point. If we were to have a drought, I do not think there would be any obligation resting upon the Government or anybody else to take care of the damage, although since I have been a Member of Congress I have voted quite frequently to supply certain things needed for drought-stricken areas in the West. The committee of which I am a member, and of which the Senator sitting in front of me [Mr. GEORGE] is a member, reports bills to buy seed, to furnish food and feed and seeds to enable people to make crops where there has been damage caused by a local drought.

Mr. HOWELL. Just as has been done for flood-stricken regions.

Mr. CARAWAY. Absolutely not. There has not been one single thing of the kind done for a single acre of land or a single individual living in the valley. It is wholly different. You can search the records from beginning to end, and you will find that we never asked for it. All we have said was that if you originate a flood beyond our borders, it is a national situation, it comes down a national stream, and you ought to take care of your water. There is a law, wise or otherwise, in every community on earth, that you can not even keep a vicious dog and let it bite your neighbor without answering for it. The Government controls the Mississippi River and owns it. You can not put an obstruction in it, you can not dig a channel in it, without the Government's permission. It would not seem to be exceedingly unfair, then, to ask it to maintain its property in such a way that it would not destroy the people along its banks.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I called attention not long ago in my remarks to the fact that the Mississippi River from time immemorial has been cutting a pathway to the sea; that it had a right to that pathway by proscription; that man was interfering with that pathway, and has interfered with it; and that the Mississippi has merely retaliated.

I recognize that this bill is to pass. I recognize that we are taking a new position respecting certain internal improvements. I recognize that this new position means that tremendous areas of private property are to be benefited without contribution at the expense of all the people of the country. The purpose of my remarks is to call to the attention of the Senate that necessarily, in justice to ourselves, we, from the arid and semiarid regions, must come here and ask for similar assistance when we are threatened or affected by natural phenomena, and especially that phenomenon, drought.

Therefore, Mr. President, I trust that when we do come, as we will, we will be treated in the same generous spirit which is now the lot of the great Mississippi Valley.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss the conference report, because I know the important step is the taking of the vote on the measure. I merely wish to say that I do not regard flood control on the Mississippi River as standing upon the same basis or being in anywise analogous to reclamation. The two seem to me to be wholly apart. There is no ground of similarity between the two. Flood control on the Mississippi River, a great channel of interstate and international commerce, over which the United States has complete jurisdiction under the Constitution, presents, of course, a different picture from any that can be presented by or on behalf of the irrigation of land anywhere in the country.

The recognition of the problem as national is not coming too soon; it is coming all too late. It requires some great catastrophe, some great flood, as the flood of last year, to bring us to a realization of the fact that this is a national problem. Before the vote is taken I merely wish to say that my vote is not placed upon the basis that this is a reclamation project. Wholly incidental is the benefit that flows to landowners and property owners along the Mississippi. The national obligation springs from other considerations, and rests upon the basis which I have indicated; that is, the national power over this stream as an artery of interstate and foreign commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, there have been many propositions advanced during the debate on the conference report to which I may not agree, and about which there is much difference of opinion. It may not be important at all, but I wanted it to appear in the RECORD that the mere fact that I am not discussing these propositions, or attempting to controvert them, can not be taken as an indication of an agreeement on my part with the contentions made. I have been interested in the passage of this bill, and so have refrained from discussing any of these proposals about which there may be an honest difference of opinion.

There has been considerable said in the papers about the cost of this project. Where these estimates came from I do not know; but I have here a letter from the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army in answer to a letter from me with reference to the probable cost under these two plans, and I desire to have it printed in the RECORD so as to show what the estimate of the Chief of Engineers with reference to the cost of this project is.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, March 2, 1928.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: In response to your letter requesting certain estimates pertaining to your flood-control bill, I give the following:

The local contribution required to construct the main-river levees to the 1914 grade is estimated at $4,200,000. This assumes that the Army engineer project is adopted as to the scope of the levee work and that tributary flood control contained in the commission plan is not to be done. If the commission plans are adopted to the extent of including tributaries and work above Cape Girardeau then the local contributions would be $15,447,357.

In view of the uncertainties about the project that the bill leaves to be settled later, it is very difficult to make any estimate of what it might cost. However, the attached statement indicates what might occur. The minimum is $305,000,000 and the maximum is over $502,400,000.

Trusting that this is what you desire, I am,

Yours very sincerely,

EDGAR JADWIN,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.

NOTE.—If certain features of the Mississippi River Commission plan, such as narrower flood ways, are adopted, greater levee raising will be required on the main river and the grand total will exceed the $502,400,000 above.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was called from the Chamber for a moment to answer the telephone when the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] was speaking. I supposed there would be some further debate on the flood-control conference report. Coming into the Chamber a moment ago I discovered that the report had been adopted. I only want to say that if there had been a record vote I should have voted "nay," for the reasons I very briefly outlined a few moments ago when I addressed the Senate. If there had been a viva voce vote, I should likewise have voted "no."

EMERY RIVER RIDGE, ROANE COUNTY, TENN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VANDENBERG in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3571) granting the consent of Congress to the county court of Roane County, Tenn., to construct a bridge across the Emery River at Suddaths Ferry, in Roane County, Tenn., which were, on page 1, line 5, after the word "a," to insert "free highway"; on page 1, line 6, to strike out the word "Emory" and insert "Emery"; and to amend the title so as to read: "Granting the consent of Congress to the county court of Roane County, Tenn., to construct a bridge across the Emery River at Suddaths Ferry, in Roane County, Tenn."

Mr. TYSON. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 750) to amend the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes, which were, on page 2, line 6, to strike out the word "is" and insert "shall be"; on page 2, line 7, to strike out the words "the Army Music School and"; on page 2, line 20, after the word "commissioned," to insert "warrant"; on page 2, lines 23 and 24, to strike out "and eight additional band masters for duty with the Army Music School as instructors"; and on page 3, line 1, after the word "physically," to insert "and professionally."

Mr. BINGHAM. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

TERRITORY OF HAWAII

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 757) to extend the benefits of certain acts of Congress to the Territory of Hawaii, which were, on page 2, line 23, to strike out "1929" and insert "1930"; on page 2, line 24, to strike out "1930" and insert "1931"; on page 2, line 25, to strike out "1931" and insert "1932"; on page 3, line 1, to strike out "1932" and insert "1933"; on page 3, line 2, to strike out "1933" and insert "1934"; on page 3, line 3, to strike out "1934" and insert "1935"; on page 3, line 4, to strike out "1935" and insert "1936"; on page 3, line 5, to strike out "1936" and insert "1937"; on page 3, line 5, to strike out "1937" and insert "1938"; on page 3, line 6, to strike out "1938" and insert "1939"; on page 3, line 7, to strike out "1939" and insert "1940"; and on page 3, line 8, to strike out "1940" and insert "1941."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. What is the nature of the amendments?

Mr. BINGHAM. The amendments propose to change the date when the agricultural aid acts, with which the Senator is familiar, will become available for the Territory by pushing the dates forward one year. It would take some time to read all the amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is the only change, I have no objection.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask to have inserted at this point an extract from the House report on the bill, which includes a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, explaining that this proposed legislation would not be out of harmony with the financial program of the President.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MARCH 15, 1928.

Hon. G. N. HAUGEN,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. HAUGEN: Under date of February 7 the department submitted a report to your committee on H. R. 6070, a bill to extend the benefits of certain acts of Congress to the Territory of Hawaii. The acts referred to were those commonly known as the Hatch Act and supplementary acts, Adams Act, and Purnell Act, providing for the establishment and maintenance of agricultural experiment stations, and the act of May 8, 1914, known as the Smith-Lever Act, which provides for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges receiving the benefits of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, which is the Morrill Act, and acts supplementary thereto. In the report of February 7 it was stated that upon submission of this proposed legislation to the Bureau of the Budget, as required by Circular No. 49 of that bureau, the Department of Agriculture was advised under date of February 3, 1928, that the legislation proposed in H. R. 6070 would be in conflict with the financial program of the President.

The department is now in receipt of a communication from the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, dated March 7, 1928, in which he states that the legislation proposed in H. R. 10959 for the same purpose, introduced February 14, 1928, by Mr. HOUSTON, the Delegate from Hawaii, would not be in conflict with the financial program of the President if it were amended so as to start the program of progressive appropriations in the fiscal year 1930 instead of the fiscal year 1929.

Sincerely yours,

WM. M. JARDINE, Secretary.

From the above it will be seen that the Bureau of the Budget and the Department of Agriculture approved of H. R. 10950, with the understanding that the start of the program should be in 1930 instead of the fiscal year 1929.

The Senate has already passed S. 757, which is an identical bill with H. R. 10959. S. 757 is being reported amended so as to start the program appropriations in the fiscal year 1930 instead of the fiscal year 1929.

* * * * * * *

Between the years 1917 and 1927 the Territory of Hawaii has paid into the Federal Treasury, through internal revenue and the customhouse, a total of $107,628,451.64.

The Federal Congress has recognized Hawaii's right to share in Federal aid laws relating to highways, farm loans, vocational education, and child welfare and maternity, and now asks that similar recognition be accorded her in respect to the Federal aid for agricultural purposes. Hawaii has a greater population than three States and is at the present time paying into the Federal Treasury more than 13 States.

It is in no sense a possession, as possessions do not carry the burdens which States and Territories do. Neither Porto Rico nor the Philippines contribute to the Federal income by reason of the income tax, nor do they pay into the Federal Treasury by reason of the customs.

The intent of this bill is to eventually give to the Territory of Hawaii all of the Federal aid for agricultural colleges enjoyed by the States, no more and no less.

In view of all of the above facts, but principally in view of the fact that there is a large need for this aid by reason of the agricultural industry of the Territory, the importance of the college work (where there are 840 pupils at present), and by reason of section 5 of the organic act, the committee recommends that the bill do pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Connecticut to concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

HEARINGS ON BILLS ABOLISHING CAPITAL PUNISHMENT IN THE DISTRICT

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives (H. Con. Res. 30), which was read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That, in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the printing act approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, empowered to have printed for its use 2,000 additional copies of the hearings held before the committee during the Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, on the bills (H. R. 349 and H. R. 4498) to abolish capital punishment in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I ask that the Senate agree to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS UPON ACCEPTANCE OF STATUE OF ANDREW JACKSON

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives (H. Con. Res. 33), which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed and bound, with illustrations, the proceedings in Congress, together with the proceedings at the unveiling in Statuary Hall, upon the acceptance of the statue of Andrew Jackson, the seventh President of the United States, presented by the State of Tennessee, 10,000 copies, of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 5,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 3,000 copies shall be for the use and distribution of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Tennessee.

The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to have the copy prepared for the Public Printer, who shall provide suitable illustrations to be bound with these proceedings.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I ask that the Senate agree to the concurrent resolution of the House.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

LANDS OF CERTAIN MEMBERS OF THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES

Mr. FRAZIER. I submit a concurrent resolution and ask for its immediate consideration. It provides for the recall of a bill from the President which has, unfortunately, one word wrong, and I want to bring it back so that the change may be made.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 19), was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate S. 3594, entitled "An act to extend the period of restriction in lands of certain members of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes."

BEFORE AND AFTER THE WAR

Mr. TYSON. Mr. President, I ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD an article appearing in the Wall Street Journal of May 8, 1928, entitled "Before and after war."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, May 8, 1928]

BEFORE AND AFTER WAR

What is known as the Tyson-Fitzgerald bill for retirement of disabled emergency Army officers of the World War is on the calendar of the House of Representatives. This is no pension-grabbing scheme but a provision for simple justice to one class of officers who, in disregard of the Government's pledges in 1917 when they were needed, have been discriminated against and neglected. For over eight years these disabled officers have asked for consideration, yet there is danger that the House of Congress will deny this act of justice, long overdue, and put the Government in the position of repudiating a wartime pledge.

In the World War the United States had nine classes of officers. There were the regular, provisional, and emergency officers of Army, Navy, and Marine Corps—three classes of officers in each of the three branches of the service. In the service act of May, 1917, Congress provided that all officers and men of the provisional and emergency classes should in all respects be upon the same footing as to pay, allowances, and pensions as those of the Regular Army.

There is the country's pledge. Let us see how it has been kept. For illustration, stand nine men in a row, all of them officers who served in the war, three from each branch of the service. Imagine that every one has suffered the identical disability, say the loss of the right arm. Congress comes along, puts eight of them in an automobile, drives away with them, and provides for them. It overlooks the ninth man, refuses to go back for him, and for over eight years leaves him standing there alone waiting for that pledge to be redeemed.

Now name those who have been cared for. To one in each of the Army and Navy corps give the name of Regular, another Provisional, and another Emergency, then call the forgotten one Army Emergency, and you have the case.

Why should eight be taken and one ignored? In the summer of 1918 we would have said that it would be impossible to forget any of those men. Yet, in less than 10 years St. Mihiel, Belleau Wood, Chateau-Thierry, and the Argonne are forgotten. These emergency officers were among those who led the American forces in the great battles that turned the tide of war.

War Department records show that proportionally the battle-field mortality was 55 per cent greater for officers than for the men; that of the officers who laid down their lives on those fields 93 per cent were the emergency officers of the Army. The disabled survivors of this class of officers are those represented by the ninth man left standing. Will the country forget its pledge and permit that ninth man to be left alone any longer?

TAX REDUCTION

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, at the request of a number of of Senators that I call for a quorum before the resumption of the consideration of the revenue bill, so that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] and some others might be here, I wish to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will not the Senator withhold that suggestion for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I withhold it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I want to ask the Senator a question. I wish to offer an amendment on page 27, line 7. I do not know whether there is some amendment to that provision now pending or not.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no amendment pending, but I will ask the Senator to kindly withhold his amendment until we get through with the committee amendments. There is a unanimous-consent agreement that we consider committee amendments first.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is all right. I just wanted to ascertain whether there was an amendment pending.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fess	La Follette	Shipstead
Barkley	Fletcher	McLean	Shortridge
Bayard	Frazier	McMaster	Simmons

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the first amendment to be taken up this afternoon is found on page 205, section 441, tax on sales of produce on exchange.

The House repealed "subdivision 4 of schedule A of Title VIII of the revenue act of 1926, to take effect on the expiration of 30 days after the enactment of this act." The Senate committee sees no reason why that should be repealed. The tax imposed to-day is 1 cent upon each $100 of valuation by transfer. There is $3,000,000 involved. Therefore we ask that the Senate committee action be approved by the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, what is the amount of revenue produced by the item?

Mr. SMOOT. It is $3,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will state the pending amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 205 the committee proposes to strike out lines 11 to 14, both inclusive, in the following words:

Subdivision 4 of Schedule A of Title VIII of the revenue act of 1926 is repealed, to take effect on the expiration of 30 days after the enactment of this act.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I see in the report of the Senator from Utah the statement that the loss of revenue by the repeal of this amendment would be $3,500,000.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator must have the wrong report.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am referring to page 46 of the Senator's report.

Mr. SMOOT. Whether it is $3,000,000 or $3,500,000 makes very little difference.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is true.

Mr. President, I do not desire to engage in any extensive discussion of the question. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] expected to discuss it pretty thoroughly, I think, and may do so before we pass on the amendment. In the meantime, I may say that I do not know whether it is true or not, but I think the farmers of the country are under the impression that all of this tax upon their products will ultimately have to be paid by themselves. It is said that the farmers have not made their views heard upon this subject. It is to be regretted that they have not. But that is in conformity to the custom among our farmers in this country. Ordinarily they are voiceless. Ordinarily they do not complain. Ordinarily they bear their burdens with patience. It is true that such a yoke has been imposed upon certain producers of staple products in the country, that it has forced the farmers, contrary to their usual custom, to voice in tones that are heard from one end of the country to the other their protest against these burdens, against these exactions, against these discriminations.

This is a small matter compared with the things about which the farmers have been aroused. With respect to this question the average farmer knows nothing. He does not know that he has to pay a tax of one cent on each hundred dollars of the value of his products sold on exchange. The farmers probably have not been able to reach the ears of the chairman of the committee or of the majority. Nevertheless the farmers' representatives are looking more closely to-day than ever before into the multitude of little exactions that are made against him. They have not been silent. They have expressed their objection to this tax. It does not raise much revenue. It is claimed that the farmers are opposed to it. I know that if the farmers believe as they do that this is a tax upon the sale of their products, they would be as unanimously against it as the wheat farmers of the West are against the burdens which are placed upon them and the discriminations which are leveled against them.

Therefore there is in my judgment nothing in the argument which the Senator from Utah, the able chairman of the committee, urges to the effect that the farmers have not protested. They have not in the sense that they protested against the heavy exactions which they could not overlook, because it is small and insignificant. It only amounts on the whole to $3,500,000; and yet, finding this little burden imposed upon the farmer, in order to answer the demands of the administration for economy in expenditures, economy in reduction of taxes, economy in relieving against burdens which are unnecessarily imposed, the majority denies the benefit of this little reduction. I am not surprised that there is a feeling among the farmers of the country that the present administration and the Congress of the United States as now constituted have not been as much of a friend to the farmer as his pitiable condition of inequality under the law would seem to call for.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this tax is not upon the products of the farmers at all. Up in New York they will sell 10,000,000 bushels of wheat on the exchange. Not a kernel of it is actually transferred. To-morrow they will sell that 10,000,000 bushels somewhere else. They simply gamble on the stock exchange, and all we ask is that they pay one cent on every hundred dollars that they gamble in the farmers' products. If I know anything about it and if I may judge from what I am told, they do not care about this tax and we might just as well get the $3,000,000 out of the gamblers and the stock exchanges in Chicago and New York, who never take a single penny out of the farmer, and it might as well go into the Treasury.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I wish the Senator would make it so high that it would make that business prohibitive.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what the farmers have asked us to do.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not know of a farmer anywhere who does not realize not only that gambling is morally wrong but that gambling in farm products is destructive. Let us make it so heavy that they will have to quit it.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not a very heavy tax now.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator accept an amendment to make it heavier?

Mr. SMOOT. We would like to get some revenue out of it.

Mr. CARAWAY. We do not want to get revenue out of crime.

Mr. SMOOT. As long as it is not a violation of law but is a moral wrong——

Mr. CARAWAY. I know it is morally wrong. But we have entered into a great period of moral uplift which should encourage us to make the tax so heavy that they will have to quit this gambling. What is the amount of the tax now?

Mr. SMOOT. One cent on every hundred dollars.

Mr. CARAWAY. Would 10 cents on a hundred dollars make it unprofitable to them?

Mr. SMOOT. I have never bought a bushel of grain on the market and I know nothing about what it would be.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am going to move to make it 10 cents in the belief that it will make the gambling prohibitive. I am sure the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] will be glad to have it made prohibitive.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; the Senator from North Carolina is opposed to the 1-cent tax now levied.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wanted to repeal it.

Mr. CARAWAY. But if we could prohibit this exploitation of the farmer, this selling of millions and millions of bushels of corn and wheat that never was in existence and never will be, of millions and millions of bales of cotton that never was grown and never will be, destroying the markets by that process, it seems to me that we ought to be quite willing to tax it out of existence. They sell from 150,000,000 to 200,000,000 bales of American cotton on the exchanges in New Orleans, New York, and Chicago, when 13,000,000, 14,000,000, and 15,000,000 bales covers the total production. I am told that there were sold in Chicago one day last year more bushels of wheat than were produced in all America that year. We have just taken testimony on that point. The price of the product can be manipulated on the market by those gambling in futures.

We have testimony from Mr. Palmer, who is in charge of the cotton division of the future markets in the Department of Agriculture. He said last year, when he was testifying before the committee, that they could manipulate the price of cotton on the future market as much as $7.50 a bale. The testimony in the examination before the committee which has just been had before the subcommittee, composed of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and others, shows that they actually manipulate the price of cotton until they destroy it. One of them said there was no reason at all why cotton should not have been sold for 20 or 25 cents a pound last year to destroy the future market. They destroyed the wheat market. They abolished the myth of future markets representing the world markets. There was a time last year when cotton futures in Liverpool sold at $10 less than they sold in New York, although they ought to have been $4 or $5 higher.

There was a difference of nearly $14 a bale on cotton manipulated through the Liverpool market; and Mr. Clayton—who, I think, is one of the ablest men who deal on the cotton exchange—said that that was due to a local condition; that the coal strike and the industrial depression in Great Britain made it impossible for there to be a demand for cotton in Liverpool, and therefore that was a local condition.

You can not control a world market nor reflect a world market when a local condition will depress the price of cotton $14 a bale. The greatest economic crime of this century is permitting people to gamble in the products of the toil of 30,000,000 of American people. It robs the producer, it robs the consumer, because, if you will notice, the producer always has to sell on the low price. The price of the finished product, whether it is bread or clothes, is always based on the highest price. Therefore, the producer is robbed by this manipulation of prices in what are called future markets, which are nothing but gambling dens; and the consumer is robbed by the same process.

We have a chance to wipe that out in this bill by putting a tax on this gambling in the products of the sweat and blood of 30,000,000 of American producers, and close the exchanges.

They do not reflect a world's market. They reflect a gambler's market. We heard them testify day after day here in the Senate Office Building. We heard Mr. Marsh say that Clayton, Anderson & Co. had manipulated the cotton market and squeezed out a lot of people; and Mr. Clayton said, "I had to carry 172,000 bales of spot cotton to New York and keep it there to tender on tender days, not because they were going to accept it, but," to use his very words, "because they would have taken my shirt off my back if I had not had it there." In other words, by manipulating the market and keeping a lot of unspinable cotton in New York he could break the price of cotton and save his shirt and make millions of dollars, although he took the shirt off every cotton grower in America.

It ought to be stopped. A moral spasm struck this country at one time, I remember, and all of you do, because they had a lottery down in New Orleans. It was a gambling machine, of course; but nobody gambled on that except the man who gambled with his own money. They did not gamble in the sweat and blood of other people. They gambled in their own wealth; and yet the sense of moral justice in this country that desired to shut down public gambling made them close the Louisiana lottery by denying them the use of the mails. They closed it, and nobody has ever complained about it. It was a righteous thing to do; but the Louisiana lottery was mere penny gambling as compared to the futures markets.

We talk about the gambling that takes place in the little kingdom over on the Mediterranean Sea, Monte Carlo. They never risk as much there in a year as is bet on the Board of Trade in Chicago in one day, and yet they bet their own money. These people in Chicago are robbing every wheat grower and every grain grower in America. If we do not feel any repulsion against gambling, if we are willing to say that gambling is all right, that it is not morally wrong, we ought at least to make men gamble with their own wealth, and not gamble with other people's wealth. There is not a Senator on this floor who will vote to-day to establish a public gambling house in the District of Columbia. There is not a man here that would not be driven out of public life if he did it; and yet when you authorize these people to gamble in the price of wheat, which is the bread of the Nation, and in cotton, which is the clothes of the Nation, you authorize the biggest gambling institution this world ever saw, and you permit them to gamble, not in their own wealth but in the wealth that is produced by the American farmer.

You can not do it any longer under the theory that you are having a market that reflects a world condition and therefore is an advantage, because, of all the people that came before the committee, there was not one who did not say that the markets could be and were manipulated. Mr. Clayton himself said, "There is not any excuse for the cotton market in New York." He said, "It is an economic crime to have it there." He said you could manipulate it, and all of them said he had done it. He testified—the greatest buyer and seller of spot cotton in the world—that they manipulated the price of futures in Liverpool last year until it was ruinous; and they said that cotton would have sold 5 or 6 cents higher if it had not been manipulated in the future market.

We owe something to the people who feed us, and we owe something to the people who make the products out of which the clothes we wear are made. Therefore let us put a tax on these transactions that at least will give the farmer a chance under the economic conditions, as bad as they are, to get what the world's price is, and not have it destroyed by a lot of gamblers in New York and Chicago and New Orleans.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, has the Senator finished?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; except that I am going to move to increase the rate to 10 cents.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the only reason why the rate in the past has not been increased is the fact that if we put the rate too high all of the dealing will be done in Canada or England through telegraphic communication from the offices in New York.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question: There is a good deal of gambling in Monte Carlo because we have not got a public gambling place here in the District of Columbia. If it is a good idea to keep your gambling at home, why do you not introduce a bill to open a public gambling place here, so that people will not have to go to Monte Carlo to gamble? The Senator says that if we do not let the people gamble at home they will gamble in Canada.

Mr. SMOOT. That is quite true, Mr. President. I think the sales will be made there.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is not the belief of the people who gamble in these products, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it is. I do not think there is any question about it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have a bill pending into which you can write provisions which will stop gambling in American products by American people anywhere on the earth by denying them the right of communication, which is always under the control of the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. That legislation would be effective.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir; and this will be effective.

Mr. SMOOT. No; if we put this tax at 10 cents, which is very much higher than the present law, the trading will be transferred to England or it will be transferred to Canada.

Mr. CARAWAY. Whenever you can break up gambling in futures in America there will be no opposition to passing a bill that will prevent them from gambling in Liverpool in our products. Besides, Mr. Clayton himself said that you could not hedge on Liverpool, and therefore you could not gamble on the Liverpool market, because there was a difference of $14 a bale there against American cotton. You can not hedge on it; you can not gamble on it there.

Mr. SMOOT. But that is not the question. This is what they will do: The same people that gamble in this produce here will have the sales and the purchases made in England, and immediately reflected here, or send them here. That is exactly what will happen.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then the people who have been gambling do not know what will happen, because under oath they swore that they could manipulate the cotton market in Liverpool, and that they did not dare try to hedge on that market. There is certainly some Member on the floor who is a member of that committee. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] is one.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true where you have a competition between England and the United States; but if it is done from there directly through an American agency here, then of course it is not true.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator from Utah is not familiar with this gambling process. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] heard Mr. Clayton say that local conditions depressed the price of cotton $14 a bale in Liverpool.

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. And everybody knows that you can not hedge on a $14 a bale loss in cotton. Everybody who followed that investigation for a minute knows that there is not anything in gambling in futures for anybody except the man who gambles in them. It destroys the farmer. In the interest of common decency, in the interest of protecting people against a raid upon their products by people who have no interest in them except to make money out of them for themselves, let us stop it. If you will stop it by taxing it out of existence, there will be no trouble in passing any needed legislation to prevent gambling in Liverpool. They can not do it anyway, according to their own statement before the committee; and I shall offer an amendment to increase the tax to 10 cents.

FARM RELIEF

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the President is about to make a devastating application of the scriptural aphorism, "He that hath, to him shall be given; but he that hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he hath."

The predestined victims of this application are the American farmers, multitudes of whom are in bankruptcy and millions of whom are in the greatest distress that they have ever known.

Again the President is on the verge of vetoing the McNary-Haugen agricultural bill. And what is the basis of this assertion? The Wall Street Journal, which for a long time has played the part of a rhinoceros bird to the President, and which habitually not only warns him of every approaching danger but gratuitously and sometimes obstrusively tells him how to avert it, says in a front-page article carried in last Monday's issue, "Why should he sign?"

> Congress has done the expected thing and passed the Haugen bill for "farm relief." As in some details it differs from the McNary bill passed by the Senate, the two measures must go to conference. When the revamped bill finally gets to the President a veto is expected. Political wailing may follow such action by the Executive, but what else could be expected of a President who is not afraid to do his duty? What other course is there for him to take?

The Wall Street Journal is the duly chosen and profusely anointed journalistic apostle of big business. If it has ever favored anything that the common people wanted, or ever opposed anything that the favor-hunting privilege-seeking few have demanded, that fact has escaped my attention. But, in spite of the journal's zeal to serve only those whose incomes are in the "highest brackets," it must, as a matter of simple justice, be admitted that it is the greatest financial publication in the country. As a forecaster of the ebb and flow of Wall Street's turbulent financial tide, and the predictor of the price movement of stocks and bonds, and President Coolidge's actions, if any, the Wall Street Journal is without a peer.

In the circumstances, I hazard my reputation as a political prophet upon the prediction which I now make, that within a few days the Senate will receive a veto message that will prove that the article which I have read from the Wall Street Journal is but the record of a stern master's imperious voice, and that the President has unhesitatingly obeyed it.

As to the poverty-stricken farmers of the Nation, may a benign Providence have mercy on their souls!

TAX REDUCTION

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a bill which I think will lead to no debate whatever.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator will not do that. We have had about 15 minutes to-day devoted to the consideration of the revenue bill. Let us proceed with it.

Mr. BRATTON. This will lead to no debate.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether it will or not.

Mr. BRATTON. If it does, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know what the bill is.

Mr. BRATTON. I can tell the Senator in a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish the Senator would let us go on for a little while to-day with the bill. It can be taken up in the morning at some time.

Mr. BRATTON. I think we are taking more time than it will take to pass the bill if the Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over to-night. Let us go on with the bill.

Mr. BRATTON. Does the Senator object to it?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; to-night.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the pending amendment relates to the tax of 1 cent per $100 in value of merchandise that is dealt in on produce exchanges. In 1917, I believe, Congress put a tax of 2 cents upon every hundred dollars' worth of value dealt in on exchanges and boards of trade. That was reduced to 1 cent some time later, in the act of 1924, I think. Of course, it was a war tax. There had been no such tax prior to that time.

I do not care to get into a discussion of whether or not the exchanges should be abolished. I do not think this has anything to do with that particular controversy. There can be no doubt that a lot of these gamblers speculating on the cotton exchange and on the grain exchanges have manipulated the price; but this goes deeper than that.

The Congress has recognized these exchanges. We have passed laws to regulate these exchanges. There are a lot of people who deal upon these exchanges in a purely legitimate way. I read from the testimony before the House committee of a Mr. Sturtevant, of Omaha, Nebr., in which Mr. Sturtevant discusses this proposition as it affects grain. He says:

> I also represent the Omaha Grain Exchange, at Omaha, Nebr., a corporation which maintains in the city of Omaha a market place where its members engage in the merchandising of grain. That is a similar organization to the Chicago Board of Trade, except that we do not deal in futures, as defined by Congress in the grain futures act. I receive no remuneration for my services to these two organizations.

So very often they deal on these exchanges and boards of trade not in futures but in the legitimate sale of their products. In talking to a gentleman from my State only night before last I learned that they raise some 25,000 bales of cotton on his plantation each year. He told me that he had just sold, and it was the policy there to sell, one-fourth of the cotton they expect to raise on the plantation this year for delivery in October. On that sale that he was making he said that the price to-day was such that he thought perhaps he could make some money out of selling a fourth of it. If it went up, he would sell another fourth, perhaps, and when October came and he made his crop he would make delivery, an entirely legitimate proposition.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, is he a staple grower?

Mr. HARRISON. He is a staple grower.

Mr. CARAWAY. This exchange does not deal in staple cotton at all.

Mr. HARRISON. There is some staple cotton and some short staple also.

Mr. CARAWAY. You know what he is doing. That is not affected by this. He is selling to mills or to merchants for future delivery.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; for future delivery in October.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is altogether different from selling futures.

Mr. HARRISON. On that sale he had to pay a tax of 1 cent for every $100 of valuation on that particular crop. I suppose they do that with wheat, with corn, and with every other product. I suppose that, without question, in the cotton-manufacturing States, such as South Carolina and Georgia and North Carolina any number of the cotton mills buy for future delivery. I imagine that the millers buy for future delivery their wheat and corn and so on. That is an entirely legitimate proposition. There is no question but that on the New York Cotton Exchange and on the boards of trade there is a certain percentage of the transactions which are gambling transactions; it may be a very large per cent. The way to stop that is not by imposing a tax of 1 cent or 10 per cent a hundred of valuation but by legislating them out of business, and I understand the Senator from Arkansas has offered a bill looking to that end, the committee has reported it, and it is on the calendar.

I submit that in these legitimate transfers this war nuisance tax ought to be abolished. It is a troublesome proposition. It does not do any good, and it is merely a burden upon trade and commerce.

It was upon that theory that the House acted. The action was unanimous over there. There was not even a division on eliminating this tax on these exchanges. So the Democrats of the Finance Committee felt that the provision ought to be retained in the law.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, just a moment. I do not care to get into a discussion, but the difference between the man who sells a product which he himself expects to have for delivery and the man who sells it who does not have it and never expects to have it to somebody who never will receive it and never expects to receive it, is perfectly plain. There is the most conclusive answer that we do not need the exchange. There never was a future market for staple cotton in the history of the world. They never sold a bale on the future market, and never will. That shows it is not necessary to have a future market to sell that product. The woolgrowers of America were in bankruptcy until they got rid of the wool exchange. The hay producers got rid of the hay exchange, and when the German farmer once found himself in economic control of the German Empire he abolished the Berlin exchange, which was the greatest grain market in the world. Before the war in Germany, as any of the Senators who have been there will recall, instead of cursing Wall Street, when somebody wanted to "cuss out" something he picked on the farmers, because they were in control of the industry of the empire as was no other single class. When the farmer was in control and could make his will felt, he abolished the Berlin exchange, which was the greatest grain market ever established on earth. It was reestablished because the industrialists and speculators got control in Germany.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. MAYFIELD. It is true that the Senator's bill, which would prohibit gambling in the prices of farm products, has been reported favorably by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to the Senate, and is now upon the Senate Calendar, but we are so near the close of this session of the Congress that it is very doubtful whether we will be able to enact that bill into law, even should it pass the Senate. That is very true, is it not?

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course.

Mr. MAYFIELD. This tax bill has passed the House, and is now pending in the Senate. If the Senate should adopt the Senator's motion to increase this tax, it will prohibit gambling in the sweat and toil of the people of the country who produce the grain and the cotton; it would go back to the House, and could be concurred in, and we could secure legislation on that subject at this session of the Congress, could we not?

Mr. CARAWAY. Certainly.

Mr. MAYFIELD. I was surprised to hear the Senator from Mississippi say that this proposition to eliminate this tax entirely passed the House of Representatives unanimously, and that there was no one from the South on the floor of the House to stand and take a position for the farmers of our country, who feed and clothe the people of the country. Have we not an opportunity right now by the adoption of this amendment to render them the greatest service that we could possibly render?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I say, if the Senator from Arkansas will yield, that the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, in presenting the matter, said he wanted to take this tax off in the interest of the producers of the country.

Mr. CARAWAY. I say to the Senator from Mississippi that when Mr. Gates, who at that time was the president of the Grain Exchange and Board of Trade in Chicago, came before the committee his whole concern was to save the exchange for the farmer. I sat in the committee and heard all those men testify, until I could tell what they were going to say before they opened their mouths. They just wanted to maintain these gambling marts for the farmer.

I do not know a man who gambles on the exchange anywhere who does not want to keep it up. I do not know a farmer whose sole business is farming anywhere who does not want to destroy it. That is the difference.

If we put this in this bill, inasmuch as the people who are going to get the benefit of this tax reduction are people who are not farmers, they will possibly push it through, but every blessed one of them would be against it if you put it in an independent measure. For once we have a chance to tie up their desire to escape paying taxes with a righteous effort to get rid of an incubus that has sat upon the agricultural interests since the Civil War.

One of the most prominent of the gamblers in farm products on the Chicago exchange after a long period of study picked out his occupation as farming. His only farming interest was cornering the market, beating down the producer on the one hand and pilfering from the men and women who eat bread. The activities of such people are gambling activities, and nothing more. The courts have so decided. The Supreme Court of Georgia not a great while ago said these things were gambling. Every time the question has been before courts, they have said it is nothing but gambling. If you would not want to set up a gambling concern here under the roof of the Capitol, where people have to gamble only in their own wealth, are you willing to maintain gambling marts where people gamble in the products of other people? There is all there is in it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I regret to see this particular proposition confused with the matter presented by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. It is involved in it.

Mr. HARRISON. I was just going to answer that suggestion. The Senator has a bill which, I understand, would prevent short selling on the exchange. It would prevent legitimate selling on the exchange, as I understand it.

Mr. CARAWAY. That word "legitimate"——

Mr. HARRISON. There are some people who sell legitimately on the exchange. I thought everybody admitted that.

Mr CARAWAY. No; everybody does not admit it.

Mr. HARRISON. As much as I respect the judgment and ability of the Senator from Arkansas, I say that there are a great many people of ability in the country, and fine people, who believe the exchanges are necessary.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why not extend it to staple cotton, then?

Mr. HARRISON. Because the price of long-staple cotton is influenced by the price of short-staple cotton. I think that is conceded generally. If we imposed a tax of 10 cents on every hundred dollar's worth of value that would not stop the gambling feature. That would only be 50 cents for a bale of cotton. But that would not stop the fellow who wanted to indulge in gambling. If you really want to stop trading in these products by taxation, the tax ought to be more than 10 cents for every hundred dollars of valuation.

Mr. CARAWAY. If I remember correctly, the brokerage is $12.50 on a thousand, and that is 100 bales of cotton. If the tax were 50 cents a bale, we would get $50, so that the tax would be four times as much as they would make on their gambling.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think it would stop the fellow who wanted to indulge in gambling.

Mr. CARAWAY. He would lose 75 cents.

Mr. HARRISON. This was never intended, as I understand it, to operate as a prohibition against gambling at all. If we concede that 50 per cent of the transactions of the Board of Trade of Chicago and of the many exchanges in the country are gambling transactions, we would be imposing a burden on people who were legitimately buying and selling on the exchanges. It seems to me that since it was never intended to be a prohibition or a penalty, merely a tax, small as it is, of 1 cent on a hundred dollars, it is just a troublesome, cumbersome proposition. If the Senator wants to get at the proposition by closing up the exchanges, he ought to make the tax in such an amount that it would really render some service along that line.

Mr. CARAWAY. I think the Senator will agree that $12.50 is the brokerage on 100 bales of cotton. That is $1,000. The gambler must buy on the exchanges in 100-bale lots. That is $1,000. The brokerage is $12.50. This would yield $50, and I do not much believe that even a gambler would care about losing the difference between $12.50 that he received and $50 tax he would pay. My idea of a gambling man is that he is one who has a very keen sense of the value of his own money and not much regard for other people's.

Mr. HARRISON. As I understand the Senator, then, he does not think there are any legitimate transfers on the board of trade or on these exchanges at all?

Mr. CARAWAY. I think there may be some, but they are so overwhelmingly overshadowed by the economic crime that the exchanges ought not to be permitted to exist. The Senator a moment ago referred to 50 per cent of the exchanges——

Mr. HARRISON. That was a guess.

Mr. CARAWAY. It was such a wild guess, that I hope the Senator will pardon me for what I am about to say.

Mr. HARRISON. I based that upon the statement of one of the men connected with the board of trade. I asked him the question, and that is what he said. I never knew him to tell an untruth, so I can not say that it is incorrect.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator will just look at the amount of gambling in one day, he will get an idea. I have been told, and I have seen the figures, that in one day on the Chicago Board of Trade they have sold more wheat than has been grown in America during the year. They have sold more cotton on the exchanges in New Orleans and New York in a week than America ever produced in any year of its history. If they sell a bale more than there is in existence, it is not a legitimate trade, is it? Therefore, instead of about 50 per cent of them being wild, it would be safe to say that nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand deals are pure gambling. I am conscious of the fact that some people think gambling is not a crime, although the strange thing about it is that every State in the United States makes it a crime. There was one of the Western States that had a gambling proposition connected with it; I recall the name of it, but I do not care to mention it; but a few years ago they shut it out. There is not a legalized gambling place, except the exchanges, in any State in the United States. There is not a Member of either House who would stand up and vote for public gambling; yet how infinitely less hurtful it is if a man gambles with his own money, and does not affect anybody else's welfare but his own, in comparison with gambling with the very life of people who produce the things we eat and wear. We all understand it. There will be no mistake. We will know what we are voting for.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas, speaking about the number of bales one is required to buy in order to get in on the exchange at all—100-bale lots. It has been suggested that the exchange should be used and could be used to protect the producer.

I am a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry which is investigating the cotton exchanges and the conduct of the Agricultural Department in connection with the market manipulation last year. I asked the exchange president and the ex-president why, if the exchange could be used to protect the farmer, they did not permit them to deal in 10-bale lots. They said that would not do; that it would resolve itself into a bucket-shop arrangement.

The average production of cotton by the farmer is about 8 or 9 bales. So, if the farmer has to buy a hundred bales in a lot, he can not begin to go into the market when he is making only 10 bales. He has to put up between a thousand and twelve hundred dollars to get in on a 100-bale lot transaction. Therefore he is shut out. It is prohibitive, so far as he is concerned.

I think if the exchanges are going to be permitted in this country, farmers who can furnish the margin for 10 bales ought to be allowed to come in and deal. If you will not let him get any, he is not protected at all, but he is in this predicament. He does not desire to sell cotton, because the price is not adequate, is not profitable. He says, "I will refuse to put my cotton on the market." The exchange man says, "We will see whether you do or not." He goes upon the exchange and sells cotton in 100-bale lots. It is not really cotton. He sells only the name of cotton. He does not deliver cotton. The spinner does not get his cotton through the exchange. While the farmer is retiring to his home with his actual cotton to keep it off the market, here is a fictitious market dealing in fictitious cotton, and it governs the price of the actual cotton. While the farmer is holding his actual cotton for a price that will yield profits, the exchange is clubbing him over the head and using fictitious cotton in unlimited quantities to beat down the price of the actual cotton.

What happens next day? The New York quotation, as fixed by these transactions, is wired to my town in Alabama and all over the South. "Cotton was 17½ or 18 cents yesterday. It broke to 17 cents." The farmer who sells his cotton in the market place in my town gets that figure. Suppose we regulated the exchanges so that every time a man sold a hundred bales of something he would have to go to the farmer and get 100 bales of the actual stuff and deliver to that person; then the exchange would be a legitimate institution. But now they deal in this fictitious stuff. It has the same relation to cotton that a mock orange has to a juicy orange that is produced in Florida. They call it cotton, but it is not cotton. They do not have to have cotton at all to deal in it. They sell in the United States probably 100,000,000 bales of cotton a year where we are producing 12,500,000 bales.

Senators, there is a weak place in this business. The same thing applies to grain. Grain growers may organize. They may start a holding movement through the grain-growing section and agree not to sell wheat for less than $1.50 and corn for $1 or $1.25. As they sit back holding their grain off the market, what are they confronted with? The stock exchange right in front of them is hammering the market to death, and yet it has not got a bushel of grain to deliver. The dealers on the exchange have a supply they keep on hand so they can go through the motion of having tendered something. Nobody accepts it, but it is poured back in the jug and the next day it is poured out again and then poured back again. They are using the power furnished on the exchange to fluctuate and fix the prices, and the farmer becomes demoralized. The merchant he deals with tells him he believes he had better go to selling. The banker tells him there is no telling what is going to happen, that the price is breaking and going lower. What price? It is a fictitious price brought about by a gambling process allowed in the United States. That is what happens to the cotton farmer and the grain grower under this law. Some drastic legislation has got to be had.

Before you can speculate in Pennsylvania Railroad stock you have to get them to list it, agree to it, and then you can take it on the exchange. Before you can speculate in motor stock or automobile stock you have to get the concerns that manufacture them and who hold the stock to give their consent so you can go upon the exchange and deal in it. Why not require them to consult the farmers of the West and of the South and get their consent before they are permitted to gamble in their cotton or grain? That is something for us to think about.

It has been developed in the hearings that with the accumulation of 200,000 bales of cotton in New York out of a crop of 12,000,000 to 15,000,000 bales, they could control the price and break it to pieces. We have some counties in the Cotton Belt that will produce 200,000 bales. I think there are one or two big counties in Texas perhaps that do it. But they accumulate that much cotton in New York and keep it there. The testimony is that it would have an effect on the market. The testimony showed that Mr. Clayton and his company shipped cotton up there and shipped it at a loss, because the difference in price is $4 or $5 a bale when they take the freight into consideration, and after they got it there it was a dead weight on the market but it controlled the market. Various witnesses testified that its presence there helped to beat the prices down and hold them down.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. As I recall, they have paid in interest, freight, and other charges about $9,000,000 to maintain their cotton there. Is not that the price?

Mr. HEFLIN. It was some tremendous amount.

Mr. CARAWAY. And yet the only use they have for it is to break the market whenever it rises.

Mr. HEFLIN. Not only that, but the law provides that a man can not tender any cotton on a contract unless it is seven-eighths-inch long staple. We have had this cotton resampled in New York. There are hundreds of bales that are not tenderable and the spinners do not want it. What happens? This is dog-tail cotton, as we call it. When a man buys a contract, delivery day approaches and they say to the seller, "What are you going to do for me?" "I am going to tender you some cotton out of that supply." The testimony showed that that supply was low-grade cotton and not up to the requirements of the law. Therefore it was not permissible to tender it under the law, but they were tendering it anyway. Some Government official had certified it as being proper and right and eligible to be tendered.

The buyer said when he was told that, as shown by the testimony, "No; I do not want it. I will settle the difference with money." What occurred? Clayton & Co. kept it. If you bought a contract the next day, they offered it to you, but you would not take it. You settled the difference in money. They kept that supply in New York for nearly two years. It never reached the spinner, but it was accumulated in the market place and used as a crop to beat down the price. Expert cotton men testified to that. The ex-president of the cotton exchange testified to it. He has been before our committee a number of times. He is a very able man. He has been president of the New York Cotton Exchange. He said this thing was happening over there. He said that the presence of this character of cotton was a dead weight on the market.

Something ought to be done to relieve the cotton farmer of this embarrassing situation. The grain grower ought to be relieved, too. I have nearly reached the point where I would vote to abolish the exchange outright. I have said here before, and the proposition can not be answered, that when we deal in real estate if we sell a lot we deed that lot to whoever buys it. He sells it and he deeds it. The man who buys it sells it and deeds it. It may be sold one hundred times in a month, but there is always a lot back of the transaction, and only one lot. If that man would undertake to sell 100 lots when he did not have more than one, he would be guilty of obtaining money under false pretenses and they would put him in the penitentiary. But the same man may go upon the exchanges and sell 100,000,000 bales of cotton, damaging the property of the farmer that he is holding for the market, and not be guilty of any crime at all. The man does not have any cotton at all; he does not own any cotton at all; but is selling cotton that is not in existence. It is an outrage. The practice ought to be outlawed.

The woolgrowers do not have to go on an exchange and fare better than the cotton producer. How do they dispose of their supply of wool? They get together and organize. They say, "It costs us so much to produce it. We ought to have this price." The producer is using his power to help fix the price and he ought to do so. It is a God-given right. The buyer meets with the producer and he talks about how much he can afford to pay. He has the mill, and the woolgrower can not spin the wool into cloth. The wool spinner is the only one who can do that, and he can not spin anything unless the woolgrower will furnish the wool.

The woolgrower wants to sell his supply, the wool manufacturer has to have it, and so they get together, with no exchange confusing the situation and misleading them and causing fluctuation of prices. They come together on a business basis, each one of them possessing some price-fixing power, and they reach the point where their minds come together, the deal is closed, the producer gets a profit and the spinner is satisfied with what he has to pay.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. In a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is mistaken about wool.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to reach the point where the producer has got to be consulted. He is not now consulted at all. The producer may hold every bale of cotton off the market that he has and yet they sell millions and hundreds of millions of fictitious cotton on the market and fix the price of the actual cotton which the producer is holding for a better price. It is an outrageous thing and a scandal that it is done.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. MAYFIELD. I call the attention of the Senator from Alabama to the fact that when the wool manufacturer purchases wool enough to run him for a year or to meet his needs and demands, he has no exchange into which he can go and hedge.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no exchange that handles wool.

Mr. MAYFIELD. That is the point I am making, and the manufacturer does not have to hedge his purchases.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly he does. The Senator does not know the wool business. Does he think the woolen manufacturer can go to work and sell goods unless he knows what his wool is going to cost him? He would be broke if he did. He could not do it.

Mr. MAYFIELD. How does he do it?

Mr. SMOOT. He buys his wool.

Mr. HEFLIN. He buys the actual wool.

Mr. SMOOT. Absolutely.

Mr. HEFLIN. And he stores it away.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I said.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is what I want the cotton factors to get together with the farmers and do, to buy the cotton and store it and have it.

Mr. SMOOT. The wool manufacturer to-day may want three or four grades of wool. Nobody can say that a certain clip of wool will shrink 66⅔ per cent, another will shrink 65 per cent, a third 45 per cent, and still another 30 per cent. That can not be determined. Cotton is not that way. Cotton has no shrinkage at all. Wool has the shrinkage and it has the grade as well. There are seven grades of wool.

Mr. CARAWAY. There are more grades of cotton than that.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will not find seven grades of cotton in the same bale. In one fleece of wool, taken from one sheep, you may find seven grades of wool that have to be sorted.

Mr. CARAWAY. Anyway, the sheep growers have kept away from the exchanges. They are able to pay their taxes, while the cotton grower often is not.

Mr. HEFLIN. But when we take into consideration the matter of shrinkage, the buyer of wool or the manufacturer of wool examines the wool. He is an expert and a master of the subject. He tells the seller or the producer that he can not pay more than a certain price for this and that. The producer can either accept it or refuse it.

Mr. SMOOT. All my thought was to suggest that wool has nothing whatever to do with stock exchanges in the United States.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does not the Senator know that Chicago is trying to set up a wool exchange?

Mr. SMOOT. They can not do it.

Mr. CARAWAY. They will do it if the Senator does not watch them. They will be selling the Senator's sheep before they are born.

Mr. SMOOT. They buy the wool.

Mr. CARAWAY. No; they are setting up a future market. They voted to do it some time last fall.

Mr. SMOOT. Nobody is going to buy wool unless he knows what he is doing.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me, from what the Senator from Utah said about wool as compared to cotton, that there is an interesting situation. I am anxious to know what is the necessity for a cotton exchange if there is no necessity for a wool exchange? From what the Senator said, it seems to me we could get along easier without a cotton exchange than we could without a wool exchange, because there is no shrinkage in cotton.

Mr. SMOOT. In the manufacturing business—I am not saying now anything about the gambling business, but in the manufacturing business of cotton, cotton goods, like woolen goods, are made in styles. Those styles change at least once in six months. The samples that are made by a woolen concern are of lightweight goods and heavy-weight goods. The light-weight goods are sold nine months before they are delivered. When they take those first samples and go on the market with them they know exactly that they have to have that grade of wool, and that it will cost so much.

With the cotton business, the cotton man goes to work and gets his samples out six months ahead, or sometimes nine months ahead. Before any of the goods are made, except the samples, those samples are shown and the orders are taken from all over the United States, or wherever the manufacturer's customers may be, whether outside or inside the United States. His styles are made up. He knows exactly how many pieces of goods of this kind and that kind are sold, and he has the orders for them. The manufacturer then buys the cotton; that is, he must know what the price of the cotton is.

Mr. CARAWAY. I know that happens not to be the fact in the cotton business.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator asked about the legitimate part of the business. I am not talking about the gambling part. I am talking about the legitimate part.

If he has sold goods that will require 100 bales of cotton or 1,000 bales of cotton or whatever number of bales of cotton it would take, he immediately buys that cotton on the exchange. It is not delivered then, but they have to deliver it at the price at which he buys it on the exchange.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose there was no exchange, where would he buy it?

Mr. SMOOT. He would have to buy it from the producer and put it somewhere, like the wool man.

Mr. NORRIS. Why should he not do it then like the wool man?

Mr. SMOOT. Because that practice has not been established and it is much easier the way it is. He is protected against a rise in price. I am only speaking of the legitimate part. If he did not buy it in that way and cotton went up, he would be ruined, and he dare not take that chance. That is the legitimate part of the business as far as the manufacturer is concerned. Outside of that, as I said, it is a gamble upon the stock exchange, just as has been stated here to-day.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that not one single bale of cotton is ever delivered to a cotton spinner that is bought on exchange, as the Senator describes. He never takes one single bale of actual cotton in that way.

Mr. SMOOT. Because it is not on the exchange where he buys the cotton. When he calls for it they have to deliver it.

Mr. GEORGE. Then he settles on margins.

Mr. NORRIS. He buys cotton on the exchange that he never gets. He buys his cotton somewhere else that he really uses. The exchange transaction is really only a fictitious operation. The point I am trying to get at is this. I have listened to days of testimony on the subject, and I am still in doubt as to what is right.

What is the necessity of this exchange, now—narrowing it down to a concrete case as applied to cotton—when there is not any, and none seems to be necessary, as applied to wool? I still do not understand why one is necessary in one case and unnecessary in the other.

Mr. SMOOT. When you buy a bale of cotton you have 500 pounds of cotton in it.

Mr. NORRIS. Why, of course.

Mr. SMOOT. But when you buy a bale of wool weighing 300 pounds there may be only 30 per cent or 90 per cent of the 300 pounds of a certain grade of wool.

Mr. NORRIS. Do you not know what it is before you buy it?

Mr. SMOOT. No; no living soul can tell about that.

Mr. NORRIS. Do you buy your bale of wool without knowing what its grade is or what its quality is?

Mr. SMOOT. No; you have to judge that.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, you judge that pretty accurately, do you not?

Mr. SMOOT. Those that are used to buying it do.

Mr. NORRIS. Why, of course. I should like to get rid of everything that is not disputed. The man who buys wool is an expert. He knows what kind of wool he is buying?

Mr. SMOOT. He never buys futures. He never hedges.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I am talking about. He buys the actual wool?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. If it is true that the bale of wool is so uncertain that you can not tell anything about it, it seems to me there is more reason for hedging on that kind of a transaction than on cotton, where that doubt does not exist. I may be wrong; but it looks to me, on the Senator's own illustration, that the necessity for a cotton exchange is less than the necessity for a wool exchange.

Mr. SMOOT. We have no wool exchange.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that. I know that.

Mr. SMOOT. This is the way it is done: There is a grade of wool that is purchased largely by the manufacturer himself. That which is not purchased by the manufacturer is sent to Chicago or Boston or Philadelphia. Those are the three principal places where it is sent.

Mr. NORRIS. Other people buy it for investment, then, do they not, outside of the manufacturer? In other words, there is not any exchange gambling on wool?

Mr. SMOOT. I will explain it to the Senator. It is consigned to the houses, and they charge so much for the storage, and so much for the sorting, and so much for the handling of it. It is in warehouses. The whole of it goes to warehouses. You can go to these three principal places, and they have great warehouses, and this is the fine wool, this is the medium wool, and this is the coarse wool. All of the grades are there, sorted out.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly; and the buyer knows just what he is getting?

Mr. SMOOT. He knows just what he is getting.

Mr. NORRIS. And he gets what he buys?

Mr. SMOOT. He does not do that with cotton.

Mr. NORRIS. He buys the actual material. In the cotton business he does not do that, it seems.

Mr. SMOOT. That is right.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I read two or three letters? I shall not occupy the floor long.

In the first place, I want to say that the largest actual seller of spot cotton in New England wrote me—I thought I had the letter in my desk, but it is in my office—that he would be glad if the futures market were abolished, because he is no longer able to hedge on the cotton future market because of the manipulations.

I have just two letters here that I want to read among dozens that I have picked up. One of them comes from the Charles E. Walters Co., bank stocks, Omaha, Nebr. Does the Senator from Nebraska know the company?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I know them.

Mr. CARAWAY. I will read this letter, because it has so often been said that the bankers would not finance the farm development of the crop unless they had the futures:

THE CHARLES E. WALTERS CO. (INC.),
Omaha, Nebr., March 7, 1928.

Senator CARAWAY, of Arkansas,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Local papers of March 3 print an article from their Washington correspondent referring to a bill you have introduced prohibiting the speculation in grain and cotton futures on the market.

If you are correctly quoted in this article, I want to congratulate you most heartily and express my sincere conviction that a bill such as you propose would do more to help the farmers of this country than would all of the other so-called agricultural-relief measures combined.

It is entirely fair and right that the law of supply and demand should control the market so long as it can operate uninfluenced by speculators, but with considerable study given to the marketing condition of the farmer—of which I am one by proxy—I am convinced that the greatest menace to the success of agriculture to-day is the speculator on the board of trade. I sincerely hope you will be successful in making your bill a law, for only after this speculation has been abolished will the full influence of this menace to the agricultural interests be felt. Congratulations to you, Senator, and success to your efforts in this direction.

Most sincerely yours,

ROBT. L. GOETHE, President.

I picked up this letter:

M. F. JONES & CO.,
Oklahoma City, Okla., March 8, 1928.

Hon. Senator CARAWAY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: A straw vote was taken to-day in the Cotton Exchange Building, of Oklahoma City, to determine the attitude of those present on your bill pertaining to the sale of cotton and grain in the futures markets.

The ballot was proposed and taken by a man who is an avowed opponent of your bill. The result of the vote stood 13 to 5 in favor of the bill, although 3 of those voting were paid employees of a futures brokerage house.

Sentiment in Oklahoma City and this vicinity is strongly in favor of regulatory measures for the futures exchanges, and we consider this poll as truly representative of the sentiment.

We assume that it was the purpose of the person taking this poll to use it for the benefit of the opponents of your bill had the result been satisfactory to them. While writing this letter we have been submitted, and asked to indorse, a petition requesting our representation in Congress to vote and work against your bill and the Vinson bill, this by the representative of a futures brokerage house.

Wishing you success for your measure, we are,

Yours very truly,

W. C. CHISUM, Jr.

These are the very folks who deal with these products.

There are innumerable letters. I have one written by the largest farmer in the State of Tennessee, Lem Banks, who until 1920 was possibly the richest farmer in that country. He owns a large plantation in Mississippi; he owns a large plantation in Arkansas; he owns plantations in Tennessee. I will put his letter in the RECORD. He says there is not any chance of the cotton grower escaping until you abolish futures.

Mr. NORRIS. Who is he?

Mr. CARAWAY. His name is Lem Banks, of Banks & Co. They were for a number of years the largest producers of cotton in Mississippi. They had the largest house dealing in cotton in the city of Memphis. I have not the remotest idea of the number of thousands of acres that at one time they controlled. They control very much less now, however. I shall include in the RECORD his letter, written to me under date of March 5 of this year. I have known him intimately for a long time.

I have here a letter from the C. G. Foust Lumber Co., of Dublin, Tex. They write a highly intelligent letter, and say that they can not prosper until they can get rid of the exchange.

I have a letter from Waxahachie, Tex., from J. E. McDonald.

I have one here from Fredericksburg, Tex., bearing out the same protest.

I could bring over here hundreds of letters from farmers, most of them large farmers, and every one of them is opposed to the present system. Not a single farmer is in favor of it.

I have a letter from the largest farmer—by the way, he is the president of the chamber of commerce in Lake Providence, La., the home city of the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]—saying that "they are ruining us farmers with their marketing machinery called the exchange." I shall put this letter in the RECORD. I am going to bring a lot of them over. I will have an edition devoted to the farmers of America protesting against the gambling that is ruining them.

I ask to have the letters to which I have referred inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WALNUT HILL FARM,
Memphis, Tenn., March 5, 1928.

Hon. T. H. CARAWAY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I read with interest your proposed bill to regulate dealing in cotton futures.

If we ever did have an example of the need of this legislation, we have it now. In round figures, we produced 18,000,000 bales in 1926 and in 1927, 5,000,000 bales less. Notwithstanding the 1927 crop was 5,000,000 bales under that of 1926, the price of cotton declined from October $35 per bale within 90 days.

The only argument that I have ever heard to justify trading in futures is that the cotton merchants who carry actual supplies of cotton, and the mill people, who spin it, need to protect their purchases of cotton by selling what is known as a hedge. The brief synopsis of your bill seems to me to cover this admirably, in that the bona fide owner of cotton can hedge or sell futures against it, but it does prevent the speculation that has been so hurtful.

I do trust that the Senators and Representatives from the South and West will give such support to the proposed investigation of cotton dealing that their eyes may be opened to the iniquity thereof heretofore existing, and that your bill or something similar will be enacted into a law so as to protect the producer.

A few days ago I was talking to a man who is interested in cotton, and he said that if a law was passed that limited trading in futures to those people who actually had cotton to be protected by future selling, it would mean that the cotton exchanges and futures brokers would have to go out of business. If by the passage of a good law they are forced to go out of business, I trust they may find something else to do that will be just as profitable to them and less hurtful to the cotton producers.

The very fact that with 5,000,000 bales less of cotton there has been a decline of $35 per bale in 90 days seems to me to make it a very opportune time to inquire carefully and in detail as to the wherefore thereof.

Yours very truly,

LEM BANKS.

In the morning paper I see that Mr. Alfred Mash, a former president of the New York Cotton Exchange, states that Anderson, Clayton & McFadden kept 185,000 bales of cotton in New York to depress prices. When speculators fall out among themselves the producer may be able to get his dues. I hope the committee will call on Mr. Mash, Mr. Hubbard, and others, so as to go into this as fully as into the Teapot Dome and Sinclair.

C. G. FOUST LUMBER CO.,
Dublin, Tex., March 6, 1928.

Senator CARAWAY, of Arkansas,
Senator SHEPPARD, of Texas,
Senator MAYFIELD, of Texas,
Washington, D. C.

SIRS: Permit me, in a crude way, but the best I can, to urge upon you the vital importance of the measure now before Congress either to emasculate or execute cotton exchanges.

If either one of you gentlemen could see his way clear to leave all the other active public service to your colleagues, only voting and performing routine duties, and devote the rest of his active life in public service, if need be, or until accomplished, to the complete annihilation of futures trading you would accomplish the greatest work of a lifetime and go down in history as the greatest modern servant of the South.

I urge that it can not be done by an evasive or conciliatory enactment. Such a measure must have teeth in it.

All such transactions now get by under the subterfuge that they contemplate actual delivery. It's a blatant lie. Not one in a million contemplates actual delivery. Make it so each contract can be followed up to conclusion. If cotton is not delivered, it was not remotely intended to be delivered. The South was never within my recollection victimized by this pernicious system as it has been the present cotton season.

I don't know how it was done, but I know it was done. I knew all the season that some powerful agency was at work (effectively) to hold down the price of cotton. At every report put out, with one or two minor exceptions, the price flashed up, beginning with the September report, when 30 cents was freely predicted. But after every one of these advances it was plainly evident that some powerful agency was systematically hammering it down. You gentlemen are in position to get the facts.

I am told that one favorite method is by what are termed "wash sales"—that is, by throwing huge offerings out but seeing to it that only the initiated inside few get these offerings. Thus none of the insiders suffer; there is no expense except a small brokerage and contingent fee, and the brokerage probably on a favored basis.

"Carthago est delenda" were the relentless words that old Cato, the Roman senator, closed every peroration, every conversation, with. And Carthage was destroyed.

Yours very truly,

C. G. FOUST.

WAXAHACHIE, TEX., March 2, 1928.

Senator CARAWAY, of Arkansas,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: It was with great pleasure that I noted the approval of your antispeculative futures bill by the Senate Agricultural Committee last Saturday.

This measure, if it becomes a law, will prove one of the most constructive pieces of legislation and the greatest benefactor to agriculture and commerce in a decade.

It is deplorable that the destiny of millions is influenced by the reckless speculation of a few "gamblers" that neither "toil nor spin."

Your bill and your untiring efforts are being watched and lauded by men that have the best interest of our country at heart.

I trust that your measure as now written becomes a law; it is worthy and commendable of you to wage so determined a fight for the welfare of your people.

Wishing you success, I am, with kindest regards,

J. E. MCDONALD.

FREDERICKSBURG, TEX., March 5, 1928.

Hon. T. H. CARAWAY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I notice in the papers of to-day that your antifutures gambling bill has been favorably acted on by the Agricultural Committee. Will you be so kind as to send me a copy of your bill and give me your opinion as to possibility of final passage?

Under separate cover I am sending you copy of circular I am now distributing, this circular going into details as to history, methods of operation, and effect of grain and cotton futures gambling. The only purpose I had in making announcement for the Senate was to carry on an educational campaign. My idea is that the people must be educated to work united and direct for the kind of legislation you have introduced. Unless something drastic is done, and done without too much delay, agriculture is doomed, both in the grain and cotton sections.

Thanking you in advance for your compliance with this request and assuring you of my hearty accord and my willingness to render any service I can, I am,

Respectfully,

DON H. BIGGERS.

BEE BRANCH, ARK., March 5, 1928.

Hon. T. H. CARAWAY,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I see your bill to prohibit dealing in options in futures is reported out from the committee. It is just what the country needs. Options in futures are 1 cent per pound cheaper in cotton than spots. When it comes to a vote have a roll call. Put the opposition on record. The bankers and all gamblers will be against your bill. Perhaps it will never pass both Houses; but stay with them; it's the best bill ever introduced in Congress for the producers of the real wealth of the Nation. Farm products is the real wealth. All must live from the soil.

Your friend,

J. E. SCANLAN.

PALM BEACH SELLING

TITUS COUNTY, TEX.

FARM AND BRANCH: An item in the financial news said: "Cotton declined on account of Palm Beach selling." What does this mean to the world in general and the South in particular? It means that a group of millionaires spending the winter in some magnificent hotel in Florida meet every day around a mahogany table and by pooling their millions offer blocks of cotton in such quantities that the trade can not absorb them, and down goes the market till the selling ceases. What are they really selling and why? They are selling the cotton (now in the seed) to be raised this year; gambling on the seasons, the flood, the drought, the sunshine, and the storm. They are selling the labor, the sweat, and the toil of farmers and their wives, of little children kept from school, working beneath a blazing sun to raise this cotton for these soulless gamblers to depress. They are selling the standard of living of over 20,000,000 human beings, trying to reduce their wages to that of a slave and make peons out of a race of free men. All for the almighty dollar.

Palm Beach selling—selling the blood, the manhood, and womanhood of the descendants of that grand army that followed Lee and Jackson and Forrest and Johnston.

Congressmen of America, can not this be stopped? There is a way and every Congressman knows it. It is but a case of action. Prohibit short selling or pass a farm relief bill.

E. I. LAZARUS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. CARAWAY. There is an amendment to the amendment, to raise the tax to 10 cents instead of 1 cent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; the amendment is section 441, a proposal by the committee to strike out.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the amendment. I will tell the Senator what he can do: He can strike this out, and then that will leave the present law at 1 cent.

Mr. CARAWAY. Before you strike it out it is always permissible to perfect the text as it stood, providing for a tax of 1 cent. The committee moves to strike that out; and I move, instead, to increase it to 10 cents.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry in the nature of a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, the present law provides a tax of 1 cent.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. The House struck that out?

Mr. SMOOT. It struck it out.

Mr. NORRIS. This amendment is an amendment by the committee to restore it?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; to disagree to the action of the House.

Mr. NORRIS. In other words, it is a disagreement with what the House strikes out?

Mr. SMOOT. No; just the reverse, Mr. President.

Mr. MAYFIELD. That is right. If you agree to the amendment, the 1 cent will go back.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand the situation now.

Mr. SMOOT. We ask that the Senate disagree to the House provision.

Mr. NORRIS. In other words, the House proposes an amendment to the existing law by striking out a certain tax. We are now called upon in the committee amendment to disagree to that proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. That is right.

Mr. NORRIS. And the 1 cent will go back in the law if the committee recommendation prevails.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas will state it.

Mr. CARAWAY. As I understand, the House struck out of the old law the provision for a tax of 1 cent. The committee proposes to resubstitute the old law, and that is the amendment now before the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. In other words, the question will be, Will the Senate agree to the committee amendment?

Mr. CARAWAY. That is what I thought. Then I want to move to increase it to 10 cents; and that would be the first vote.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the first vote be taken on this motion, which shall be a substitute for the pending motion:

> Upon each sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell (not including so-called transferred or scratch sales) any products or merchandise at, or under the rules or usages of, any exchange, or board of trade, or other similar place, for future delivery, for each $100 in value of the merchandise covered by said sale or agreement of sale or agreement to sell, 10 cents, and for each additional $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 10 cents.

That carries out the idea.

Mr. SMOOT. That can only be done by unanimous consent. I have no objection to that.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to make a suggestion that I think will meet with the Senator's view.

For several years at different times this proposition has been before the Agricultural Committee. I happen to know that the cotton men of the South are not in agreement on these exchanges. I notice that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are both absent this afternoon. I hardly think it would be fair to vote on this matter in their absence.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the Senator want it to go over until to-morrow morning?

Mr. NORRIS. I was going to say that I think it ought to go over until those two Senators are present.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope if this goes over we are not going to have all of this discussion over again.

Mr. NORRIS. I realize that we are likely to have it, and I have a great deal of sympathy with the Senator's view; but these Senators did not know that this matter was coming up. I do not know why they are absent, but at least they are not present, and they are both very much interested in this proposition—as much as any Members of this body. I know that from my contact with them for a great many years, both of them being on the committee.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no objection; but I am going now to appeal to the Senate that we be allowed to-morrow to take up the bill, and not have any other matters intervene.

Mr. CURTIS. Let us take it up at 12 o'clock and go ahead with it.

Mr. NORRIS. I sincerely sympathize with the Senator from Utah in that proposition.

Mr. CURTIS. I hope the Senator from Utah will not yield to anybody else to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. This is the third day that we have made no headway at all with the bill. We have not even had a vote to-day.

Mr. NORRIS. Most of the time to-day was taken up with the conference report on the flood control bill. The Senator from Utah did not have to yield for that. I would not have cared, as far as I was concerned, whether he did or not; but it would have taken up just so much time anyway. It does not make any difference whether it was to-day or some other day. The debate on the conference report was not wasted, in my judgment, although there was no real opposition to the report.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I am not criticizing the Senator or anyone else. The day before, the whole day was taken up with other matters.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. All I shall do now is to appeal to the Senate that to-morrow we shall begin at 12 o'clock and keep the bill before the Senate so that we may get some action on it.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, inasmuch as reference was made to my colleague [Mr. RANSDELL], I wish to say that at 4 o'clock he went into a conference, I think, on the shipping bill. That accounts for his absence.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana if he does not think these Senators ought to be here when this matter is voted on.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Yes; I think so.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Chair upon what this proposition of the Senator from Arkansas will be hinged? The committee has done nothing except to disagree to the House amendment, and it seems to me we will have to vote upon that question first.

Mr. SMOOT. It can be done only by unanimous consent——

Mr. SIMMONS. Only by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMOOT. And I am perfectly willing that that shall be granted. I think it ought to be granted. The suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], I think, is a wise one; that by unanimous consent we allow the Senator's amendment to be voted on first.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let us see if that unanimous consent is given.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent agreement proposed by the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not think there will be any objection.

Mr. BROUSSARD. It will not be voted upon until to-morrow?

Mr. SMOOT. No; the vote will be to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is entered.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have placed in the RECORD a statement of the views expressed by the American Mining Congress on the tax on sales or transfers of capital stock, section 442, which will come up next. It expresses views in which I concur.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Many of the States of the Union have ceased to have any pioneer mining, while others still need the pioneer miner for their necessary development. Any form of mining containing a shaft or a tunnel is an expensive proposition and the majority of metal mines contain one or the other. They naturally require financing, and as in the initial stages the extent of the body of ore to be tapped by the shaft or tunnel is problematical—although comparatively inexpensive tests may have shown the presence of some ore—there is nothing definite on which a representation can ordinarily be made on which a bond issue can be based. In other words, the pioneer miner for the sinking of his shaft has to depend either on his own resources or on the sale of stock. Ordinarily the resources of the pioneer miner are limited. Consequently, he quite generally is obliged to depend upon the sale of stock.

In other industries the issuance of shares of stock, each representing $100, is quite generally the rule, but the custom of nearly 75 years has been to issue shares of mining stock with a smaller par value, occasionally as small a value as 10 cents a share. This custom allows small investors to acquire stock in mining properties which, in their opinion, would prove of value. This difference between the custom connected with the issuance of stock in mining companies and those of other industries has never been fully recognized in the law imposing stamp taxes. For instance, Schedule A–2 of the stamp tax of the act of 1926 reads, in part, as follows:

"Capital stock issued: On each original issue, whether on organization or reorganization, of certificates of stock, or of profits, or of interest in property or accumulations, by any corporation, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 5 cents."

It will be seen from this that if a corporation issues a stock the face value of which is $100, and another corporation issues a stock the face value of which is $1, each corporation pays a tax of 5 cents per share. In other words, the corporation issuing $1 stock pays proportionately one hundred times as much as the corporation issuing the $100 share. The injustice of this is obvious and can not be defended. As to stock issue without any face value at all, the provision is as follows:

"Provided, That where a certificate is issued without face value, the tax shall be 5 cents per share, unless the actual value is in excess of $100 per share, in which case, the tax shall be 5 cents on each $100 of actual value or fraction thereof, or unless the actual value is less than $100 per share, in which case the tax shall be 1 cent on each $20 of actual value or fraction thereof."

This is a trifle more fair to no par value stock, but using the same illustration, the stock with no par value stated, but an actual value of $1, would still be paying proportionately twenty times the tax of the stock with no par value, but an actual value of $100 per share.

As to transfers of capital stock, the situation is even worse. The law as contained in schedule A–3 of the act of 1926 so far as applicable is as follows:

"Capital stock, sales or transfers: On all sales, or agreements to sell, or memoranda of sales or deliveries of, or transfers of legal title to shares or certificates of stock or of profits or of interest in property or accumulations in any corporation, or to rights to subscribe for or to receive such shares or certificates, whether made upon or shown by the books of the corporation, or by any assignment in blank, or by any delivery, or by any paper or agreement or memorandum or other evidence of transfer or sale, whether entitling the holder in any manner to the benefit of such stock, interest, or rights, or not, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 2 cents; and where such shares are without par or face value, the tax shall be 2 cents on the transfer or sale or agreement to sell on each share."

In other words, the tax on the transfer of a share of stock of which either the face value in the one case or the actual value in the other is a dollar, is the same as the transfer of a share of stock worth $5,000. In other words, in those particular cases, the owner of the $1 share pays proportionately five thousand times as much as the owner of the $5,000 share.

This situation has received the attention of the American Mining Congress. Through its officers it appeared and was heard before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives when the act of 1924 was in preparation, and at its twenty-seventh annual convention held at Sacramento, Calif., September 29 to October 4, 1924, the following resolution urging repeal of this tax was approved by the fourth annual conference on mine taxation and unanimously adopted by the delegates assembled in the convention:

"Whereas the stamp tax on stock of any par value is now computed on such par value, and is therefore the same on the speculative shares of a development company as on the share of the richest corporation whose surplus may be several times its capital, while as to no par value shares the stamp tax is computed on the actual value, but is so adjusted as to be grossly unfair and oppressive on no par value shares of small actual value, which in some cases are thus taxed one hundred times as much for transfer as par value shares worth many times their par value; and

"Whereas the stamp tax is a special tribute exacted from stockholders of corporations, justified only by the existence at the time of similar taxes which were repealed at the last session of Congress, and the stamp tax should also be repealed: It is therefore

"Resolved, That the law fixing a stamp tax on stock certificates should be immediately repealed."

The foregoing resolution clearly defines the issue. It is becoming more and more difficult for the small prospector and mine owner to obtain capital with which to carry on the exploration and development work that in the past has been responsible for the growth and maintenance of the several branches of the American mining industry. The opportunities for obtaining capital with which to pioneer in an undeveloped or unproven area through the usual methods and channels of finance are necessarily limited, and only by securing needed capital in small amounts from persons who were willing to take certain chances has it been possible for the pioneers of the mining industry to create independent enterprises and avoid bowing to monopoly. The manner in which small mining enterprises are in effect penalized by the stamp tax is ably illustrated in the following statement of Mr. M. D. Leehey, of Seattle, Wash., made at the Twenty-seventh Annual Convention of the American Mining Congress. He said:

"The stamp tax on stock certificates is still in force, although it has been repealed as to bank drafts, notes, telegrams, beverages, etc. And that stamp tax is just the same on the speculative par value shares of the small mining company as on shares of the richest bank in America. I now refer to shares having par value, but the stamp tax is still more oppressive on no-par value shares under the ruling of the Internal Revenue Bureau. That ruling makes the issuance tax on no-par value shares of the actual value of $1 just twenty times as much, and the transfer tax just one hundred times as much as on the par value shares of the Ford Motor Co. or the United States Steel Corporation. For instance, the stamp tax on an issue of 100,000 shares of the par value of $100,000 is $50, regardless of the actual value, which may be a million, while that tax on an issue of 100,000 no-par value shares of the actual value of $100,000 is $1,000. The stamp tax on the transfer of that same $100,000 par value shares is $20, and on 100,000 no-par value shares of the actual value of $1 each, as represented by the selling price, it is $2,000, or one hundred times larger.

"We all know that a development company must issue small shares, because it must attract capital on the hope of an increased value in its shares after a few years, rather than the promise of prompt dividends. It is grossly unjust, therefore, to compel a mine-development company to pay the same stamp tax on its small shares of speculative value as paid by the richest corporation in the United States whose surplus is many times its capital.

"The relief suggested is the repeal of the stamp tax on corporation shares. It is a special tax on corporation stockholders. It discriminates against that one class more than did the stamp tax on bank drafts, notes, telegrams, telephone messages, beverages, and candy. Those taxes were more general in their application, but have been repealed, and the taxes on stock certificates should have been repealed at the same time. If, however, its repeal is not possible at this time, then amend the stamp tax law as to all shares, both of par and no par value, so as to compute the tax 'on each $100 of actual value or fraction thereof.' These are the very same words the present law uses in fixing the stamp tax on par value shares changing only the words 'face value' to read 'actual value.' This amendment would fix the stamp tax on all shares according to actual value. Simple justice requires it if the stamp tax is not promptly repealed, as it should be."

Everyone knows that the mining industry is in need at this time of every possible assistance. This fact was recognized by the Ways and Means Committee of this Congress to a certain extent. By section 442 of H. R. 1 they recommended a 50 per cent reduction in the 2-cent tax on stock transfers, and their recommendation was adopted by the House of Representatives and is contained in the pending bill. It does not go as far as it should. At least there should have been a similar reduction in the tax on issues of capital stock, but the House left this provision of 5 cents a share untouched.

The Finance Committee of the Senate proposes to strike out this action of the House, and to leave the tax of 2 cents a share untouched, thus operating to the full the injustice on the mining corporations situated largely in the Western and far Western States. It is stated privately that the reason for this is that this provision also covers the transfers of stock on stock exchanges. The entire tax on the transfers of stock of all corporations, both on the exchanges and elsewhere, for the fiscal year 1927 amounted to $16,674,102.83. A 50 per cent reduction would have amounted to about $8,337,000, but it is also stated that on account of the activities on the various stock exchanges of the country since July 1, 1927, the income from these sources will, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, amount to nearly $44,000,000. If this is correct, a 50 per cent reduction will still leave a collection from this source of $22,000,000, or $6,000,000 more than the collections for the fiscal year 1927.

None of these taxes are paid by brokers; all are paid by customers. In a tax reduction bill why should the amount paid by any class of taxpayers be increased over 250 per cent? Yet, if the information is correct and the collections from this source at the 2-cent rate will amount to $44,000,000 for 1928, it will be a 250 per cent increase over the 1927 figures. Even if this tax is reduced from 2 cents to 1 cent, the resulting $6,000,000 increase will still be a 40 per cent increase over 1927. The buying and selling of stocks on exchanges or elsewhere is an entirely legitimate proposition in which those who so buy and sell have a perfect right to take part. While the owners of the small metal mines of the Western States are not to any great extent interested in these stock-exchange sales, they see no reason why the fact that the increased sales on the stock exchanges are going to result in greater revenue to the Government should be a reason for reversing the action of the House of Representatives and thus compelling owners of mining stock, with the small face or actual value per share, to continue to pay a tax at a ratio of anywhere from one hundred to five thousand times as great as are paid by the owners of stock in other corporations.

In addition, this is a nuisance tax. There are in the United States over 425,000 corporations. Every one of these corporations, especially those in the small communities where documental stamps are hard to get, are put to the trouble of obtaining and affixing these stamps every time a stockholder transfers a single share of stock. In addition, at stated intervals the representatives of the Government visit each corporation in the United States, inspect its books, and if the luckless officers have made the slightest mistake, either in omitting to affix the necessary 2-cent stamps or in affixing a lesser amount than the Government official thinks proper, a fine is collected. Usually this fine is not large, but its imposition and collection involves usually a relatively large expenditure of time, and sometimes attorney's fees. While the action of the House does not go as far as it should, the extent to which it does go should be sustained, and the amendment seeking to strike out section 442 of H. R. 1 from the bill should be defeated.

SALLY MATTIE MACREADY

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, on last night House bill 7992, for the relief of Sally Mattie Macready, widow of Edward Daniel Macready, was reached on the calendar. The bill has an adverse report; and, by order of the presiding officer, the bill was indefinitely postponed.

I now ask unanimous consent that that order be vacated, and that the bill be rereferred to the Committee on Military Affairs for further consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

COTTON PRICE PREDICTIONS

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, last night I was unable to be present. Having spoken nearly three hours yesterday, and having to go over my remarks, I was not able to attend the night session.

The message further announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3740) entitled, "An act for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 19

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate S. 3594, entitled "An act to extend the period of restriction in lands of certain members of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes."

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. EATON (interrupting the count). Mr. Speaker, I withdraw it temporarily.

HEROIC CONDUCT OF CREWS OF CERTAIN STEAMSHIPS

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 1609, recognizing the heroic conduct, devotion to duty, and skill on the part of the officers and crews of the U. S. S. Republic, American Trader, President Roosevelt, President Harding, and the British steamship Cameronia, and for other purposes, with House amendments thereto, insist on the House amendments and agree to the conference asked.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 1609, with House amendments thereto, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair announced the following conferees: Mr. WHITE of Maine, Mr. LEHLBACH, Mr. DAVIS.

A MEMBER OF A SMALL MINORITY PARTY IN THE HOUSE

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker, since it is almost impossible to procure time to speak, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the position and mission of a minority Representative in Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, I am to speak on the mission of a pioneer of a new idea and the position of a member of a small minority party in this House.

Mr. Speaker, all great political parties, both in our country and abroad, were originally small minority factions. They usually stood for some great idea or some principle that was unpopular with the ruling powers, and worked for it until it was achieved. Then the small minority party became a great majority organization.

HOW THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY GOT ITS START

This was the case in our country with the old Democratic-Republicans, organized against the Federalists at the end of the eighteenth century, when the Federalists had passed the drastic alien and sedition law to suppress the "demagogues" and "democrats" who were deemed to be dangerous to the vested interests of that day.

"Democrat" and "demagogue" in those days were held by the ruling powers in about the same esteem as the "Bolshevik" and "radical" of to-day.

Later on the Democratic-Republican Party dropped the word "Republican" and called itself Democratic Party. Those were the days of Thomas Jefferson.

REPUBLICANS ATTRACTED ELEMENTS OPPOSED TO SLAVERY

The modern Republican Party also had a modest beginning. It was founded in Ripon, Wis., in 1854, by simple farmer folks in opposition to the ruling party of that day—the Democratic Party. The Republicans soon attracted all the elements opposed to chattel slavery and cast a rather respectable vote in 1856 for John C. Frémont, the "Pathfinder"—although not nearly as large as the vote cast for the late Senator La Follette four years ago.

Owing to a split in the Democratic Party in 1860 the Republican Party won out under the leadership of Lincoln and Seward. It is unnecessary for me to recite the history of the two old parties since.

ONLY THE SPOOK OF DEAD ISSUE LEFT

All I can say is that there is absolutely no difference of principles, methods, or aims between the two old parties now. They are both ultraconservative and even reactionary. And apart from the negro question down South, which is still spooking there as a dead issue—both old parties are absolutely alike in every respect.

An opposition party, however, is necessary in a democratic Republic—if democracy is to survive.

EVEN THE MERE DISCUSSION ALWAYS PROVOKES THOUGHT

At the present time it is the few straggling and struggling independents that form a rather remarkable opposition. They expose corruption and spot grafters, but can not bring about basic changes. Still these few members of the opposition are of the greatest importance to the country.

The reason for this is very simple: Even one man, as you know, can put on the electric light in a dark room and show up any pilfering that is going on.

But these independents are even more important because by their fearless activity they prevent the ruling capitalists from abusing their power too much. Thus they form a sort of safety valve against the bursting of the political boiler. And also because they form the nucleus for new movements and for progress.

They prepare the public mind for new ideas, which must be discussed, even by the papers and organs of the ruling class. Such discussion, no matter how prejudiced it may be, provokes thought, and leads people to study.

CONGRESS WOULD VOTE DIFFERENTLY ON WAR TO-DAY

A striking example of the fact that the work of an independent opposition does not always fall on barren soil may be seen in the position Senator Robert M. La Follette, sr., and I took during the recent World War.

While both of us were very much denounced—in many places in Wisconsin we were burned in effigy—and while I even got a 20-year sentence and was excluded from Congress a few times for my opposition to the entrance of our country into the war—it is pretty certain that to-day 90 per cent of the Members of Congress, if Congress had to vote on the same war question again, would undoubtedly vote against it.

MUST DO ALL THE DEPARTMENTAL WORK FOR HIS CONSTITUENTS

As to the duties which devolve upon the spokesman of a minority in a legislative body, let me say, to begin with, that he has to do very much of the same kind of work that all the other Members, including those of the majority, have to do.

Only he must do them more intensely. And he usually has more of that kind of work to do.

The minority Member must give consideration to all the problems which affect individually and collectively his constituents whenever they are brought to his attention.

He must obtain for his constituents of all classes the consideration to which they are entitled. He must represent them in adjusting matters before the departments and assure to them fair and full attention of any claims they may have.

WAS SUCCESSFUL IN MOST CASES

In this respect I have been rather fortunate.

The heads of the various departments to whom I have been obliged to turn for and in behalf of my constituents on all sorts of business have uniformly and always been courteous and fair. They have, in many instances, gone out of their way to provide the relief I sought.

To some extent this may have been due to the fact that I did not indiscriminately seek favors, regardless of whether my constituent was entitled to them or not. When the case was meritorious—and I was convinced that it was meritorious—I interceded, and almost invariably succeeded.

In this respect I gladly acknowledge that my thanks are due to the administration—from the President down to the last department chief.

MINORITY REPRESENTATIVE MUST SHOW HIS COLORS

In addition to these duties—and we all know that they constitute an important part of a Congressman's activities—the Representative of a minority—and especially of a minority such as the socialist—with a program of industrial, social, and political reform—must endeavor to propose measures which, if accepted, would afford relief from pressing ills. He must introduce propositions applicable to existing problems, and must strive to secure for them the widest possible hearing.

And in voting on bills that are presented he must so conduct himself as to advance measures designed to bring the greatest good to the greatest number, and to try to defeat legislation that will merely entrench special-privilege groups.

PRESENCE HELPFUL AND DESIRABLE

In this connection it would be well to say that a member of the minority can serve the principles he advocates without becoming an obstructionist. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], the able floor leader in this House of the Republican Party, made the observation during a speech of mine last week that "I was helpful in conducting the business of this House, and not obstructive," and he took that occasion to thank me personally.

The minority Representative has the additional advantage that he is not bound by any party which serves the big interests. This freedom is extremely useful and beneficial.

As to the measures introduced by a minority Member, they, of course, have little chance to become law immediately. During my service in Congress I have not succeeded in having the bills I introduced passed.

Still, it is the general opinion among the majority of Congressmen of both old parties that, for instance, my presence in Congress is very helpful and desirable. My propositions provoke a great deal of thought and discussion both among the Members and also in the public press.

IDEAS ARE LIKE SEEDS IN NEW FIELD

Alone among 531 representatives in the two Houses of Congress, I did not expect—and I am sure my constituents did not expect—that I would have my proposals incorporated into the statutes of the Nation the moment I proposed them.

After all, however, I was no worse off in this respect than the representatives of the Democratic Party, numbering hundreds of Members, whose chances of enacting legislation of any importance are no better, while they are in a minority, than are mine.

Moreover, I was no worse off in that respect than the average member of the majority party, who has little to do with legislation, except to vote "yes" or "no" as the party leaders tell him, when a measure is presented.

For me the same rule holds good that holds good with all intelligent voters. I would rather vote for something I want and which is beneficial, and not get it—than to vote for something I don't want, and that hurts, and get it.

My sole object in introducing bills was to show my colleagues and, to the extent that the public press would permit, show the Nation what the socialists want done and what they would do if they had the power.

Many of the ideas which the socialists have introduced were like seeds sown in a new field. Some seeds are undoubtedly wasted; others grow up and bring a hundredfold harvest.

And many of the propositions which we originated and which were decried by the conservatives as impracticable and even dangerous have become the common property of the people in Nation, State, city, and country.

MOST SOCIAL PROGRESS IS OF SOCIALIST ORIGIN

For example, when I first came to Congress in 1910 I introduced an old-age pension bill, so that those who labor a lifetime may not find themselves in the poorhouse when they are too old to work. There was not a State in the Union that had enacted such a measure or had given it serious consideration. To-day there are six States with old-age pension laws on the statute books—and numerous others considering the enactment of such laws.

The same holds good about our propositions as to child labor.

In fact, it may be said that practically all the beneficial progressive legislation in the social, economic, and political fields were of socialist origin. Thus we have done wonderful work—even as a minority—not only in the preservation and enlarging of political freedom, but also in legislation helpful in the protection of men, women, and children.

THE PROGRESSIVE CAMPAIGN OF 1924

Still there can be no doubt that if we are to make progress in the field of social relations as rapidly as it is being made in all other fields of human endeavor, if the inventive genius of men is to serve all our people instead of a few, a new party alignment is necessary. Our Republic can not endure without such a realignment.

We must have a new party with progressive views and progressive ideas. It is absolutely useless to put new wine into old bottles.

It will be recalled that the Socialists attempted to bring about a new alignment in 1924. As a result of that attempt, 5,000,000 voters, undeterred by all the threats of panics and loss of the "dinner pail," followed our standard bearer on a program which for the time promised relief from the oppression of our plutocracy.

The campaign showed that the Socialists and progressives could and would work together. And the registering of 5,000,000 votes for a program that was denounced by every plutocratic newspaper and from every political platform was an achievement of which they have just cause to feel proud.

MUST BE DONE AGAIN

Unfortunately, the progressive group in the House of Representatives did not show the same degree of persistence and courage that these 5,000,000 voters did. While the 5,000,000 voters were not scared by talks of panics and other dire threats, the members of the progressive group—or most of them—were frightened by the loss of committee assignments and threats of other reprisals. Some of them became extremely apologetic for the stand they had taken in the presidential election.

I say that was unfortunate, because the time is ripe for a political realignment, and because so large a number of our citizens indicated four years ago that they were ready.

I hope that the progressives will soon muster enough courage to stand by their guns and become a nucleus for a new and larger movement.

I know it is a difficult task. But it has been done in the past and it will be done again.

A NEW ALIGNMENT ABSOLUTE NECESSITY

When it was necessary for the solution of chattel slavery to create a new party the Republican Party was organized by uniting the Free Soilers, the Abolitionists, and the remnant of the old Whig Party. I am confident that we will very soon have a new political party based upon what the Socialists, Farmer-Laborites, and the progressives desire, and united to oppose the autocracy of the present-day capitalism.

It is true that capitalism is infinitely stronger and better intrenched than were the slave owners in their day. The economic trend of our civilization, however, the better education of the masses, and the greater power of resistance of the common people are factors that will enable us to overcome this disadvantage.

This new alignment, as I have said, is an absolute necessity. It must be honest, consistent, and give the common people of all classes relief.

THE GENERAL OUTLINE

It must stand for measures that remove the causes of corruption. It must take away the temptation for corruption.

It must bring more and more activities that are necessary for the welfare of all under the control of all.

It must also try to enact legislation that will enable the individual to live a fuller and freer life.

Such a party must not only take special care of the city worker and of the farmer but also of the small business man while the present system lasts.

SOCIALIST PARTY STEADFAST IN WAR AND PEACE

The only party which has always stood for securing the greatest economic advantage for the largest number of individuals is the Socialist Party. It is the only party that has always sought to remove corruption by removing temptation.

It is the only organization that stood upright in war and in peace.

MY GUIDING LINE

The Socialist Party is willing to cooperate with any and all other organizations and with any and all individuals striving for the same aims and objects, however different their individual point of view, provided they are consistent and sincere in their desire to promote human welfare and national progress.

As for myself, well, that was my guiding line in the National Congress of the United States. And that will always be my aim and object in the future.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a digest of the proposed Muscle Shoals act of 1928, which is to be taken up to-day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

DIGEST OF PROPOSED "MUSCLE SHOALS ACT OF 1928"

(Union Calendar No. 324, S. J. Res. 46, an amendment in the nature of a complete substitute for the Norris resolution)

Section 1 creates the "Muscle Shoals corporation of the United States" to maintain and operate the Muscle Shoals properties for national defense, agricultural and industrial development, navigation, and flood control.

Section 2 provides for appointment by President with Senate confirmation of five directors, not more than three of whom shall be members of same political party.

Section 3 fixes terms of office; provides for filling vacancies, stipulating that vacancies shall not impair action; fixes compensation of board members at $50 per day, plus expenses, authorizing 150 days' pay during first year and 100 days in succeeding years; forbids any director having any financial interest in any business that may be adversely affected by the success of Muscle Shoals introducing concentrated fertilizers; empowers the board to exercise all the powers of the corporation and prescribes that no one may be a member of the board unless he professes a belief in the feasibility, wisdom, and probability of success of producing and selling fertilizers as provided by the act; authorizes corporation to appoint general manager for 10-year term, who shall select two assistants, one competent in fertilizer production, the other in power production and distribution, and all other employees; combined salaries of three chief operating officers may not exceed $50,000.

Section 4 authorizes $10,000,000 capital stock which is subscribed by United States.

Section 5 defines the broad general powers of the corporation, including inter alia authority to sue and be sued, to lease or purchase personal property, and to exercise the right of eminent domain.

Section 6 confers important special powers on the corporation, as follows:

(1) Gives it complete possession of the facilities and properties at Muscle Shoals with direction to produce and sell nitrogen and its products for agricultural and military uses, and to sell surplus electric power as later defined, also gives authority to build and operate any additional plants at Muscle Shoals, Ala., the corporation may consider necessary.

(2) Directs it to make, distribute, and sell fertilizers, fertilizer ingredients, and by-products of fertilizer manufacture.

(3) Authorizes it to make explosives, etc., for the War and Navy Departments at cost and requires it to supply the Secretary of War without charge all power necessary for the operation of locks, etc.

(4) Directs it to produce, distribute, and sell electric power under limitation later specified.

(5) Authorizes it to experiment in nitrogen production for military and agricultural uses and empowers the President to assign to the corporation experts from other Government services.

Section 7 announces as the policy of Government regarding distribution and sale of surplus power that (a) Muscle Shoals shall be used for fertilizer purposes in time of peace, and that no electric power shall be considered surplus that can be used profitably for fertilizer manufacture; that (b) surplus power shall be sold at the best prices obtainable, and that the corporation may buy or build transmission lines or sell at the plant to those who have transmission facilities; and that (c) the board shall run the steam plants in connection with the hydroelectric plants.

Section 8. (1) Declares it to be the policy of Government to distribute fertilizers made at Muscle Shoals equitably among States, Territories, and possessions. (How can this be done to Maine, Florida, Hawaii, and California as compared with Alabama and Tennessee?)

(2) Provides that sales through intermediaries to farmers shall be under contracts that fix maximum prices. (Generally speaking, fertilizer manufacturers can not fix resale prices, though cooperative associations and farm bureaus can.)

(3) Prescribes the basis on which the board shall fix prices which shall include production, marketing, and distribution expenses properly chargeable against the particular product, and after five years shall have elapsed interest at 4 per cent, but then only on the investment of the United States in capital stock, and not on any part of the value of a property that has already cost over $125,000,000.

(4) Defines purposes of corporation to provide "plant food in abundance for agriculture and to users of commercial fertilizers at as reasonably low cost as possible, and net profits derived from sale of surplus electric power * * * shall be used toward that end for the first five years of the life of the corporation."

(5) Forbids sales of nitrogen products outside the United States and her possessions except to allies in case of war.

(6) Prescribes that for five years fertilizer and ingredients shall be sold at actual cost, cash in advance, f. o. b. cars, Muscle Shoals, and that preference shall be given (a) to farmers, farmer groups, and farm organizations, and (b) to States and State agencies for resale to farmers, and not until thereafter may sales be made "to private manufacturers, mixers, and merchants of fertilizers."

(7) Provides that after five years half of the power receipts shall go into the Treasury, but would be earmarked "Muscle Shoals Receipts," and after 10 years all power receipts would go into the general funds of the Treasury, but still be earmarked.

Section 8, paragraph E, directs the board to begin making concentrated fertilizers by using the cyanamide process and the existing plant, but also authorizes it to employ other processes of fixation; prescribed also that the board "shall construct and operate a plant or plants at Muscle Shoals for the production of phosphoric acid and/or potash to be combined with nitrates and nitrogenous products in the manufacture of a complete fertilizer."

Section 8, paragraph F, permits the board for five years to donate 5 per cent of the fertilizers produced to farmers through county agents, agricultural colleges, or otherwise, for experimentation, education, and introduction. If in any year of the first five as much as 25 per cent of the product remains unsold, the board may give away an additional 10 per cent of the unsold surplus, or a total of 15 per cent.

Section 8, paragraph G, gives the board power to buy any fertilizer ingredients and to mix them with any other ingredients manufactured by the corporation; in other words, puts the United States Government, through this corporation, completely in the fertilizer business.

Section 9 confers complete control and possession of nitrate plants 1 and 2, all real estate and equipment, laboratories, the Waco lime quarry, the Wilson Dam (No. 2), its power house, and all hydroelectric equipment, excepting only the locks, to the Corporation, and authorizes the President to transfer any other properties of the United States to it as may be deemed necessary or proper.

Section 10 provides for the principal office of the corporation to be at Muscle Shoals, and that its legal residence shall be the northern judicial district of Alabama.

Section 11 requires filing of reports with the President and with Congress in December of each year, and provides for certified public accountants' audits.

Section 12 reserves the right to the United States to take possession of the whole property in event of war, indemnifying persons whose contracts for either electric power or fertilizers may thus be invalidated.

Section 13 empowers the board to sell surplus electric power not used for fertilizer or munitions or in operation of locks or other navigation works under contract for periods not exceeding 10 years.

Section 14 declares the policy of the Government to distribute surplus power from Muscle Shoals equitably among the States within transmission distance.

Section 15 to place the corporation in a strong competitive position, expressly authorizes the corporation to construct transmission lines from Dam No. 2 and its steam plant with provision that political units or public or cooperative organizations not for profit, engaged in supplying electricity, if they construct their own transmission lines, may be contracted with for a term not exceeding 15 years.

Section 16 authorizes completion of steam plant at nitrate plant No. 2, and installation of additional generating machinery at Wilson Dam without appropriating funds for the purpose with a view to the efficient use of all power generated.

Section 17 authorizes the Secretary of War, under conditions described, to construct the Cove Creek Dam so that an increased amount of primary power may be developed at Dam No. 2 and others below; and authorizes the Federal Power Commission to compel contributions under the Federal water power act by persons it may in future license to build dams in the Clinch or Tennessee Rivers below Cove Creek Dam.

Section 18 authorizes the Secretary of War to exercise the right of eminent domain in any necessary way in connection with obtaining the site and constructing Cove Creek Dam and the reservoir above it and to make necessary agreements with all persons affected by this project; provides also that when Cove Creek Dam, its transportation facilities, and power house are completed, the whole shall be turned over to the Muscle Shoals corporation for use and operation.

Section 19 gives access to the corporation, as a Government instrumentality, to the files of the United States Patent Office.

Section 20 provides penalties for misuse of public moneys, property, etc., for fraud on the part of corporation employees as to the book records or other statements of the corporation and for accepting compensation or rebates involving any intent to defraud the corporation or defeat its purposes. Fines ranging up to $25,000 or imprisonment up to 15 years, or both, are provided.

Sections 21, 22, 23, and 24 contain miscellaneous provisions authorizing appropriations, repealing conflicting legislation, making the act immediately effective, and reserving the usual right to amend.

THE FLOOD CONTROL ACT OF 1928

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the conference report upon the flood control bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, the approval of the conference report by both the House and the Senate and the signing by the President of the measure for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and its tributaries on May 15, 1928, completes the most important piece of legislation presented to the Seventieth Congress. For the first time in history the Federal Government assumes responsibility, at its own expense, for the protection and security of the alluvial valley of the Mississippi River from destructive floods, and also the improvement of the river for the purposes of navigation. This is a final victory after a struggle of more than 100 years. It is not necessary now to go into details of the contest or the gradual steps leading to this final accomplishment; those have been recited time and again. It might be said, however, that only the disastrous flood of 1927 could so impress the Nation with the vital importance of this undertaking as to bring the Congress to a realization of the duties and responsibilities of the National Government.

During and following the flood of 1927 investigations and surveys were made, with reports to Congress, both by the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army and by the Mississippi River Commission, the latter having been in charge of the work on the lower river for the past 50 years.

The Chief of Engineers submitted to Congress a plan dealing with the problem of flood control from Cape Girardeau to the Head of Passes, recommending the strengthening of the levees, increasing their grade and height, bank revetment for the stabilization of the channel, spillways, diversion channels, and flood ways at a total cost of $296,000,000.

The Mississippi River Commission recommended a plan covering practically the same section of the river—what is termed the alluvial valley—and the tributaries and outlets in so far as they are affected by the flood waters of the Mississippi River. This plan outlined substantially the same program for levees on the main river, the tributaries and outlets, and the adoption of spillways, flood ways, and diversion channels, at a total cost of $407,000,000.

In each engineering report the proposed location of the protective works is practically the same, but the works recommended differ materially in many instances in respect to character and type of construction.

In addition to these reports, there was also submitted the report of the Spillway Board, which was created by an act of Congress in 1926, and which had made a survey in respect to controlled and regulated spillways between Point Breeze and Fort Jackson in Louisiana. The report of this board was adopted by the Mississippi River Commission.

In respect to spillways on the main river in the vicinity of New Orleans both reports are in agreement as to the diversion at Bonnet Carre. The spillway board and the Mississippi River Commission reports recommend an emergency spillway below New Orleans. This is not in the report of the Chief of Engineers.

The report of the Mississippi River Commission and the spillway board for an increased diversion at Old River and through the Atchafalaya is for a maximum capacity of 900,000 cubic second-feet of water for the highest flood predicted—that is, 25 per cent greater than the flood of 1927. The plan of the Chief of Engineers would divert at this point, in the highest predicted flood, 1,500,000 cubic second-feet. There is a wide difference in the character of the engineering works to take care of the diversion as between the two plans.

For the Cypress Creek diversion, the plan of the Chief of Engineers for the greatest flood predicted would divert 900,000 cubic second-feet, while that of the Mississippi River Commission would divert 600,000 cubic second-feet. There is a radical difference as between the engineering plans of the two reports both as to the volume of water to be diverted and the works for its control and regulation.

Investigations were also made as to the effect upon flood heights and as to the control thereof by the construction of reservoirs. To speak generally, the report of the reservoir board does not indicate that material effect can be had on flood heights on the lower river, except where reservoir sites might be found on the tributaries bordering on the alluvial valley. The phase of this report that attracted the most attention was that showing that upon the White and Arkansas Rivers in the State of Arkansas, 11 reservoirs could be constructed that would lower flood heights 8 feet at Arkansas City and 5 feet at Old River. This would in any flood except such as 1927 avoid the necessity for flood ways, but would not dispense with the requirement for spillways below Point Breeze.

With these official reports and the hearings thereon before the Flood Control Committee of the House and the Commerce Committee of the Senate, it manifestly followed that additional investigations and surveys should be made and more accurate information and data collected in order to proceed with this gigantic project in a businesslike way. It is not a criticism of any department that this position was taken, because it was very clearly demonstrated by the hearings that sufficient time and opportunity had not been had to make as definite a report as should be had before the work was begun.

Therefore the first section of the flood control act provides as follows:

Provided, That a board, to consist of the Chief of Engineers, the president of the Mississippi River Commission, and a civil engineer chosen from civil life to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, whose compensation shall be fixed by the President and be paid out of the appropriations made to carry on this project, is hereby created; and such board is authorized and directed to consider the engineering differences between the adopted project and the plans recommended by the Mississippi River Commission in its special report dated November 28, 1927, and, after such study and such further surveys as it may deem necessary, to recommend to the President such action as it may deem necessary to be taken in respect to such engineering differences, and the decision of the President upon all recommendations or questions submitted to him by such board shall be followed in carrying out the project herein adopted.

This provision gives opportunity for such investigation, and it is only fair to the Government itself, the people of the lower Mississippi Valley, and the Nation as a whole that such investigation should be made in an effort to work out and finally adopt a project that will bring about an effective solution of the flood-control problem.

The law further provides that—

Such surveys shall be made between Baton Rouge, La., and Cape Girardeau, Mo., as the board may deem necessary to enable it to ascertain and determine the best method of securing flood relief in addition to levees before any flood-control works other than levees and revetments are undertaken on that portion of the river.

This is an important provision of the act and had the urgent support of all sections of the Mississippi Valley. The board created by this act will undoubtedly give this section most serious consideration, because it involves all the States directly affected in the execution of this project. This affords an opportunity for further investigation of the effect of reservoirs on the White and Arkansas Rivers and in other localities where substantial results might be obtained. The feeling is general that this phase of the flood-control problem has not been given the consideration it deserves.

The act further states:

Provided, That all diversion works and outlets constructed under the provisions of this act shall be built in a manner and of a character which will fully and amply protect the adjacent lands.

This provision is important, because it implies directly that diversion works shall be constructed so as to control and confine the volume of water taken from the main channel of the river.

There is a further provision:

That pending completion of any flood way, spillway, or diversion channel, the areas within the same shall be given the same degree of protection as is afforded by levees on the west side of the river contiguous to the levee at the head of said flood way.

The purpose of this is that pending all the surveys and the completion of the works in any flood way, spillway, or diversion channel, including the acquisition of all rights or easements necessary and rights of way for levees and the construction thereof in a manner to afford ample protection to the areas within such proposed flood ways or diversion channels, these areas shall have the same degree of protection as other portions of the Mississippi Valley included within the project. These provisions are specific and direct instructions as to what shall be done in carrying out this law. It might safely be assumed that the Federal Government or the agencies carrying out its purposes would take every precaution to afford equal protection to all and not to bring unnecessary damage to any section, but the interests are so great, and the failure to conduct the work with proper care and caution would be so disastrous, that it is eminently proper that these views of the Congress be expressed affirmatively.

Section 2 simply recognizes that on account of contributions made by the States and local interests in the past that no further local contributions in execution of this project are required.

Section 3 limits the contributions by States and local interests to supplying levees on the main stem of the Mississippi River and to maintaining the levees on the main river after construction, but limits that obligation to supervision and minor repairs. With the authorized appropriation of $325,000,000 to carry the work to completion, the people of the lower Mississippi Valley are relieved from the burden of levee taxation under which they have labored in the past without satisfactory results.

During all the hearings and the efforts to secure the passage of flood-control legislation the greatest degree of controversy centered about the question of local contributions on the one hand and, on the other, the obligation of the Federal Government in respect to payment for lands or rights of way over lands in diversion channels or flood ways, as well as the complete cost for the construction and use of such works as part of the flood-control program.

The contention of the lower valley against the injustice of further local contributions has been sustained in this act, with the exception above stated, and the obligation of the Government is definitely fixed by the language in section 4, as follows:

The United States shall provide flowage rights for additional destructive flood waters that will pass by reason of diversions from the main channel of the Mississippi River: Provided, That in all cases where the execution of the flood-control plan herein adopted results in benefits to property such benefits shall be taken into consideration by way of reducing the amount of compensation to be paid.

Considerable misrepresentation has unfortunately been broadcast over the country and impressions formed that have not been justified about this phase of the legislation. It was not the intention of the Senate or the House in the passage of the bill which was finally signed to subject the Government to any expenditures that were not fair or necessary in the execution of the project when finally adopted, and especially that phase of it dealing with diversions, spillways, and flood ways. The conclusion was reached that such diversions when planned, made, and executed by the Government should be entirely at national expense and national responsibility. It was realized that when the Government undertook the control of the flood waters of the Mississippi River as a national function, under the Constitution, that it could and had the authority to construct and plan the works necessary to effect that purpose. The object and intention of section 4 is that the Government shall provide the rights of way and construct the protective works where flood waters are to be diverted and shall provide flowage rights for additional destructive flood waters that will pass, not normally, but by reason of diversions from the main channel of the river. It is true that the word "additional" negatives the idea that the Government would be called upon to pay for flowage rights over natural channels or over lands flooded in normal years.

The contention has been made that certain sections of the valley are natural flood ways and therefore should be used for the protection of other portions of the valley. This is not true. Natural channels are the only portions of the valley that could be termed natural flood ways as distinguished from other portions. Before levees were constructed the entire valley could have been termed a natural flood way and in the flood of 1927, 18,000 square miles of the 30,000 square miles in the alluvial valley operated as a flood way. Under either plan, or any plan that may be adopted adjusting differences between the plans presented, the entire valley is to be protected without the use of flood ways against destructive flood waters except in a flood of the proportions of that of 1927 or greater, which is estimated to happen about every 15 or 20 years. In other words, the waters are to be kept within the natural channels by levees and bank revetments. Destructive flood waters is that volume which passes out of the natural channel; additional destructive flood waters is that volume which is deliberately diverted on the plans of the Government over a section of the valley not overflowed in normal years. So it naturally follows as a matter of justice, clearly expressed by Congress, that whatever rights of way and flowage rights are found necessary to carry out the purposes of the act shall be provided by the Government.

The second clause of section 4 simply provides the method by which the Government shall proceed to acquire lands, rights of way, and flowage rights.

The remainder of the act provides a $5,000,000 emergency fund for flood-control work on tributaries and authorizes an additional $5,000,000 for a complete survey of those tributaries that contribute to the floods of the alluvial valley of the Mississippi, for the purposes of flood control thereon, with reports to be made to the Mississippi River Commission and by it through the Secretary of War transmitted to Congress.

All who have had experience with legislation and work for control of flood waters on the Mississippi realize that we are now just at the beginning of the final solution of the problem; that there will be additional surveys; that there will be changes in plans as the work proceeds; and that it will take the best skill of the Engineer Corps of the Army and those from civilian life, as well as complete cooperation among all the authorities engaged in the work, including the States and local interests involved, to effectively bring about the solution contemplated by this legislation.

This final result has been attained by diligent work in Congress and by the assistance and support of the entire Nation. It demonstrates that the Congress and the executive branch of the Government are responsive to the needs of the country when those needs are made known and the merits of the problem presented in such a way as to place behind the legislation the support of public opinion.

As the work proceeds, the Congress will be advised each year as to the progress made and as to the amount of money required for the continuation of the work. The Government agencies in charge will no doubt keep in close touch with each community and each State immediately affected and show a spirit of consideration and cooperation necessary and required to secure the results intended. On the other hand, the communities and the States will meet such cooperation in the same splendid spirit that has been manifested in the past.

The vast expenditure involved will be an investment on the part of the Government because it will secure the ultimate development of that section of the Nation with the greatest possibilities for expansion in agriculture and industry. The returns to the Government will be many times the amount of the expenditure and its safety and security will be enhanced in every way. So I repeat that this, the flood control act of May 15, 1928, is, for the valley, the most important legislative achievement of the present or any other Congress.

RAISING THE QUESTION OF CONSIDERATION

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I desire to address a parliamentary inquiry to the Speaker. This is Calendar Wednesday. Under the rules of the House, the question of consideration is always in order. Under the Calendar Wednesday rule, when a bill on the Union Calendar is called up the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill. If a question of consideration is to be raised to the bill which has been called up, should that question be raised in the House or should it be raised in the committee after the House has resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union? I am aware, of course, of the decision by Mr. Speaker Clark in which he ruled that the question should be raised in the committee. I know the Speaker has considered the matter. I do not know whether he has reached a determination as to what is the proper parliamentary procedure in such a case. Hence the inquiry. If the Speaker is prepared to and cares to answer that parliamentary inquiry I would be very glad to have him state whether the question must be raised in the House or in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Before answering the question, the Chair would be very glad indeed to have the benefit of the views of the gentleman from Georgia upon that subject, if he would care to express them.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me unquestionably that the question of consideration should be raised in the House. If the House does not desire to consider the bill it is foolish for the House to resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill, and in that way waste time. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, if the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with directions to that committee to consider a bill, the committee being the agent or the creature of the House, the House being the principal, I do not think that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union has any right to pass upon the question of consideration. The House itself, it seems to me, has determined that when it resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with instructions to consider the bill. It seems to me that all of the logic in the matter is that the House should determine the question of consideration if that question is raised.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Does not the gentleman think we have an analogy to his proposition every time a bill on the Union Calendar is called up on Calendar Wednesday and unanimous consent is asked by the chairman of the committee to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole? Many times on Calendar Wednesday a bill on the Union Calendar is called up and this request is made. The rule is that the House shall automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill when such a bill is called up; but oftentimes the chairman of the committee, immediately before this is done, asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Does not this practice of the House lend strength to the gentleman's argument that the House before going into committee should decide the question of consideration?

Mr. CRISP. I agree with the gentleman. Furthermore, suppose the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider a bill, and the committee raises the question of consideration and decides it will not consider it. The committee goes back to the House and reports that fact to the House. Suppose, then, the House sends them back again to consider the matter. The House is the principal, and therefore it seems to me the question should be decided by the principal, the House, as to whether the agent shall consider the bill or not.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am very glad that the gentleman from Georgia has raised this question. The purpose of every rule of the House is to expedite business. There is no question that business will be expedited in the manner suggested by the gentleman from Georgia. In addition to that, it seems to me that the automatic going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union by the House does not have the exact effect that sometimes has been given to it. The truth is that the chairman of the committee which has the Calendar Wednesday business in charge calls up a bill for consideration, and thereupon the bill is reported by the Clerk. After the bill has been reported by the Clerk the Chair announces that the House does automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill, and it seems to me that at that point, before that action is taken, there is a place in the proceedings providing a parliamentary opportunity to raise the question of consideration.

Mr. CRISP. Undoubtedly the Calendar Wednesday rule does not repeal all the other rules. The practice is on Calendar Wednesday, if the chairman of a committee calls up a bill which is to be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, simply for the purpose of saving time, to make unnecessary a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole, the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. But that does not repeal the other rule. That matter could be determined, pending the automatic going into Committee of the Whole, by raising the question of consideration; and if that question is raised and sustained the House does not go into Committee of the Whole. If the question is voted down, then the House goes automatically into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Notwithstanding the precedents, I think the House would be very glad to have the views of the Speaker on the matter as of a matter de novo.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I think the proceedings of the day are important enough to have a quorum present. I call the attention of the Chair to the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold that until the Chair rules?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, may I say a word?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I concur in the reasoning of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]. But there is just one suggestion I would like to offer, and that is, if the question be determined in the House, of course, it is determined by a quorum, theoretically, at least, whereas if it be remitted to the Committee of the Whole for determination the question may be settled by only a hundred Members. Of course, the precedents are the other way. But it seems to me the reasoning would justify an overruling of the precedents.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. According to the procedure followed here a short time ago under the leadership of the gentleman from Tennessee, does he think it is quite accurate to say that the question of consideration is ultimately determined by the committee? The gentleman will recall the fact that the committee automatically rose and came back into the House to have the House pass upon the vote of the committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman is quite correct, and that was the proper practice, for the committee to rise, for the very reason that that did enable the whole House to pass upon the question of consideration. But it would be expedient to do it in the first instance instead of in that way.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I suppose the precedents on this point have been called to the Speaker's attention. As the Speaker is doubtless aware, this question was passed on by both Speaker Clark and Speaker GILLETT on various occasions in the Sixty-fifth, Sixty-sixth, Sixty-seventh, and Sixty-eighth Congresses.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is glad to answer the question of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]. While not of extreme importance, the question raised is of considerable importance. The last time the question was raised in the House was on March 20 of this year, when the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] raised the question of consideration in the House. The present occupant of the chair, following the precedents, held that the proper place to raise the question of consideration was in the committee. It was raised in the committee, and then the question came up as to whether the committee must at once report back to the House its decision on the question of consideration. The occupant of the chair at the time, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOPER], held that it did. Therefore the question was ultimately determined by the House, which voted to consider the bill.

Now, it does seem perfectly apparent that on that occasion the House went through two practically useless motions; first, in going into Committee of the Whole; and then, second, raising the question of consideration and reporting back to the House what it had decided on the question of consideration, the House having ultimately to determine.

Now, the Chair, of course, is rather loath, under the rules, to overturn by his decision long and well-established precedents;

but numerous Speakers—at least one Speaker—expressed grave doubt some years ago as to whether we ought not to overrule this precedent, in response to a similar inquiry by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] as to whether the question of consideration should be raised in the House or in the committee; and Mr. Speaker GILLETT said:

The Chair is not disposed to express his opinion offhand without careful study of the question as to which would be the better practice; but, as the gentleman from Georgia suggests, the ruling has been—and it was a very carefully considered ruling by the last Speaker of the House when this question came up—that the question of consideration should be raised in the committee, and not in the House; and although to raise the question of consideration in the committee is an anomaly, the Chair would not feel disposed to overrule that without a very thorough study and consideration of the question.

The Chair has made careful investigation of that question, and has prepared a decision of some length, making quotations from the precedents, which, with the permission of the House, he will insert in the RECORD without reading. But the Chair is decidedly of the opinion that the former decision should be overruled. In every other case and at every other time in the case of a Union Calendar bill the question is always raised in the House, and the reason announced by Mr. Speaker Clark, when he ruled that it ought to be raised in the committee, was on account of the phraseology of the Calendar Wednesday rule, which provides that on Calendar Wednesday "bills called up from the Union Calendar shall be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union," without the necessity of a motion being made, but it has frequently happened that in the case of a Union Calendar bill the gentleman in charge may ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, which is, after all, an intervening motion.

So that the word "automatically" as used in the Cannon decision does not apply to that. Speaker Clark held that the words "bills called up from the Union Calendar shall be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union" meant that no intervening motion could be made; that the House must at once resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The Chair is inclined to think, though, that the logic of the situation is where the provision is that the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union that that phraseology was put in merely to make it unnecessary to move that the House go into the Committee of the Whole. That is certainly in the direction of speeding up legislation, because on a motion, of course, the question could be put and a roll call had. But the present occupant of the chair does not think that would preclude the raising of the question of consideration in the House at the beginning. It must be raised in the House finally. Therefore why should we go through the useless motion of going into the Committee of the Whole, have the question of consideration raised in the committee, and then reported back to the House for its ultimate action? The Chair thinks the logic of the situation is all in favor of overruling the previous precedents, and as the Chair has said, while he is not disposed as a general thing to overrule well-established precedents he thinks that the necessity of the case justifies him in doing so now. So the present occupant of the chair will say that when the question is raised the next time he will hold that the question of consideration should be raised in the House and not in the committee.

On December 15, 1909, Mr. Mann, of Illinois, by direction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, called up a bill on the Union Calendar. This day being Calendar Wednesday, the Speaker, Mr. Cannon, of Illinois, caused the Clerk to read clause 4 of Rule XXIV, and said:

This bill is called up by direction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce by the chairman of that committee. The part of the rule that governs the action of the House at this time is as follows:

On a call of committees under this rule bills may be called up from either the House or the Union Calendar, excepting bills which are privileged under the rules; but bills called up from the Union Calendar shall be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

So far as the Chair has recollection, whenever special orders which are rules of the House for special occasions have provided that the House should immediately resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of a bill, the invariable practice of the House has been that the Speaker should at once declare the House in committee without a vote of the House on the question. It seems to the Chair that the intent of the rule now in operation, as shown by its purpose and language, is that the House shall without vote be resolved into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill specified by the committee having the right at this time to call a bill up for consideration. If such were not the case, we would have a motion to resolve the House into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill specified, with the possibility of a roll call, thus consuming time. And under the precedents for the prompt transaction of business, the Chair, in construing this rule, will declare the House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

At this time the Chair ruled that the House automatically resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, he evidently did not contemplate the possibility of a Member raising the question of consideration.

In the above ruling there is no mention of it, although he does say that it does not require a motion to go into the committee. Ordinarily the motion to resolve into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is equivalent to raising the question of consideration. In this connection, Speaker Cannon's attention was not directed to Rule XVI, providing for the raising of the question of consideration. In the decision it will be seen that the question of consideration is not raised directly. The Chair merely decided that the House automatically went into the Committee of the Whole.

On April 15, 1914, Mr. Mann, of Illinois, propounded this inquiry to the Chair:

Mr. Speaker, this bill is on the Union Calendar. Under the rules of the House, it being called up by the committee, the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The parliamentary inquiry is, When is it in order to raise the question of consideration on the bill? I will say to the Chair that Mr. Speaker Cannon ruled under this same rule that it was in order in Committee of the Whole to raise the question of consideration. It must be in order some time, and I make the parliamentary inquiry as to whether it is in order now in the House or whether it would be in order in Committee of the Whole.

Speaker pro tempore Alexander in reply said:

The rule, paragraph 4, Rule XXIV, provides:

"After the unfinished business has been disposed of the Speaker shall call each standing committee in regular order, and then select committees, and each committee when named may call up for consideration any bill reported by it on a previous day and on the House Calendar, and if the Speaker shall not complete the call of the committees before the House passes to other business he shall resume the next call where he left off, giving preference to the last bill under consideration."

Paragraph 7, Rule XXIV, with reference to Calendar Wednesday, provides:

"7. On Wednesday of each week no business shall be in order except as provided by paragraph 4 of this rule, unless the House by a two-thirds vote on motion to dispense therewith shall otherwise determine. On such a motion there may be debate not to exceed five minutes for and against.

"On a call of committees under this rule bills may be called up from either the House or the Union Calendar, excepting bills which are privileged under the rules; but bills called up from the Union Calendar shall be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union."

The unfinished business having been disposed of and the Committee on Revision of Laws having the right to call up bills reported from that committee for consideration, and that committee having called up a bill on the Union Calendar for consideration, it is the opinion of the Chair that it is the duty of the Speaker under the rules, paragraphs 4 and 7 of Rule XXIV, to declare that the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill and to call some one to preside in committee.

Whether or not the question of consideration may be raised in committee, the Chair does not feel called upon to decide. He is inclined to the opinion, however, taking the spirit of the rule and the purpose it was intended to accomplish into consideration, that it is very doubtful if such a motion would be in order.

The gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. Watkins, calls up the bill (H. R. 15578) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

In this case Speaker pro tempore Alexander evidently had in mind the ruling of Speaker Cannon of the preceding year. It may be well to note that in this connection the Chair expressed doubt as to whether the question of consideration was in order in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

When the House automatically went into the Committee to consider the bill, Mr. Mann attempted to raise the question of consideration, but the committee rose before opportunity was given to pass on the question.

On April 22, 1914—Calendar Wednesday—the bill was again called up and the House automatically went into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Mr. Mann demanded the question of consideration. Mr. Hay made the point of order against the demand for the question of consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Chairman Russell ruled as follows:

The Chair would like to state, in the first place, that he believes that there ought to be some opportunity at some time for either the House or the committee to determine the question of consideration of any bill, and by a majority vote. The Chair has great respect for the opinion of the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. Saunders, but he can not agree with him that this rule is intended to enable the House to dispense with a part of Calendar Wednesday. As the Chair reads the rule and construes it, he is persuaded to believe that it means to dispense with the entire business of the day, or none. There are several reasons; among them there are several decisions of the Speakers of the House that there shall be no preference between House bills and Union Calendar bills upon the calendar on Wednesday. While it is admitted and has frequently been ruled that a majority vote on a House Calendar bill will prevent its consideration, and the argument is made which, if correct, would require a two-thirds vote to dispense with one that was on the Union Calendar, so there would be a distinction. Now, if this were an original proposition, the Chair is disposed to believe that he would have held that under Rule III that the consideration could have been raised before the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House. The Chair knows that question may be raised where a motion is made to go into the Committee of the Whole House to consider a bill. The rule reads this way:

"When any motion or proposition is made, the question, Will the House now consider it? will not be put, unless demanded by a Member."

It says "any motion or proposition." The Chair is inclined to believe that this was intended to cover cases of this sort. When a bill is called it is a proposition, it would seem to the Chair, to go into the Committee of the Whole to consider the bill, not a motion, because you automatically go into the Committee of the Whole House to consider a bill on the calendar, if on the Union Calendar, as this bill was. If it were an original proposition, he would feel disposed to hold that at that time the question of consideration might have been raised in the House. But the Chair is impressed with the belief that there ought to be some time when a majority of the House or the Committee of the Whole House can determine whether or not it will consider a bill. In view of the ruling of Speaker Cannon and Speaker pro tempore Mr. Alexander, who, in this very case, decided when the motion was made raising the question of consideration that it could not be raised at that time. I think the opportunity to raise the question should now be permitted. Speaker Cannon decided that after you go into the Committee of the Whole House in a matter exactly like this—

"The question being taken on the demand for the question of consideration, the committee decided not to consider the bill."

In the House, a point of order being made against the report of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Speaker Clark ruled as follows:

The Chair is ready to rule. There are several questions involved in this matter, and the Chair will try to straighten them all out.

Until the Calendar Wednesday rule was made it was the privilege of any Member of the House to raise the question of consideration on any bill, resolution, or proposition. Speaker Reed once said that the purpose of all rules was to expedite business and not retard it. That is the correct light in which to examine them all.

The House has the right to do as it pleases about any bill, and should have a chance to express its opinion. If it does not want to consider it, it has a perfect right to say that it will not consider it. That is no abridgment of anybody's privilege. It is to maintain the integrity of the House. The gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. Sherley, has a very terse and luminous way of stating things, and on the 14th day of December, 1910, he delivered these remarks:

"Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will permit me, it seems to me that the surest way to determine every debatable proposition is by answering the question. What ruling gives the House the greatest freedom? Now, the purpose of Calendar Wednesday was not to guarantee that certain committees should have certain bills considered but that they should have an opportunity to present bills that they had reported, and then the House should have the right to say whether it would consider them or not"—

And so forth. Now, until the Calendar Wednesday rule, as I said, was adopted, you could raise the question of consideration on any legislative proposition. Most of the men who have participated in this long debate here to-day—and the Speaker remained in the Chamber and heard every word—were here when this Calendar Wednesday rule was adopted, and we know precisely why it was adopted. In those same remarks the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. Sherley, stated this:

"The abuse that Calendar Wednesday was meant to cure was the constant feeding into the House of matters that had privilege and prevented the calling of the calendar; but it was not meant, by making a call of the calendar peremptory on certain days, to compel the House necessarily to consider matters on the calendar but simply to give the House opportunity to consider them."

That is the exact truth about this, and the complaints that led to the adoption of Calendar Wednesday were precisely what the gentleman from Kentucky says they were—that committees went to work and reported bills and never got any chance to call them up. The call of the committees has been a part of the House proceedings, I suppose, from the beginning; anyhow, antedating any of us. But they fell into the habit of crowding privileged matters in here, sometimes on purpose and sometimes in the ordinary course of business, so that Members could not get their bills up at all, and therefore we established Calendar Wednesday. Nobody has any disposition to overthrow it. I know that the Chair has none.

The reading of that Calendar Wednesday rule is peculiar. It provides:

"On a call of committees under this rule bills may be called up from either the House or the Union Calendar, excepting bills which are privileged under the rules."

That last clause was put in there to prevent any of the big committees having jurisdiction of appropriations, revenue bills, etc., from crowding in on Calendar Wednesday. They have to stand aside on Wednesday and let somebody else have the right of way. The rule provides further:

"But bills called up from the Union Calendar shall be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union."

Now, I differ with these gentlemen, and I agree with Speaker Cannon and the temporary Speaker, Mr. Alexander. I do not believe that any other reasonable construction can be put upon that clause except that it meant an automatic going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and the reason why that was done was to prevent filibustering on going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. I know that is so, because I was here, and while I was not on the Committee on Rules I participated in the establishment of that rule.

There must be some place, somewhere—there ought to be, at least—to raise the question of consideration; and failing to be able to raise the question of consideration in the House in the first instance on bills on the Union Calendar on Wednesday it ought to be permitted to be raised in committee. As to the suggestion that somebody made—that 51 members in Committee of the Whole could upset the proceedings—the Chair is inclined to believe with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], that when a report like this is brought in it ought to be ratified by the House.

The Chair does not believe that the committee is acting ultra vires when it reports to the House that it will not consider this bill any more on this occasion. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had its origin in England, and its history, which need not be stated here, is a very interesting one. It is simply a committee of the House, that is all it is, just like the Committee on Ways and Means, the Committee on Appropriations, etc., except that 100 Members make a quorum, and 51 are a majority of a quorum. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union has the right to make its recommendations to the House. Of course, as the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. Bartlett, suggested, it might make some recommendation which was beyond its power. Now, if anyone does not like this Calendar Wednesday rule, the right thing to do is to offer an amendment to it. That is easy enough to do.

In the first place, the Chair sustains the ruling of Speaker Cannon and of Temporary Speaker Alexander, and he sustains the contention that you may raise the question of consideration on Calendar Wednesday—on no other day—in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. On every other day you have the opportunity to raise it in the first instance in the House. The motion to go into the committee raises the question on every other day.

Secondly, the Chair thinks that in this case the motion ought to be put to the House, which is the greater body, and the controlling body, as it takes 217 to make a quorum in the House, just as the House votes on the recommendation of the Commitee of the Whole House on the state of the Union when the committee reports back a bill with the recommendation that it lie on the table or with the recommendation that the bill do not pass or with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out or that everything after the enacting clause be stricken out. The committee has the right to report any one of those recommendations.

Therefore the question is on agreeing to the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

On October 1, 1919, Mr. CRISP, of Georgia, rising to a parliamentary inquiry, said:

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the opinion of the Chair as to this question: I know that it has been ruled in the House that on Calendar Wednesday, when a bill is on the Union Calendar and is called up the House automatically goes into Committee of the Whole to consider it, and that the question of consideration should be raised in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. I know that has been ruled several times, but I want to ask the opinion of the Chair if the Chair does not think it would be better practice for the question of consideration to be raised in the House before we go into the Committee of the Whole, for this reason:

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is an agent or creature of the House, and if the House goes into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, directing the committee to consider a bill, may the question of consideration then be raised in the committee as to whether the committee will consider it when the House has gone into Committee of the Whole directing that committee to consider it? I just want to present that proposition to the Speaker. I will say to the Speaker very frankly that the rulings have been that the question of consideration is not raised until we get into the Committee of the Whole, when we go automatically into the Committee of the Whole; but it seems to me that the logic of it is that the better practice would be to determine in those cases whether we would consider it before taking up the time of the House to go into the Committee of the Whole.

Speaker GILLETT replied:

The Chair is not disposed to express his opinion offhand without careful study of the question as to which would be the better practice; but, as the gentleman from Georgia suggests, the ruling has been—and it was a very carefully considered ruling by the last Speaker of the House when this question came up—that the question of consideration should be raised in the committee and not in the House; and although to raise the question of consideration in the committee is an anomaly, the Chair would not feel disposed to overrule that without a very thorough study and consideration of the question.

On December 17, 1924, it being Calendar Wednesday, Mr. LAGUARDIA, of New York, by direction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, called up a bill establishing an air mail service, which was on the Union Calendar. Mr. THOMAS L. BLANTON, of Texas, raised the question of consideration against the bill. The question being taken, the Speaker [GILLETT] announced:

The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

On April 28, 1926, when the Committee on Foreign Affairs was reached on Calendar Wednesday call of committees, Mr. FISH, of New York, in behalf of that committee, called up a bill to erect an American military monument in France. Mr. CONNALLY of Texas offered as privileged the motion to dispense with proceedings in order on Calendar Wednesday under the Calendar Wednesday rule. Speaker pro tempore SNELL ruled the motion out as not being privileged over the right of Mr. FISH to call up the bill. Thereupon Mr. CONNALLY raised the question of consideration against the bill. The question being put, it was decided in the affirmative.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I renew my point of order of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-five Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 74]

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and forty-five Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DENISON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. DENISON. To submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DENISON. The Speaker has just answered, in response to a parliamentary inquiry, that the proper place to raise the question of consideration is in the House rather than in the Committee of the Whole. Is it a proper deduction from the ruling of the Speaker that it will be improper hereafter to raise the question of consideration in the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. That would follow.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk called the committees. When the Committee on Military Affairs was reached—

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I am going to call up Senate Joint Resolution 46. Before doing so, I would like to prefer a unanimous-consent request. I ask unanimous consent that if we do not finish the Muscle Shoals bill to-day that the committee have its second day to-morrow, Thursday.

Mr. TILSON. That would mean that to-morrow would be substituted for next Wednesday. That would be understood?

Mr. MORIN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that if the consideration of the Muscle Shoals bill is not finished to-day that the Committee on Military Affairs have its second day to-morrow, Thursday. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman this question: Under the Calendar Wednesday rule only two hours are allowed for debate——

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I have objected.

Mr. BYRNS. I will ask the gentleman to withhold his objection for a moment. One hour in favor and one hour in opposition is all that is allowed under the rule. This is, I think, the most important or certainly among the most important bills that have been considered by Congress at this session.

The State of Tennessee, as well as every other State of the Union, is vitally interested in some of the provisions of this bill. If only two hours are allowed, I understand the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], who wishes to present the matter from the viewpoint of the Tennessee delegation, will only have 10 minutes. I submit to the gentleman this is by no means sufficient time for him to present the matter, and it does seem to me that in a matter of this very great importance there ought to be an agreement to extend the time for general debate for a reasonable time in order that the views of those both for and against the bill may be fully presented. I am not asking this for myself, although I would like to have some time on the bill. I hope the gentleman will ask unanimous consent that the time may be extended for a reasonable length of time.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, in response to the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], we are, of course, desirous of giving everybody who wishes to debate the bill all the time we can. This is Calendar Wednesday and we have only two days, but I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended one hour, one hour and a half to be used by the opponents and one hour and a half by the proponents of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be fixed at three hours, one-half to be controlled by those in favor of the bill and one-half by those opposed.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, which I do not intend to do, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORIN] whether his committee has any assurance of being able to hold evening sessions during these two days, or in the event consideration of the bill is not completed on the second Wednesday, or in the event that by reason of fixing the date of adjournment, next Wednesday ceases to be a Calendar Wednesday, that time will be given for completion of the bill through a rule?

Mr. MORIN. We have not.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then the gentleman realizes that in any extension of time that is granted for debate, with the evidences that were indicated here this morning of some desire to consume time, his bill is in danger?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In extreme danger.

Mr. BYRNS. I want to say to the gentleman that my request was not proposed with any such idea. I have no disposition to delay the consideration of the bill for a longer time than is necessary to fairly consider it.

Mr. CRAMTON. I want the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] to understand I did not have him in mind.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I may suggest to the chairman of the committee before asking unanimous consent to extend the time for general debate, we find out from the ones who are going to filibuster on the bill whether or not in case consideration of the Muscle Shoals bill is not concluded to-day we may have to-morrow for its consideration under unanimous consent; and if that is objected to, then ask for Friday, and if that is objected to, then ask for Saturday, and the committee will then know how far the filibusterers are going in their opposition to the bill. We do not want to have anybody play any hocus pocus with us.

Mr. BYRNS. May I say to the gentleman, with the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I hardly think it is fair to hold those who are desirous of presenting what we believe are thoroughly sound views upon this bill responsible for what some one else may do.

Mr. FREAR. If the gentleman will yield, would the gentleman be willing to have the bill destroyed because some people want to talk about it or would the gentleman be willing to vote upon the bill at a particular hour to-morrow or to-day?

Mr. BYRNS. That, of course, is not for me to determine. What I am asking is not for myself but for those who have some views to present to the House, and I think the House should hear them. I think every Member of this House should be interested in having these views presented and I do not think extending general debate one hour is going to militate against a final vote of the bill.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield for the purpose of having a motion put that a vote shall be had to-night at some hour upon the conclusion of debate?

Mr. BYRNS. I think it will probably take more than to-day to consider the bill, but I see no reason why it should not be concluded in two days, so far as I am personally concerned.

Mr. FREAR. I am just suggesting this.

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, if the House could understand that it is the policy of those who are responsible for the order of business in the House to complete the consideration of this bill, I believe it would save a lot of time to the House. I think this would discourage any waste of time in useless roll calls, and I would be glad if the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, or the gentleman from Connecticut, the majority floor leader, would give the House some assurance that would insure the completion of the consideration of this bill if that is possible.

Mr. TILSON. So far as I am concerned, I will say to the gentleman that I thought there were some other things that ought to be considered ahead of this proposition, and therefore in making up the program, so far as I could determine it, this bill was either left to its rights under Calendar Wednesday or to follow some other bills that I have thought were more important than this one.

Mr. CRAMTON. This would perhaps be pertinent at this time: What would be the attitude of the gentleman from Connecticut toward a continuous session until at least 11 o'clock to-night if there seemed to be any disposition to waste time?

Mr. SNELL. That is a matter in the control of the House, anyway.

Mr. TILSON. So far as I am personally concerned, I should not lend encouragement to an attempt to hold the House in session for any such time as that indicated by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is true the House has it in its disposal——

Mr. TILSON (interposing). Absolutely; there is no question about that.

Mr. CRAMTON. But the position of the gentleman from Connecticut and the position of the gentleman from New York is very persuasive, and unless there is some word of assurance that there will be late sessions to meet the necessity of a filibuster, or that there will be given a rule for completion of the bill, I can foresee a lot of time wasted.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman knows very well that there is another day to which this committee will be entitled.

Mr. CRAMTON. But if there should be a resolution for adjournment at any such date as the papers have mentioned, then next Wednesday ceases to be a Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. LINTHICUM. If the gentleman will permit, I want to say to the gentleman, there have been several Members here who have spoken about a filibuster.

I presume they are referring to me. I want to say that it is not my purpose to filibuster, but this means ruin to my city, and I intend to have it considered by a quorum. If that is lese majesty I am guilty. I think the bill is of sufficient importance to be considered by the whole Congress.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. The bill as reported from the committee strikes out, as I understand, the Senate bill and substitutes a new bill entirely. That being true, when the bill passes the House and goes to conference, the conferees will have complete jurisdiction over the whole subject matter, and can bring back an entirely new bill if they see fit to do so. I think all will agree to that. That being true, is it not evident to Members here that the real contest is going to come on what the conferees bring in here after the election? If it is assured that the conferees will report before we adjourn I shall be willing to sit here in a night session, but I have no more idea that the particular provisions of the bill that will pass the House will become law, or that any bill will become law before election, than I have that I shall fly without using an airplane.

Mr. MORIN. I want to assure the gentleman that we will do everything we can to have the bill agreed on in conference before adjournment.

Mr. WINGO. But it will not rest with the gentleman. I predict this bill will be held in conference until after the election, and then wholly different provisions will be submitted to us by the conference committee.

Mr. JAMES. I want to assure the gentleman that if I am one of the conferees I shall do the best I can to get a report and have it agreed upon before adjournment.

Mr. WINGO. I appreciate the gentleman's good intentions, but I doubt if the gentleman has the power to control the Senate conferees.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What would the gentleman from Arkansas suggest?

Mr. WINGO. I would suggest that there be no filibuster, and no night sessions, and that we consider this bill in the usual way, realizing that the real contest will come when the conference report comes in. What it will contain no one can predict, so why worry and wear ourselves out with night sessions on this particular phase of the controversy?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the time for debate be extended one hour?

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, has my request been acceded to to have one day more to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not put that yet. The Chair will put that first. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that if the bill is not completed to-day, that on to-morrow it will be in order to take up Calendar Wednesday business?

Mr. HOUSTON of Delaware. I object.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that if we do not complete the Muscle Shoals bill to-day we may have the next day on Friday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that if the bill is not completed to-day that it may be in order to take it up next Friday as of Calendar Wednesday. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM and Mr. GRAHAM objected.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that if we do not complete the Muscle Shoals bill to-day we may take it up on Saturday as of Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that if the Muscle Shoals bill is not completed to-day it may be in order to take it up on Saturday as of Calendar Wednesday. Is there objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I object.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request for additional time for debate.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a unanimous-consent request for the orderly consideration of this bill. The bill before us is a Senate bill, and the committee have stricken out everything after the enacting clause, substituting a new bill. That practically is the same condition that existed when we considered the farm relief bill and the merchant marine bill. But that condition was provided for under a special rule of the House.

In order to give this bill the same consideration, under the same conditions, I make the following unanimous-consent request: That the substitute for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the five-minute rule as an original bill; that at the conclusion of such consideration the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House, the committee substitute and amendments, and that any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, those particular bills were under a special rule from the Committee on Rules. Can the gentleman assure us that we will have an opportunity to finish on the two Calendar Wednesdays?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall answer the question in two ways. As far as my unanimous-consent request is concerned, it is made entirely for the gentleman's benefit. It does not make any difference to me whether it is granted or not. It is made in order to help the committee to an intelligent and orderly consideration of the bill.

In regard to the other question, as far as I am personally concerned, I am glad the gentleman has asked me that question. I am not in favor of the present bill, but it is here before the House in a concrete form, the first time that we have had any proposition before the House dealing with this subject. As far as I am personally concerned, I hope the House gives careful attention to it and considers it and disposes of it in the next two days. [Applause.] There is ample time to consider this bill fully, and it is entirely within the control of the committee and the Members of the House how long they will sit here each night. The gentleman does not have to ask unanimous consent of anybody to accomplish that purpose. If the Members who are interested in the passing of this legislation remain here, they can hold the House in session until 12 o'clock at night without the consent of anyone. It is my desire to have no delays whatever, but to give strict attention to the passage of the bill. If we do that and work honestly, we can pass the bill in two days.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman's request include the provision in the rules on the other bills mentioned that the entire substitute shall be held to be germane?

Mr. SNELL. No; it does not provide anything about germaneness. My request is made simply for the purpose of orderly consideration.

Mr. CRAMTON. If orderly consideration only is desired, would not the gentleman include that request with his other request?

Mr. SNELL. I am perfectly willing to do that if it is desired to have it done.

Mr. CRAMTON. So far as I know it is all germane, but it would remove any question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL]?

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana objects. The bill is on the Union Calendar. The House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 46, providing for the completion of Dam No. 2 and the steam plant at nitrate plant No. 2 in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals for the manufacture and distribution of fertilizer, and for other purposes, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] will take the chair.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland raises the question of consideration. The question is, Shall the House consider the joint resolution?

The question was taken, and the House decided to consider the joint resolution.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 46, with Mr. NEWTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the joint resolution by title.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the joint resolution be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the joint resolution.

The Clerk read the joint resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORIN], chairman of the committee, for one hour. Is there any member of the minority of the committee who desires recognition in opposition to the bill?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, there are several who are opposed to the bill on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there members of the majority of the committee who are opposed to the bill?

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am the ranking member on the majority side of the Committee on Military Affairs and am opposed to the bill. I claim the time in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. In default of anyone from the minority of the committee seeking recognition in opposition to the bill, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY] for one hour in opposition to the bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, do I understand if there is no one on the committee on the minority side who is opposed to the bill that it is not in order for anyone else on the minority side of the House who is opposed to the bill to have control of the time in opposition to it?

The CHAIRMAN. The custom and practice is to recognize members of the committee who are opposed to the bill, first giving recognition to those on the minority of the committee. In default of anyone there claiming time, then it is the practice to recognize members of the majority side, members of the committee, who are opposed to the bill.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, we are a little late getting started on this program for the American farmer. I trust that his friends will stay on this floor during the consideration of this bill. [Applause.] There is no use in fooling ourselves. We have been confronted, I am sorry to say, with opposition for the purpose of obstructing a reasonable and fair consideration of this important measure. No rule has been provided by the machinery in control of the House under which to consider the bill. We call it up under our right on Calendar Wednesday from the Committee on Military Affairs. We have not the time to debate this measure fully, as only one hour is provided for the opponents and one hour for the proponents of the measure, which, in my judgment, is a measure that is vitally progressive for the benefit of agriculture in this country.

For many years Congress has endeavored to pass some kind of legislation which will be satisfactory for the operation of the Government plant at Muscle Shoals. Nothing has been done. Finally, in desperation, our committee has brought forward what I believe to be a splendid bill. I believe that under it we will really produce fertilizer. Of course, if there is any gentleman here who is fearful about the Government operating the great plant through a corporation, though it be not through choice but through necessity, then he might find fault with the legislation.

I do not think that the manufacturers of fertilizers in the United States relish this bill very much, and the reason why they are not enthusiastic for this measure is that they know it will produce fertilizer.

I have not the time to tell you what the bill really means, but in a few years, stripping off the extraneous matter, $10,000,000 is to be put by the United States Government into this corporation to function for the specific purpose of utilizing that power that cost us $40,000,000 in the construction of the dam; to turn it into plant food to go out to the farms of the United States and enable the farmers of this country to feed and clothe the American people.

We have in this measure provided for a corporation to operate the plant, the same as we have a corporation to operate the Panama Railroad in connection with the Panama Canal, and the same as the Shipbuilding Corporation of the United States; nothing radical, yet a progressive, sound business measure, of which no one complains except those with whose business it would interfere in a competitive way.

I do not want to interfere with a single legitimate business in the United States. This measure is intended to produce 2,000,000 tons of fertilizer, if the plant is run at full capacity; 40,000 tons of nitrate, to put it in a form to be distributed to the farmers in a sensible, sound way; to farmers represented by organizations in any county or any State through those representing them or through any group of farmers, and then directly to the State itself, or, in addition to the State itself, the fertilizer merchant and the ingredients to fertilizer factories. By this measure the fertilizer is to be distributed throughout the Territories as well as the States of this Republic.

This bill also provides that concentrated fertilizers shall be produced in order to save freight rates—fertilizers which the consumer must mix and use on his land in order to bring forth crops and get the fertilizer at the lowest expense. Do you not believe it will be made in a cheap manner?

This bill provides that the capital employed shall be $10,000,000, in installments of $100,000 each, until the whole $10,000,000 shall be put into the operating fund. The bill also provides that no salaries shall be paid except to executive officers to handle that business and to the employees producing the fertilizer, the fertilizer to be produced without profit. And in addition a subsidy by way of the excess power that will be sold, the proceeds to be used in the manufacture of fertilizer.

Is there any man in the United States who doubts that fertilizer will be produced in a cheap and reasonable manner? Is there any man who doubts that this is necessary? The people of the United States have borne the burden of high-priced fertilizer all these years. One reason is that we have to get our nitrogen down in Chile and our potash from the Black Forest in Germany.

The cost of ammonia has been high. The essential ingredients and elements of all plant food come too high. The fertilizer factories themselves for these essential ingredients have been charged exorbitant prices, and in the natural order of business they are compelled to pass it on to the consumer, who is the farmer, and he must pay the price that is charged for these necessary and essential elements that must go on the soil in order to produce reasonable crops.

Our people from one end of this country to the other have realized the necessity of something being done for fertilizer production. You have a measure now before you that guarantees fertilizer at a reasonable price. This bill, if we finally make the entire 40,000 tons of product, will make 2,000,000 of the total 8,000,000, which the private factories are grinding out.

Why is a discrimination made against the people of the United States in carrying out the purposes of the national defense act? One purpose of that act was to produce explosives and munitions for use in time of war, and it was the intention also that in time of peace this plant should operate in a sane and sensible manner for the benefit of agriculture by producing fertilizer. The President of the United States in his message last December set forth the facts to justify this bill. However, he outlined three different schemes, and wound up by saying this plant should be dedicated to agriculture. That is what this committee has done, and no man on this floor need deceive himself. If he votes against this bill he can not stand up before intelligent farmers in the United States and make those farmers believe he is their friend. No man need fool himself.

This measure has in it the essential elements that will enable the Government to furnish fertilizer at a reasonable price, and every fertilizer manufacturer in the United States knows that, and that is the reason why gentlemen here, representing that sentiment, are insisting on a quorum during the consideration of this bill, because they know the bill is going to produce fertilizer at a reasonable price for the farmers of this Republic. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, if the bill now before the committee becomes a law it will be the duty of the United States to advance the necessary capital, to operate the plant at Muscle Shoals, sell fertilizer and power, if any is surplus, and stand the losses.

Under the provisions of this bill a $10,000,000 corporation is formed, which is only the beginning of unlimited expenditure of the people's money. Its enactment will strike the first great blow, in time of peace, against individual initiative in this country. Surely this bill is socialistic.

This country has grown great because of the policy of the Government in protecting and encouraging its industries. But this bill forces the Government into the fertilizer business in competition with private industry. President Coolidge in a recent speech had this to say:

> When the Government once enters a business it must occupy the field alone, no one can compete with it. The result is a paralyzing monopoly.

The process for the manufacture of fertilizer with which Muscle Shoals is equipped, is pronounced by experts as obsolete. It is considered the most expensive method in the production of fertilizer in the world.

The business of the manufacture of fertilizer is to-day in a state of flux, all manufacturers believing the business will be greatly changed overnight. This thought was indorsed by the experts from the Department of Agriculture who appeared before the committee.

Under the provisions of this bill, for the first five years fertilizer is to be sold at cost or given away—after that period the basis for determining the price to be charged is in no case to consider past expenditure at the Shoals, which amounts to $124,000,000.

The bill also authorized the expenditure of $37,500,000 for a new dam.

The vested rights of the State of Tennessee are ignored, which means litigation.

The files of the Patent Office are opened to this Government corporation. The patent laws are swept aside.

Litigation will follow this, and private research will be discouraged.

At present the Government receives an annual rental for the water power at the shoals of $1,250,000. This will be lost.

If you pass this bill, you discourage, if not destroy, a manufacturing business employing many men and millions of capital. At the same time remembering, that unless farmers can be induced to buy fertilizer in concentrated form, only those within normal shipping distance from the shoals will be benefited, for freight rates will prevent most of us from receiving the fertilizer.

We will, however, be compelled to pay the salary of the members of the board, the managers, the foremen, the chemists, attorneys, bookkeepers, agents, and laborers. This means an army of officeholders.

The people's money will be diverted for a special class. This, I contend, is socialistic. In this wonderful country of ours, I ask you, are we facing a world gone mad? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FROTHINGHAM].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I hope everyone will be able to read this bill and realize what it does. We have had the Muscle Shoals proposition with us for a considerable time, and nobody wants it settled more than I do. I am on the committee which has had this proposition before it for a number of years. Some years ago the Ford bill was passed by the House and knocked down in the Senate. This bill not only puts the Government in business and creates a $10,000,000 corporation but it also goes far beyond anything for which Muscle Shoals was started.

Under the national defense act of 1916 Muscle Shoals was to be given over for the production of nitrates needed for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizers and other useful products. This bill not only provides for the manufacture of nitrates but it goes far beyond the cyanamide process or anything else, because it provides for the manufacture of complete fertilizers.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I have only a limited time, and if I can yield later I will be glad to do so. I have only 10 minutes.

Mr. WRIGHT. Does the gentleman contend that the provisions of the national defense act provide for the production of nitrates only?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I read the provision, and I said nitrates useful in the manufacture of fertilizers. The bill not only provides for the production of nitrates by a process which is obsolete at Muscle Shoals, the cyanamide process, but it also provides for the manufacture of complete fertilizers. That is the whole point of this bill. The fertilizer people, I suppose, would not object if it were a question of nitrates or if it were a question of investigations which will help everybody. But since Muscle Shoals was built the expert opinion that we had before the committee—not in relation to this bill, because this bill never had a hearing before the committee, and that is the outrageous part of it—was that the Muscle Shoals process was the most expensive. This bill was never given a hearing before our committee, and if that is the way to pass legislation it is foreign to anything I have ever seen in any legislative body I have ever heard of.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I would like nothing better than to yield to the gentleman, but I have only 10 minutes, and I can not cover what I want to say in that time. Not only is the cyanamide process obsolete, but you are putting in this bill the expenditure of money out of the Treasury in the most expensive way possible. You are not only going into Government ownership——

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. If the gentleman does not like what I say he can use his own time in answering me. If I had the time I would be glad to yield. Not only is this process obsolete and much more expensive, but now it is perfectly well known—and that evidence was brought out before our committee—that it is not at Muscle Shoals, but it is near coal mines that the fixation of nitrogen can be utilized to better advantage; in other words, that the power coming over a dam in this way, from an overflow of water, is the most expensive way to obtain fixed nitrogen.

Now, there is a provision in the bill which provides that if any of these private manufacturers of fertilizers—and you have more of them in the South than we have in the North, because they do not obtain fertilizer in the North—should advertise, get together, and try to persuade the public that their private fertilizers are better than the fertilizers made by this Government business, then they would be liable to a fine of $25,000 or in lieu thereof imprisonment for 15 years.

Now, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] just now suggested that they could take up anything in conference. He did not realize that the Senate bill is a bill for Government operation, as this bill is a bill for Government operation, so the conferees will be absolutely limited under the bill to a form of Government operation.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I will yield, since I have referred to the gentleman.

Mr. WINGO. I want to suggest to the gentleman that he had better refer to the precedents, because this bill strikes out all after the enacting clause and the conferees are confined to the disposition of Muscle Shoals and not to any particular plan. They are confined to the operation of Muscle Shoals and those dams, and that is all the limit they will have.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. The Senate has one provision for Government operation of Muscle Shoals, and if this bill should happen to go through the House would have another.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will permit, the substantive thing——

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I should be very pleased if they could do what the gentleman says.

Mr. WINGO. The substantive thing in the two bills is the disposition or operation of Muscle Shoals and its dams. The conferees can reject both plans, just so they provide for the objective of both bills.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Does the gentleman claim that a bill for granting private operation of Muscle Shoals could be substituted for this bill?

Mr. WINGO. I do not think there is any doubt about it, under one of the precedents.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. That is very interesting.

The farmers do not want this bill. There is evidence that they seriously object to it, because it is only to give fertilizer to those who can pay in cash, and those who can not afford to pay cash will be deferred.

In this bill the question of power also is put in a secondary position. Fertilizer is the great thing, and fertilizer only for those who can pay cash, and while the bill puts out of business to-day $300,000,000 legitimately invested in private fertilizer plants, it will chiefly benefit those people who are in the vicinity of the plant, and, as I have stated, the power is secondary. As long as this power is used for fertilizer the people in neighboring States, if they want the power, will not be able to get it under this bill.

Not only this, but provision is made in the bill to give away fertilizer up to 5 per cent, and under certain circumstances it may be as much as 15 per cent. Who is going to get the fertilizer? If anyone, it will be the people who are in the neighborhood.

I am not going into the constitutional question involved; but of course there is grave doubt of the constitutionality of a thing of this sort. We might as well go in there and raise cotton or we might put the Government into the coal business or the manufacture of goods or anything else.

There is no provision in the bill for the repayment of $125,000,000 or more that has already been spent at Muscle Shoals. We had other bills before us. We had the Madden bill, so called, in which the Cyanamid Co. made an offer that would have come under the water power act and in which they took the chance of losing money. That proposition would have come under the water power act, and if any losses were incurred they would have been on the private individuals and not on the taxpayers of the United States, and that bill would have paid back some of the money already expended there.

I sincerely hope a bill of this sort will not go through.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WRIGHT].

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the so-called Muscle Shoals project was brought into existence under a provision of what is known as the national defense act of 1916, and the particular part of the provision which relates to the production of nitrates at that plant reads as follows:

For the production of nitrates or other products needed for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizers and other useful products.

The statement has already been made that under the law which authorized the building of this plant it was not intended that anything in the form of fertilizer should be produced except nitrates. The law does not confine it to nitrates. It provides "nitrates or other useful products" in the manufacture of fertilizer.

Under the authority of the national defense act the Government of the United States determined to locate a plant at Muscle Shoals, and the preponderating reason that caused it to be located at Muscle Shoals was that on the Tennessee River at the point known as Muscle Shoals a great quantity of hydroelectric power could be produced, which was necessary in order to operate a nitrate plant.

The Government expended in the construction of what is known as nitrate plant No. 2, in round figures, $67,000,000. It has expended in round figures in the construction of what is known as Wilson Dam No. 2, $50,000,000. It has expended in the construction of what is known as nitrate plant No. 1 the sum of $14,000,000, which makes the total expenditure up to this date at Muscle Shoals approximately $130,000,000.

You will understand the big nitrate plant was designed to fix nitrogen from the air under what is known as the cyanamide process. The small plant near Sheffield, Ala., was designed to fix nitrogen under the Haber, or synthetic, process. The cyanamide plant has been tested and is a success. The Haber, or synthetic, plant is a failure.

The charge has been made, and made here this morning, that the cyanamide process is absolutely obsolete and that nitrogen can not be economically and successfully fixed by this process at this time.

There is a great division of opinion in the United States among scientists and others as to which is the better process, the synthetic or the cyanamide. Gentlemen, nobody knows what process will finally be adopted. It may be a process other than either the cyanamide or the synthetic. This whole matter is practically in its infancy, but I deny the statement that the cyanamide process is obsolete.

Now, why do I say this? To begin with, the only big cyanamide plant in all the world that stands idle to-day is at Muscle Shoals. Every other one is in operation. Again, all of the fixed nitrogen that goes into the manufacture of fertilizer at this time is nitrogen that is fixed by the cyanamide process, and practically none of it enters into fertilizer that is fixed by the synthetic process.

If the synthetic process is so much cheaper, requires so much less power to produce it, why has not capital in this country adopted this process in lieu of the cyanamide process?

Why, they point to Hopewell, Va. A great plant is going up down there.

To-day, gentlemen, nobody knows what they are going to do. So we go back to the fact that all the fixed nitrogen that is going into a fertilizer is under the cyanamide process.

Now, gentlemen, your committee has handled this matter since 1922. We have been making an effort to dispose of Muscle Shoals. In 1922, when it seemed that the whole project was a white elephant on the hands of the Government, Henry Ford came forward with an offer. That was accepted by the House, but before it was reached in the Senate Mr. Ford withdrew the offer. Since then we have had various offers. Your committee has held hearings for months and months, and up to now these hearings cover over 7,000 pages of closely printed matter. Your committee has done its utmost to turn the project over to private enterprise for the purpose for which it was built, as laid down in the national defense act. But, aside from Mr. Ford's offer, we have never been able to get an offer that the committee or the House would accept. Hence we were driven to the proposition of turning it over to Government operation.

Now, personally, I am opposed to Government operation or Government ownership, but if there ever was a case where Government operation was justified it is at Muscle Shoals.

It is not a question of the Government making an investment and going into the business—the Government has made an investment approximating $130,000,000, and is already in business to the extent of generating power at the great dam which is being sold by the Secretary of War to the Alabama Power Co.

In that connection it may be interesting to know that every kilowatt this is produced is sold to the Alabama Power Co. at an average price of 2.6 mills per kilowatt-hour.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman says that the Government is already in the business. Do you not intend to put in $10,000,000 more?

Mr. WRIGHT. To utilize and try to make profitable what we already have there.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Do not you intend to turn over the $1,300,000 that you now receive for the sale of power?

Mr. WRIGHT. For the present the power will be used to operate the plant and only the surplus will be sold. Now, I made the statement that the Alabama Power Co. is purchasing this power for 2.6 mills per kilowatt-hour. It is retailing it at prices from 4 to 6, 8, and as high as 14 mills per kilowatt-hour.

It may be interesting also to you to know that the Alabama Power Co. has an absolute monopoly in the purchase of the power, because it is the only concern that has a transmission line that reaches Muscle Shoals.

I wish I had time to explain all the provisions of this bill. The bill differs from the Senate bill in that the Senate bill proposes that the Secretary of Agriculture should operate the plant. Your committee did not think it wise to turn it over to the Secretary of Agriculture, because the Secretary of Agriculture and Doctor Cottrell, in charge of the nitrogen fixation plant, both appeared before the committee and practically admitted in advance that it would be a failure. They both said that the cyanamide process is in fact obsolete. So your committee did not think it wise to turn over the project to men who avowedly admitted that it would be a failure.

Instead of that we create a board of five, and that board is to be appointed by the President of the United States by and with the consent of the Senate. The salaries are limited to a reasonable sum the first year and made less in the second year. They get a per diem and not a regular salary. Not more than three of the board shall be members of any one party.

The board will select what we call a general manager, who will be the executive officer. He must be a man who is a real business executive and of demonstrated ability. That general manager selects two assistant managers, one of whom must qualify as being an expert in the production and sale of commercial fertilizer. The other must be an expert in the production and distribution of hydroelectric power. These three men are not to receive a salary in excess of $50,000 a year.

Then we provide that the board shall begin the manufacture of concentrated fertilizer by utilizing the facilities of nitrate plant No. 2 under the cyanamide process and that process must be modernized and brought up to date.

You will appreciate the fact that since the plant was constructed the cyanamide process itself has undergone a wonderful improvement.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WRIGHT. I will yield.

Mr. BYRNS. How much will it cost to modernize the plant?

Mr. WRIGHT. A change of the plant and the installation of a phosphoric-acid plant will cost perhaps $10,000,000.

Mr. BYRNS. Is the $10,000,000 appropriated in the bill to be utilized for that purpose?

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes; and for the general purposes outlined in the bill.

Mr. BYRNS. If the bill passes, will any further appropriation be necessary from Congress?

Mr. WRIGHT. No; it will ultimately turn out to be a money-making plant.

Mr. BYRNS. Will it turn out to be a money-making plant very soon?

Mr. WRIGHT. After the first five years.

Mr. BYRNS. Then I understand it is the gentleman's opinion that it will cost only $10,000,000?

Mr. WRIGHT. That is correct.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman has referred to the fertilizer feature of this bill and the original act of 1916. I am sure the gentleman knows that I am in thorough accord with him in the fact that this great power should be used for fertilizer primarily.

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. Take this particular bill now pending before Congress with reference to its fertilizer feature. I wish to ask the gentleman if, in these hearings to which he refers, any farmer or any representative of any farm bureau or organization has appeared and approved the proposition or has appeared before the committee advocating the provisions in this particular bill now pending before the House.

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not know of any, and that is one of the most remarkable things that ever happened in the United States. They claim to want cheap fertilizer, and when we offer it to them in the cheapest form—at actual cost—these farm organizations say that they do not want it, and let me say, with respect to the so-called leaders of the agricultural organizations and the farmers of this country, I have been persuaded from my observation here that the farmer is very poorly represented by many of these so-called representatives. [Applause.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WRIGHT. No; I have not the time. The bill goes further and provides that this board can install a phosphoric acid plant at Muscle Shoals to produce phosphoric acid. When the two elements are combined, when the ammonia, or nitrogen, which is fixed from the cyanamide, and the phosphoric acid are combined there can be produced at Muscle Shoals when the plant is running at full capacity, 370,000 tons of concentrated fertilizer, known as ammonium phosphate, which will contain 48 per cent of phosphoric acid and 13 per cent of nitrogen, or, in round numbers, 60 per cent of real plant food.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Within what time?

Mr. WRIGHT. In two years, and maybe get in operation within a year. This bill calls for a campaign of education so far as the use of commercial fertilizer in this country is concerned. Those of you who perhaps do not understand commercial fertilizer fail to realize that as it is now used an average of about only 15 per cent of real plant food is contained in each ton and the balance, 1,700 pounds, is dirt or inert matter or filler, and on that tonnage the farmer must pay the freight and pay the cost of handling. What we are seeking to do is to teach the farmer to use fertilizer in a concentrated form and instead of 15 per cent of plant food in the ton to give him 60 per cent in the ton; but your committee felt it would require time to educate the farmer to use it in this concentrated form, and hence we provide here for the first five years that we give away 5 per cent of the output of the plant and distribute it among the farmers, so that they may test it out and get accustomed to using it.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. What is proposed to be done with Cove Creek?

Mr. WRIGHT. There is authorization for the construction of a dam at Cove Creek.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Are there any proposals to submit in amendment form?

Mr. WRIGHT. There will be a limitation as to time or to provide an authorization for an appropriation within which the work shall commence. Coming to the power feature of Muscle Shoals, many gentlemen have sought to make this a power proposition instead of a nitrate proposition. You will see from the national defense act that the power that was to be generated at Muscle Shoals was a mere incident, that it was not the prime object.

The object was to construct a plant, and then to provide power with which to operate it, hence the Wilson Dam. The power that can be produced there is largely exaggerated. The prime power, the power that can be produced the year round is only about 90,000 horsepower, and yet some gentlemen will speak about millions of horsepower which can be produced there. It will require 100,000 horsepower to operate the cyanamide plant No. 2 alone, so as to fix 220,000 tons of cyanamide, from which can be extracted 40,000 tons of pure nitrogen. Then, if the phosphoric acid plant is installed and the two plants run in conjunction, it will require 260,000 horsepower to operate the two plants, and the only available primary power we have there is 90,000 horsepower from Dam No. 2 and 80,000 horsepower from the steam plant at Muscle Shoals, making 170,000 horsepower.

About Cove Creek——

Mr. ALMON. Before the gentleman goes to that, did not the Government undertake, after the war, to get the fertilizer industry of the country to take over this plant, and did not they refuse to do it?

Mr. WRIGHT. Absolutely. I sympathize with my friends who are manufacturing fertilizer. I think their troubles are mainly imaginary and largely exaggerated. I do not think they are going to be hurt as badly as they conceive. I say in all frankness that the owners of the fertilizer plants in this country and the power people of the country could have disposed of this proposition long ago if they had been inclined to do so. In other words, if they had come in here and cooperated with the Congress instead of pulling back and fighting everything that we proposed to do, this project would long since have been disposed of and in the hands of private enterprise.

Mr. HASTINGS. Before the gentleman goes to the Cove Creek proposition, will he not discuss the terms of sale of the fertilizer?

Mr. WRIGHT. The product will be sold for cash, free on board cars at Muscle Shoals, Ala. Practically all fertilizer is sold for cash, and why? Because if the cash price is, say, $30 a ton, sold in March or April, and due in October, they charge $38 a ton, so that anybody who can afford to use fertilizer must raise the money and pay cash for it. That wide difference is fixed in order to force them to pay cash. All this fertilizer for the first five years will be sold at cost, and after that at 4 per cent profit. [Applause.]

Mr. HASTINGS. That is what I wanted to know.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. GLYNN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GLYNN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in my opinion this is the most dangerous and vicious piece of legislation that I have known to be reported out by any committee of this House during the 11 years I have been a Member. [Applause.]

We are making history to-day, because it is for you gentlemen to decide whether or not you are going to depart from that time-honored practice of private initiative and private enterprise which has brought prosperity to this great Nation.

Now, I realize that this bill is brought in under the whip and spur of what the committee believes to be public opinion. The members of the committee are all good friends of mine, and I have great respect for them. But because nothing has been done for years on the Muscle Shoals question, they said here, "The public demands that something must be done, and we are going to do something"; and they did.

The trouble with this whole Muscle Shoals proposition has been that back in 1916, when we were facing war and when it was necessary to look for a supply of nitrogen, they amended the public defense act to provide for the fixation of nitrate at Muscle Shoals, and the question came up, What are you going to do with it in time of peace? And the proponents of the bill and those who favored it said, "Oh, well, we will make fertilizer." So that act provided that the plant should be used for the purpose of making nitrogen in time of war and fertilizer in time of peace.

And now I want to say this, that to-day the Muscle Shoals property is neither a nitrate proposition nor a fertilizer proposition. It is neither. Why? When we went into the war and before we went into the war there was in this country no expert, not one—I do not think that statement will be disputed—there was not one who knew anything about the extraction of nitrate from the air or nitrate production, except by the cyanamide process. Germany did know something about it, but not much.

The older process was the cyanide process. But during the war Germany made great strides in the production of nitrate from the process known as the Haber process, and to-day the best experts will tell you that the best and most economical process is the direct synthetic process known as the improved Haber process.

Possibly the impression may have gotten out here that no nitrogen is made in this country by the direct synthetic process. The great du Pont Co., by the investment of millions of dollars—I wish I had some of their stock—the great Du Pont Co., which was in a position to select the very best process, because it was a question with them of dollars and cents, are producing 25 tons of nitrate daily and intend to increase that amount to 100 tons a day, all by the improved Haber process.

Mr. ALMON. No part of that goes into the manufacture of fertilizer?

Mr. GLYNN. No. No part of that goes into the manufacture of fertilizer, because they are not making nitrate for fertilizer, but are making it for their explosives, and they need it. But every ton they make for explosives is releasing a ton that can be used otherwise for fertilizer and would go into fertilizer. The great allied chemical and dye corporation have an investment of millions of dollars. They are getting at the correct process. They are spending down at Hopewell, Va., $100,000,000 taken out of the surplus of the company. According to statements I have seen in a newspaper they have spent $4,500,000 in investigation, and they are choosing the direct synthetic process known as the Haber process.

Of course, gentlemen, I know that this is the era when we must do something for the farmer, and we must do something for him whether he wants us to do it or not; and when we have this Government plant, which they say is going to furnish cheap fertilizer for the farmer, after we have killed off a private industry in this country with an investment of $300,000,000, and when the smokeless chimneys stand like silent monuments above the dead fertilizer industry, then the Government business can go on and we can extend the field of our Government activities by making cheap farm implements for the farmer.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLYNN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. At the existing freight rates, what would be the rate of distribution or transportation to destination of fertilizer from Muscle Shoals?

Mr. GLYNN. I can not answer that question. I realize that the distribution would be limited. I realize that the farmer in Minnesota or elsewhere a thousand miles distant from Muscle Shoals is not going to be benefited at all. So I say the proposition is wrong.

In the direction of this corporation you are going to have five men, none of whom has a financial interest in a fertilizer proposition, and probably not one of them knows anything about the proposition. That is the way they select juries sometimes. They get men for juries who have no opinions. You are going to appoint a board of directors of five men, not one of whom has any interest in any fertilizer proposition, and you are going to leave it in their hands.

I know that the assertion is made that this is not a question of the Government getting into business. They say the Government already is in business. I deny it. I deny that simply because dams were built down there at Muscle Shoals and because there are two obsolete plants down there that can not be modernized except with an additional investment of $10,000,000—I deny that is an excuse for us to go into a Government manufacturing plant. We have our national parks, and it may be said that because those parks have in them potential water power the Government is in business, and if that theory is followed out the time may come when it will be said we should start an automobile factory for the purpose of manufacturing cheap automobiles for the farmer. It is a dangerous precedent. It is a case of getting the camel's nose under the tent.

I know there are some men who favor Government ownership. If you favor Government ownership you ought to vote for this bill, but if you are opposed to Government ownership you should vote against this bill, and do it now. The time to stop and ponder is now.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLYNN. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the gentleman is making a fine contribution to the subject, but I would like to know what he would do with Muscle Shoals?

Mr. GLYNN. It is purely and simply a power proposition.

Mr. FLETCHER. How would you dispose of it?

Mr. GLYNN. And if some of them had not felt they were tied up with this so-called dedication of power to be used for fertilizers in times of peace there would not be this trouble. At that time not a member of the Committee on Military Affairs and not a Member of Congress knew the best method of extracting nitrogen. I would consider it to-day simply as a power proposition, and that is all it is.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLYNN. Yes.

Mr. ALMON. What would you do with the power?

Mr. GLYNN. I would sell it under the best terms I could make. I would sell it so we could get more for it, and as the gentleman from Alabama knows, they are paying 2.6 mills per kilowatt simply because they only have a lease at will, a lease from month to month, and I think the gentleman from Alabama will agree, and I think every member of the Committee on Military Affairs will agree, that we could get many times 2.6 mills per kilowatt-hour for a long-term lease.

Mr. ALMON. With only one customer, the Alabama Power Co.?

Mr. GLYNN. There would be more customers than one. It is true the power is now delivered to the Alabama Power Co., but transmission lines can be built, precisely as provided for in this bill, to deliver that power wherever we think it ought to go.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLYNN. Yes.

Mr. ALLGOOD. If it is purely a power proposition, what would you advise doing with the $80,000,000 or $85,000,000 tied up in the nitrate plants there?

Mr. GLYNN. There is no such amount tied up.

Mr. ALLGOOD. It is $67,000,000 and $14,000,000.

Mr. GLYNN. Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL]. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, you can well imagine the surprise of the Tennesese delegation when virtually all the Members suddenly discovered that this bill had been reported out with the Cove Creek provisions in it, without any hearings and without any opportunity for a conference with our good friends constituting the Military Affairs Committee.

I do not rise to discuss any phases of this bill or to offer any contention that would interfere with the purposes of those who are seeking fertilizers under the bill or who are opposing fertilizers under the bill or who are seeking any other purpose, except in connection with the Cove Creek Dam provisions.

I desire to say to the membership of the House with all the emphasis and with all the earnestness of my nature, speaking, I think, for virtually each Member of my delegation, that so far as the Cove Creek provisions of this bill relate to the rights of Tennessee they do not in any sense constitute an exercise of valid Federal power, but instead they offer a most unjust and unfair discrimination against the highly valued rights of the State of Tennessee. [Applause.]

There are three methods, as you know, of developing power in this country. One is by the State itself; the other by a permit granted to private corporations by the joint action of the Federal and State authorities under the Federal power act; and the third method would be for the Federal Government itself to construct a dam primarily and essentially for navigation purposes, and any power resulting there might be commercialized. Those are the three methods.

In that connection I desire to remind the committee that prior to the World War there was no definite power policy formulated in this country. We had a few individual, sporadic instances of power development, through special acts of Congress granting to some local enterprise the right to construct a dam and use the power resulting. Occasionally a dam was constructed by the Government where power resulted, but, of course, essentially for navigation purposes.

Five decisions of the courts have trailed along, after a fashion, with the very partial and indefinite policy of Congress in so far as we had any water-power policy in this country prior to the war. Since then the Federal power act was enacted. That act recognized that the chief responsibility for power development in this country is on the States, and not on the Federal Government.

The result is that the States must themselves agree to the location of a plant, to the procurement of the banks and the local properties, and in the distribution of the power that results from the plants.

In this provision, gentlemen, the rights and the benefits that accrue to Tennessee have been dug up, root and branch, and swept away.

You know out in the West the great forest reserves, which have never belonged to the States but to the Federal Government, when they are put in the permanent public domain, the States are given as a matter of equity 25 per cent of the license and other fees. When the royalties from oil on the public domain come forth the States, as a matter of equity and fair dealing, are given 50 per cent of them, I believe, and while the States are always ready to make their contributions to the Nation in the way of internal improvements, there are certain fundamental rights and properties that are peculiarly applicable to them, which, as a matter of fair dealing in every sense, ought to be retained.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman tell us how far Cove Creek is from Muscle Shoals?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I am coming to that right now. I am sorry I only have 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I want to refer to the basis of the claim of the Federal Government for the right to develop and commercialize power in contrast with the fundamental rights of the States. For example, in the beginning the States were the complete proprietors of all the banks and the beds and the water of the streams in this country, as much so as we are the proprietors of the clothes we wear. Finally, the States said to the Federal Government, "We will concede to you the naked right to control and improve navigation in this country. You can come to the beds of our rivers and put up any dam that may be necessary to improve navigation."

Under this naked right, with no power given to use the water for any other purpose except navigation, Congress has drifted along without any challenge by the States, they being asleep, and has naturally gone a little too far in some of the special acts that have been passed.

Here is what belongs to the States, my friends. Here is a statement of the Alabama commission, and I desire to commend it to my good friends in the Alabama delegation here who are now seeking to sweep away from Tennessee the very rights their State sets forth in this document:

Subject only to the authority of the United States relative to navigation and war purposes, the State of Alabama claims absolute title to, and ownership, jurisdiction, and control of, that portion of the Tennessee River which is within the State of Alabama, its waters, banks, beds, and soils, including the power in the water and the value thereof, and all other property rights in anywise incident thereto or arising therefrom.

I hope my Alabama friends will not repudiate all of this fundamental doctrine when they come to vote on the amendment that will be offered here.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the States have certain rights, and all we are asking for Tennessee is this: We are willing that these great properties, that are worth $40,000,000, because you can get $2,000,000 a year, or 5 per cent on $40,000,000, in perpetuity, we are willing they shall be dedicated to the Nation in order that the Government may get a good return on its money that it will invest if it builds the dam, and a splendid profit in addition; but over and beyond that the State of Tennessee has four fundamental rights, and it asks recognition for the use of these rights and for the use of the property that it otherwise dedicates to the Nation:

The right to regulate this power as it would regulate power produced by any other agency.

The right to a voice in the distribution of this power.

The right to a voice in the making of charges for the 200,000 horsepower that will be furnished from this headwater to power projects below.

The right to impose taxes and water charges in connection with the power development.

Now, there are four rights that are literally swept away from Tennessee, and if this is to be made a precedent, gentlemen, all the States of the Union having developed water power may prepare themselves to turn over, root and branch, to the Federal Government in extra profits the proceeds of these four indispensable rights to any local community.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does the gentleman think the constitutional right of navigation carries with it the right to manufacture fertilizer as proposed in this bill?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I would rather discuss that with the gentleman a little later. I am undertaking to present this one angle from the standpoint of Tennessee, which does not in anywise affect the contentions of gentlemen who are involved in these other controversies.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL]. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, it had not been my intention in the brief time of five minutes allotted to me to discuss the claims of Tennessee, but the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] has rather challenged the Alabama delegation on this proposition.

I want to say to the membership of the House that as one member from Alabama—and I think I speak for the whole delegation—we feel this project is a great national project, that no selfish equation should enter into it, that it should be considered not from the point of view of Alabama, of Tennessee, of Georgia, of Kentucky, or of any other State of this Union, but rather from the standpoint of the benefit and the welfare of the whole country. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Tennessee has read from a report made by a commission in the State of Alabama. The Legislature of Alabama at its session last September specifically rejected that report when it refused to carry out the recommendations of that commission and enact any law whatsoever looking to the presentation of any claims at this time by the State of Alabama.

I think the Alabama delegation to-day shares in the position of the Legislature of Alabama; certainly, the delegation from Alabama is here to-day as a unit supporting the Morin bill as it was reported from the Military Committee.

Now, gentlemen, what the Alabama delegation asks is this: That we pass this bill for the disposition of Muscle Shoals; a disposition which has been patiently awaited for 10 years, and at some subsequent date the Congress of the United States can and should enact a general law with reference to water power, defining the rights of the Federal Government and the rights of the States; a law that will be uniform and will apply not only to Tennessee and Alabama, but to all the States of the Union.

For the Congress to make an exception in this case, to grant everything that is asked for by the State of Tennessee, may set a dangerous precedent which will rise up in days to come to plague and trouble the Congress. We have a great program ahead of us authorized by the last Congress, when the last Congress authorized an appropriation of over $7,000,000 for a survey of the navigable streams of this country. That program looks to the development of the navigation of the great rivers of the country, and if we adopt a policy here to-day with reference to Tennessee, how do we know that we will not have to follow that policy with reference to other States of the Union wherever the Federal Government may go to build a dam for the improvement of navigation? There should be some law defining the rights of the States and the Federal Government, and that law should be uniform and ought not to be tacked on in the form of some kind of an amendment to this bill to take care of the rights of any particular State, whether that State be Tennessee or Alabama.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think that law ought to be passed before the passage of this bill?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. No; this bill should be passed now. It is imperative that after a lapse of 10 years and no disposition having been made of the Muscle Shoals properties that this bill be passed here and now.

Mr. BROWNING. It is contemplated under this bill to build transmission lines all the way down to the gentleman's State. Is there anything selfish about that?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I deny that that is in the project or within the plan.

Mr. BROWNING. That is what the engineers' report says.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. No; that is not the fact. The engineers' report says that to get the maximum amount of power out of the river the different dams on the river must be interconnected, but, so far as carrying power from Tennessee into Alabama is concerned, that proposition has not been projected or even thought of by the engineers or anyone else, so far as I know of, except by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman move to strike out Cove Creek from the bill?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. No; I will not. I believe that Cove Creek is one of the great integral parts of Muscle Shoals, and of vital importance to the Government's properties there.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. How far is Cove Creek from Muscle Shoals?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I do not know exactly, but about 300 miles. By the use of Cove Creek the primary power at Wilson Dam is doubled.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Why did not the committee include Dam 3?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Let me say to the gentleman from Tennessee that I can not speak for the committee; but, as one member of the committee, I would be very happy to have Dam No. 3 included in the bill. If the gentleman will offer an amendment to this effect, I will vote for it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON].

Mr. EATON. Mr. Chairman, I can not understand how our Military Affairs Committee, composed as it is of able, conscientious, and experienced legislators, could be induced to bring before this House a bill dealing with a major matter of public interest, which is so hopelessly unsound and vicious from every American point of view. The only possible explanation seems to be that the committee, like the country and Congress, is sick and tired of the interminable Muscle Shoals delirium which has afflicted our country for almost 10 years, and in desperation they have at last shut their eyes and jumped off into space, landing, without intention or desire on their part, in a bottomless morass of injustice and economic absurdity.

Of all the wild and weird legislation introduced in the present session of Congress this Muscle Shoals bill caps the climax.

Without a single hour of public hearing before the committee this bill is brought in here on Calendar Wednesday with no opportunity for adequate debate. And this in spite of the fact that it involves the disposition of property which has cost the taxpayers of the country between one and two hundred millions of dollars and incidentally involves the absolute destruction of a great private industry, widely owned by American citizens and representing an investment of around $300,000,000.

I am opposed to this bill, among other reasons because it is unsound in its economic premises and reasoning, unfair and un-American in its methods, and it embodies class legislation of the most dangerous kind.

The sections of this bill dealing with the disposition of power are bad enough, but its provisions for invading the fertilizer industry are infinitely worse.

The fertilizer industry in this country represents a total investment of around $300,000,000. This branch of American private enterprise since the war has suffered acutely, its losses aggregating many millions of dollars. Under the provisions of this bill the privately owned fertilizer industry of the United States will suffer complete destruction at the hands of the Government which is sworn to protect every citizen in his rights and property.

Under the provisions of this bill the entire property at Muscle Shoals is turned over to a corporation financed by the taxpayers of this country with a free gift of a working capital of $10,000,000.

This corporation takes title to the whole Muscle Shoals property absolutely without cost to itself. It is empowered to operate the plant by the cyanamide method, which, as is well known, has been superseded by much more effective and cheaper methods of nitrogen fixation.

The new corporation is further empowered to construct other plants and use any other methods it may approve and to buy raw materials not made at the plant.

In arriving at its prices to be charged the consumer for its products the corporation is to figure no interest on the immense original investment made by the taxpayers of the whole country in the plant; no interest on its capital stock for the first five years; no taxes, insurance, rentals, depletions, or amortization charges. All of these items have to be figured as cost in the private manufacture of any product.

The corporation in the manufacture of fertilizer is relieved from paying any power charge, but has placed at its disposal surplus power worth $2,000,000 a year.

Any of this surplus power which is not used in the manufacture of fertilizer, the corporation is empowered to sell and to credit the income from this excess power to fertilizer income, or, in other words, to reduce the cost of its fertilizer by this amount.

The bill also authorizes the corporation under certain conditions to distribute free of charge to favored farmers from 5 to 15 per cent of its products.

The corporation is authorized by the bill to go into the Patent Office and seize the patent rights and secrets of private citizens and use them as it sees fit, leaving the citizens, who at great expense have secured these patents, under the unwarranted necessity and expense of taking court action in order to receive any remuneration for their property thus seized.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman believe that that section containing the patent proposition is possible of enforcement?

Mr. EATON. No; and we are about to enact it into law with a lot of other impossible things.

The management of this extraordinary enterprise is placed in the hands of a board which is only permitted by the bill to give half of its time to its functions in connection with the fertilizer corporation.

At this point the inevitable dictator is introduced in the person of a general manager who really has the supreme authority.

Last, but by no means least, the bill provides that "any person who shall receive any compensation, rebate, or reward or who shall enter into any conspiracy, collusion, or agreement, expressed or implied, with intent to defraud the corporation or to defeat its purposes shall on conviction thereof be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than 15 years or both."

That provision alone ought to defeat this bill in its entirety. Here is a Government corporation set up to compete with and to destroy by unfair competition the business of private citizens. And any private citizen who seeks "to defeat the purposes of this Government corporation" is to be fined $25,000 or imprisoned for 15 years.

This proposal, gentlemen, is offered to the American Congress in this year of our Lord 1928. Certainly the dictators of the Russian proletariat ought to come over here for a few lessons in tyranny.

I hold no brief for the fertilizer industry as developed by private enterprise in this country. I am not connected with it in any way except as a customer, but I am not willing as a Member of this House to sit silently by and see this industry confiscated and destroyed by action of our Government, which was created for the express purpose of guaranteeing this and all other industries and persons in the rights belonging to every American citizen. I believe the farmers of this country would be the first to protest against such legalized robbery and oppression. Our farmers want and need good and cheap fertilizers, but they can ill afford to obtain these fertilizers by agreeing to the acceptance of a governmental principle and practice under which their own property and the property of any other private citizen could be confiscated at the will of a Federal bureaucracy. [Applause.]

The fundamental fallacy which has bedeviled the Muscle Shoals proposition from the beginning is the idea that it was created for and belongs to one class of our people. As a war measure it was perfectly legitimate for the President of the United States to be authorized by Congress to build a plant for the production of war munitions at Muscle Shoals. But it was entirely beside the mark at that time and under those circumstances to hitch to a strictly war measure provisions for the manufacture of any article for the exclusive use of any class of our people in times of peace.

The Muscle Shoals property was not built by the money of any one class. It belongs as much to the pottery worker on the banks of the Delaware; to the apple grower on the banks of the Columbia; to the textile worker on the banks of the Merrimac, as it does to the farmer adjacent to the Tennessee River. The plant at Muscle Shoals was not built by western money, northern money, southern money, or eastern money. It was built by American money. It belongs to all the people of all the country. It can not and must not be made an instrument of tyranny, oppression, and confiscation directed toward any class or section of our people.

This bill puts the United States Government squarely into the power business and into the fertilizer business. Both proposals are contrary to the genius of our political and economic institutions and are fraught with serious menace to the prosperity and progress of our people.

There are two other reasons equally fundamental with those I have advanced why this bill should be defeated by this House.

The first of these reasons is that the power proposals of the bill are bound to inflict serious and permanent injury upon the future economic development of the South.

I venture to direct my remarks especially to the Members of this House who are fortunate enough to represent the people of our Southland. I have always been an admirer and lover of the South. It has been a fixed conviction of my mind since childhood that one of the greatest blunders if not one of the gravest crimes in American history was the way the reconstruction of the South was handled after the Civil War. Yet in spite of artificial difficulties created by prejudice and passion the brave men and women of the South girded themselves for the well-nigh hopeless task of reconstruction in the midst of desolation and ruin almost unparalleled, and in 60 years they have lifted themselves by their own genius and courage and intelligence steadily upward from the abyss until to-day they stand at the threshold of a golden age beckoning the whole South toward an economic achievement and a social prosperity and happiness which will make a new epoch in the glorious history of our great country.

It has been my privilege to study at first hand economic conditions in practically every Southern State. Especially in those States capable, because of their geographic position, of being served with power from the Tennessee River. It is a striking fact that from 1914 to 1925, as shown by a recent report of our Department of Commerce, manufacturing in these southeastern States increased 203 per cent, while in the country as a whole it increased only 159 per cent. In 1925, the value of the manufactured products in the States of Alabama, Tennessee, North and South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida was over $305,000,000 more than in 1923. While the South has in the past based its economic progress largely upon its agriculture and its agriculture in too many cases took the form of a one-crop enterprise, the great new economic force now developing through the South lies in the increase of manufacturing.

A few years ago I spent an entire winter studying the textile industry in southern Virginia and North and South Carolina. I found there an industrial development which in conditions of labor, in relations between employer and employee, in ideals of management, in housing conditions, and in most of the things that make life worth living compares favorably with any similar group that I have seen anywhere either in this country or in Europe.

I was struck especially with two aspects of the labor situation. One was the remarkable service which the textile industries of these States are rendering the country by bringing out of their mountain isolation great numbers of good citizens and giving them opportunity to mingle with the general current of our national life in and through the industrial centers.

And I was equally impressed by the fact that most of these great southern textile industries are located some distance from the larger centers of population. The effect of this upon the lives of the workers and the general level of social well-being can hardly be overestimated. There is one county in North Carolina—the county of Gaston, represented by the distinguished and able Member of this House Mr. BULWINKLE—which, in my judgment, is as nearly a model county as can be found anywhere in this country. It constitutes a great industrial community, but without congestion of population and with all the advantages of town and country combined.

What is the fundamental secret of this magnificent industrial awakening of these Southeastern States? To any unprejudiced mind the answer is absolutely unavoidable. This industrial progress is due to the remarkable development of hydroelectric energy on the rivers of the South by private enterprise and private capital. Reports from the Geological Survey show that the output of power in the six States of Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, North and South Carolina, and Florida increased from 3,828,000,000 kilowatt-hours in 1923 to nearly 7,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours in 1927. This is an increase of over 78 per cent, as compared with an increase of 46 per cent of the Nation as a whole. And, contrary to all traditions and teachings of the proponents of political ownership and operation, this power is among the cheapest and most efficient in the world.

These facts constitute a sufficient reason why every Member of this House from the Southeastern States of this Union should vote to defeat the bill now under consideration. The Tennessee River constitutes the greatest single undeveloped natural asset of the South to-day. On the river from Muscle Shoals to Cove Creek there can be developed a power output of 4,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours a year. The introduction of this enormous reservoir of power into the economic and social resources of the Southeastern States will in itself insure an era of progress and prosperity never before achieved in this section.

I trust that the Representatives of this favored section of our country will not deem it an impertinence on my part if I venture to suggest that they approach the Muscle Shoals project from this new point of view, dealing with it as an asset of all of the Southern States rather than as a problem in politics to be solved here in Washington. The political mind runs in one groove, the economic mind in another. The problem of Muscle Shoals and the Tennessee River affects profoundly a great section of our country and through it the general level of prosperity and progress in the Nation as a whole. It is the duty of the economic-minded men of the South who have built up this great fabric of public service in the electric industry and in the other industries, including agriculture, and of the political leaders of that section to get together and work out a plan for the development not only of Muscle Shoals but of the whole Tennessee River which will be economically sound and at the same time in tune with the fundamental principle of our social and political institutions. This I am sure can be done and will be done, but the surest way to prevent the doing of it will be to put upon the statute books this inadequate and amazing law. The passage by this Congress of this bill will do more to deprive the citizens of the South of the enormous benefits accruing from the full development of the Tennessee River than any or all other causes combined.

My final reason for asking that this proposed legislation be defeated is to be found in the general economic development of our country. We are the most prosperous people in the world. We have the highest level of comfort, the widest distribution of wealth ever achieved by any society since time began. The one great modern problem which agitates every society is the determination, which is perfectly just and right, on the part of the masses of men to secure adequate participation in the economic resources of the world. In the achievement of this high purpose civilization has chosen organized industry as its chief instrument. And the center and front of organized industry is the power plant.

In America under private enterprise, backed by private capital, using organized industry as the chief instrument, we have gone further in spreading the ownership of property among the masses of men than any society that ever existed. And in this salutary process we are under enormous obligation to the electric industry. The electric industry of the United States made possible entirely by the wonderful development of cheap and adequate power by private initiative, enterprise, and capital, is the greatest single social service of a material kind ever rendered any people in the history of the world.

To meet an urgent and ever-increasing public demand, it has grown so rapidly as to outgrow public understanding. As a result there are doubtless some parts of the business which need readjustment. But these adjustments can never be brought about by putting the Federal Government into the power business. The average American has too much sense to burn down a fine barn in order to kill a weazel or two.

Modern industry as the chief instrument of civilization now confronts a choice between methods. One is the Old World method of putting government first and the citizen last. The other is the American method of putting the citizen first and making the Government, which is his own creation, his servant rather than his master. One of these methods must eventually prevail throughout the world. Of the first method, Russia is the supreme example. Of the second method, America is the supreme example.

Time will not permit me to give to the House the facts which prove beyond peradventure that in facing this strictly modern problem America has consciously or unconsciously hit upon the best possible solution, which is to increase the ownership of the Nation's wealth among the masses of men, rather than to concentrate all power and all wealth in the hands of the Government.

My final objection to the bill now before the House is that it introduces into the economic development of America a principle which has its origin not in America but in the Old World, a principle which has never been successful and never can be. A principle which contravenes the foundations and ideals of our Government and which, if enacted into law, will surely slow down our progress and diminish our prosperity.

This bill puts the Government into business and puts the private citizen out of business. In that proportion the Government becomes strong, the citizens weak. To that degree the power of the Government increases, the rights of the citizens are diminished.

If we must go outside America to find some solution for the Muscle Shoals problem, why go to Russia? Russia is a country larger than our own, with a larger population, with a longer history, with equal or greater natural resources. But the people of that unhappy country know nothing of political freedom nor of economic prosperity in the American sense. No Russian has ever drawn a free breath on Russian soil, and the great communistic experiment now going on in that country, up to the present time at least, has resulted in social chaos and individual distress.

If we must go outside our own country to find principles for the solution of our problems at Muscle Shoals and elsewhere, why not go to some country which is better off than we are? Where can we find such a country? Our answer is, Nowhere. We are the most favored people in the world. It behooves us not lightly to turn aside from those principles, methods, and ideals which have brought us thus far upon the way of peace, prosperity, and happiness.

I hope this House will kill this bill. Not simply because the committee has failed over long and weary sessions to find some solution to the problem but because the bill is inadequate, unjust, un-American. Let us sweep the decks clean of our prejudices and preconceptions and passions, and recognize this as an American problem, to be solved in an American way. To this end I would suggest that we ask the President of the United States before the next session of Congress to call a conference of legislators, economists, farmers, industrial workers, leaders in the power industry, and any others qualified to make a contribution. By man-to-man discussion such a conference would reach a new understanding of the facts and factors involved and work out a plan which when submitted by the proper committee to this Congress can be acted upon with enthusiasm and unanimity, just as we solved the difficult alien-property matter. Thus and thus only can we reach a solution of the whole question of political versus private ownership of public services by the application of principles that are just, that are permanent, and, above all, that are American. [Applause.]

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN].

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, we thank the distinguished and learned gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON] for this magnificent tribute to the progressive spirit of the new South, but I wish you to note that it has no relevancy or relation whatever to the subject under discussion. The distinguished gentleman bottomed what argument he did make upon the proposition that the mistake was made 12 years ago when the National Government coupled the proposition of national defense with the proposition of fertilizer at Muscle Shoals under section 124 of the national defense act. I submit to your fair and square judgment, as the representatives and keepers of the safety of this Nation in peace and in war, that one of the wisest projects ever inaugurated in the interest of national defense was that in 1916, whereby we provided for an adequate domestic supply of nitrogen, because without nitrogen we are absolutely helpless from the point of view of national defense. Without nitrogen our magnificent battleships are but floating ornaments. Without nitrogen every cannon and every gun and hand grenade is absolutely useless, silent, and harmless. During the World War our sole supply of nitrogen came from Chile, and it took not only $550,000,000 of our money to pay for it, more than $12 of which on every ton was paid as royalty to the Chilean Government, amounting to $97,000,000, but it also took 20 per cent of our shipping tonnage to transport it from Chile to American shores. One ton out of every five of our American shipping was devoted to the transportation of this single element of nitrogen alone. What would happen in the event of war? What might happen if the enemy got possession of the seas and drove our transports from the seas? We would be absolutely helpless. Every student of national defense for the last generation has announced it as an undisputed proposition that we must have a domestic supply of nitrogen. Not only that, but if enemy airplanes were to bomb our locks at the Panama Canal and destroy them so that our transports could not get through, our battleships and cannon and rifles would be utterly idle and useless.

What situation do we find? We find that here in the supply of nitrogen in time of war we have an element that is desirable, useful, and indispensable in time of peace to preserve life itself in the production of vegetation as food for man and beast. The next war, gentlemen, will use more nitrogen than the last one. Every war throughout history has employed an increasing amount of nitrogen. During the Revolutionary War, for seven long years we did not use as much nitrogen in our black gunpowder as did the American Army at the single battle of St. Mihiel. That one battle used more nitrogen than seven years of war under Washington. Not only that, but the 110 days' fighting of the American forces in France consumed 500,000 pounds more of nitrogen than did all the Union Armies during the four years' war with the Southern States. What will happen in the next war? They did a little bombing a few months ago of a concrete bridge by airplanes in North Carolina and then and there used more nitrogen in a matter of experiment to see what would be the effect of bombs on a single concrete bridge than was used by the Union Army at the Battle of Gettysburg. We have to have it inside of our own country and not outside in order to defend our Nation's very life itself. The $700,000,000 we are spending every year on the Army and Navy to defend ourselves is worse than money thrown away unless we have a domestic, interior supply of nitrogen. [Applause.]

The national defense act, representing the wisdom of the Congress of 1916—and you remember what was in the mind of the Congress in 1916—said that since we must have the nitrogen for war purposes, and since it is useful in time of peace, let us tie the two together; and that is what they did. That is what this Congress has insisted shall be done from that minute to this.

The joint congressional committee appointed by the joint resolution of the House and Senate provided that the two should be tied together, and every action of the Military Affairs Committee that has had this under consideration since 1922 has insisted that the two should be tied together in order that the power, which is highly desirable on the part of many private interests, may be a sort of subsidy to carry the fertilizer end of the project, the nitrogen end, the national-defense end along with it. Gentlemen, would we not be very happy if we had a navy yard that was self-sustaining, if we had a fleet that was self-sustaining, if we had an Army that was self-sustaining? Here is the indispensable arsenal, here is the very life, the very nerve, the heart of the whole scheme of national defense, and under the proposition now before us is to be self-sustaining and not to cost the taxpayers of the Nation in the end a single cent. We, the committee, wanted private operation; but, gentlemen, there was but one bidder before us, and we could not compel him to take it, and he wanted it on his own terms, and we were not willing to lease the plant on the bidder's own terms just to get the name of private operation. I do not believe you gentlemen would have favored it. I am quite satisfied that the three gentlemen who now uphold this bill here were opposing with all their vigor the proposition before the committee to lease the Muscle Shoals project to that single private bidder.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Does not the gentleman remember that they voted for the Madden bill?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes; as against this committee bill; but was not the gentleman opposed to the Madden bill until it was put up as against this proposition?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I did not have any chance to show any opposition until the vote came.

Mr. McSWAIN. I withdraw the charge.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. And then with certain amendments which the gentleman was trying to get and everyone was trying to get.

Mr. McSWAIN. I tried to put them on. The able and distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, of course, never disclosed his hand, and I say that I was wrong in that regard. I think, however, that if it came to a vote on its face, without being in contrast with this proposition, he would have voted against the offer, because I know his general attitude, which is fair and square. But we were forced to the matter of some sort of Government operation. We say that the proposition that came from the Senate was like a bag open at both ends.

This Senate bill would not have produced fertilizer, and it would not have contained those essential elements of national defense, and would not have preserved nitrate plant No. 2 as a going concern. So we decided, if we are going to have Government operation, let us not have a mockery, such as we feared we might have under the Norris bill, but let us have Government operation like that of the Post Office Department, like the War Finance Corporation, like the Shipping Board, that has centralized authority. So we turned it over to a board of directors, which in turn would operate it through a general manager—one man. It is organized like an army. Here is the general manager, the commander in chief. The President of the United States appointed General Pershing to take the American Expeditionary Forces to France and be their general ruler, so as to get results. Everything under the head of electric power comes up through the assistant manager for power. If it is a question of hydroelectric power or steam power, everything goes back through this organization into the hands of the general manager through his successive subordinates. Suppose it is a matter of fertilizer. The production comes from the assistant manager for fertilizer. The sale of fertilizer comes up to the general manager.

It is a matter of sale at a fixed price, preference being given to the farmers and States authorized to sell to the farmers and next to States and then to mixers of fertilizers. The subordinate men are responsible to those above them, and they in turn are responsible to the assistant manager, and the assistant manager is responsible to the manager.

Now, gentlemen, we have heard the criticism time and time again that the Government can not succeed in this business. We are opposed to Government operation, and we have here followed a form of organization that was adopted in the War Finance Corporation. We have followed an organization such as was formed in the operation of the Panama Railroad and the Panama Canal. We have followed, as suggested by the President's commission, the plan outlined in 1925, when he appointed a commission of experts, of which Senator Dial, of my State, was a member. These gentlemen laid down a proposition in entire harmony with the policy of this Congress from 1916, and they said if we could not get a private lease pursuant to the original terms they should do what? Organize a corporation, of which the Government should own 100 per cent of the stock, and put it into the hands of a board of directors of five men and let them operate it. Every one of the five members of the President's commission in 1925 who reported in 1926 was in harmony with his colleagues on that proposition. They were a unit on that proposition, although they differed on other things. Curtis and McClellan filed a minority report on that proposition, but on the proposition to put it in the hands of five men of known business and administrative ability they were unanimous.

If you will read the speech of the gentleman from New Jersey, you would think we were a bunch of bolshevists. You would think we were a bunch of revolutionists. You would think we proposed to undermine the Constitution of the United States. Of course, the gentleman has made a nice speech, but he could have made it just as well without having ever read the bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I am not sure but that my good friend from South Carolina [Mr. MCSWAIN] can support the provisions of the substitute that I intend to offer to this bill. [Applause.]

I have been deeply interested in Muscle Shoals from the very first and have always followed this legislation. I greatly regret that there has not been presented to the committee some plan of private operation that was compatible with the original intent of Congress, that the committee could present here for our consideration. I think I might say right here that I am gravely disappointed that the business interests of the country, representing the power companies and fertilizer companies, have not been more helpful in trying to solve this problem. [Applause.]

I think they are deserving of criticism in that they have not come forward with some concrete, constructive suggestion.

Furthermore, I think the people have a right to criticize us for our delay in solving this proposition.

I have stated several times on this floor that we certainly should do something at this session, and I have not changed my mind. Whether the bill that is passed is satisfactory to me or not, we now have a concrete proposition before us, and I propose that Congress express itself without further delay.

The Government has an investment as the result of the war of around $167,000,000 at Muscle Shoals. The question is what will we do with that property to make the best economic use possible under present conditions. That is the only proposition before us.

And I am not going to stand here and blindly oppose the bill presented by the committee—and the committee has worked long, laboriously, and conscientiously on the proposition—without offering something that in my opinion will more fairly meet the economic thought of the majority of our people and according to my idea of Government.

If I understand correctly the bill presented by the committee, it definitely commits the Federal Government to the manufacture and sale of fertilizer in unlimited amounts—in unlimited places for all times, which is positively opposed to my theory of government. My bill authorizes at first experimental manufacture of fertilizers, and if successful, we can then go as far as Congress cares to appropriate the money. It sets aside 15,000 kilowatts or 20,000 firm horsepower to be used for this purpose, and provides for selling the balance to the highest bidder.

The committee's bill provides for an additional expenditure of from sixty to one hundred million dollars, regardless of the success of the enterprise, while my substitute does not call for any immediate expenditure but makes it permissible if the undertaking proves a success.

My substitute simply provides for using the property you now own at Muscle Shoals with as little economic waste as possible without controversy with individual States and in no way destroys any man's business or violates those fundamental principles of government that have made this country great and prosperous.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. No; I regret I can not yield.

Mr. QUIN. The committee bill is based on the understanding that it can go into private business.

Mr. SNELL. While my bill proposes limited Government operation, it is simply for the property we now own and which came to us as a result of the war, and it in no way commits us to that policy.

It is limited to a period of five years in the hope we can work out a permanent solution in that time.

Now I want to give you a short analysis of the bill itself. I desire to explain rapidly the details and provisions of the substitute that I propose to offer.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I would like to know what disposition your plan makes of Cove Creek.

Mr. SNELL. It makes no provision.

The first proposition is to utilize the power facilities at Muscle Shoals so as to produce the highest practicable annual revenue to the United States and to use the annual revenues, or so much thereof as may be considered desirable, for the development of methods of nitrogen fixation in the interest of national defense and for the production and distribution of concentrated fertilizers and the promotion of their use.

That is the first proposition. Then section 2 authorizes the President, acting through the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, to enter into a contract or contracts for the sale of power from Dam No. 2 and from the steam plant at nitrate plant No. 2 in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals in accordance with the policies outlined above, and under the conditions set forth in following sections, for a period not exceeding five years.

Section 3 provides that under the direction of the Secretary of War the cost of such operation and maintenance shall be taken from the revenue derived from the sale of power. Section 4 provides for the continuous output of 15,000 kilowatts, which shall be reserved for the Secretary of Agriculture for the manufacture of fertilizer under the conditions set forth hereafter. I have found on examination that it will be necessary to increase that reservation by a certain amount and may propose later to do that in the consideration of the substitute.

It also provides that contracts may be entered into for the sale of secondary power in such amounts as will not be necessary for the manufacture and development of the fertilizer proposition.

Section 5 is an administrative section, but it does provide that the Government may lease or build transmission lines, if it is not possible to get a reasonable bid for the power at the switchboard. That protects us so we can not be held up by the Alabama Power Co., which company now owns or controls all of the available transmission lines that lead to Muscle Shoals.

Section 6 provides that the power shall be sold to the highest bidder, and that we shall get the most money possible out of it.

Section 7 is another administrative section and provides for the load factors, and so forth, but that is not important here now.

Section 8 provides that if the President deems it advisable and profitable they can enlarge the steam plant at Dam No. 2.

Sections 9 and 10 provide for the experiments in the manufacture of fertilizer through the Department of Agriculture. I think I had better read those sections completely to the committee so the Members will understand them:

SEC. 9. The President, through the Secretary of Agriculture, is hereby authorized, within the limits of appropriations made by Congress, to construct, maintain, and operate, on the site of nitrate plant No. 1, an experimental and/or production plant or plants for the development of methods of nitrogen fixation and for the manufacture of fertilizer or fertilizer products in such quantities as he may deem advisable. For this purpose nitrate plant No. 1, including the steam power plant and all buildings, equipment, and dwellings in connection therewith, which he may desire, shall be transferred to the Secretary of Agriculture who is hereby authorized to make such alterations, repairs, and additions as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act, subject to the proviso contained in section 12.

SEC. 10. Subject to the instructions of the President, the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to commence the manufacture of cyanamid by the use of one unit of nitrate plant No. 2 as soon as practicable, and to construct and operate such facilities as may be necessary to demonstrate the adaptability of this method of nitrogen fixation for fertilizer purposes. This plant shall be operated at the capacity of one unit for a period sufficient to determine whether or not fertilizer can be manufactured by this process at a cost favorably comparable with other processes, and whether a market can be established for its use. If the cyanamid process proves to be successful, and production costs are no higher than those for other forms of fertilizers, the President, at his discretion, and as the market demands, may direct the Secretary of Agriculture to increase the production from nitrate plant No. 2, to the full capacity of such plant, or any suitable fraction thereof.

Section 11 provides for the disposition and sale of whatever fertilizer or nitrates is made by the Government.

Section 12 provides that the plants we own at the present time shall be kept in what is called good stand-by condition for use in time of war.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. For a short question.

Mr. ARENTZ. Are the terms "nitrogen" and "fertilizer" synonymous, or does the gentleman mean them as two different products?

Mr. SNELL. They are two different products.

Mr. ARENTZ. The gentleman is using first one and then the other.

Mr. SNELL. Well, I am hurriedly running through this on account of my limited time, but I think the gentleman understands.

Mr. LOWREY. Will the gentleman enlarge on section 11, as to the disposition of fertilizer and nitrogen?

Mr. SNELL. I will read section 11:

SEC. 11. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to dispose of the fertilizer or fertilizer products manufactured at any of the plants hereinbefore mentioned. During the term of experimental operation the price of such products shall, if practicable, be so regulated so as to afford a return covering the cost of production including a reasonable rate of interest on the investment in plant and equipment, but in any event such as to insure their prompt disposal and use. Accurate records shall be kept so that the actual cost of producing fertilizer commercially under the methods followed may be determined at the conclusion of experimental operation. If production be continued as provided for in this act, the product shall be sold at rates sufficient to cover the entire cost of production, including interest at 4 per cent on the fair value to the facilities used.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does the gentleman's bill put the Government into the manufacture of fertilizer just as the pending bill does?

Mr. SNELL. In a limited way it does provide for the manufacture of fertilizer by the Government.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I had supposed the gentleman's bill was for the purpose of experimentation.

Mr. SNELL. It is for the purpose of experimentation, and then if the experiment proves successful they can go ahead and manufacture nitrates and also complete fertilizers.

Mr. CAREW. Forever?

Mr. SNELL. No; for a period of five years. It is limited to five years.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman said that the fertilizers under his bill were to be sold at cost plus 4 per cent on the investment. Does that include the total investment at Muscle Shoals?

Mr. SNELL. Well, that really does not mean very much during the period of experiments, but if we figure anything on the investment it would be on the power plant itself.

Mr. CRISP. About $50,000,000.

Mr. SNELL. Forty-nine million dollars, to be exact.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Does the gentleman's bill provide for fixed fertilizers?

Mr. SNELL. Yes; in a general way; but it does not go into all the details of manufacture and distribution, as is done in the committee bill. Those must be worked out later if it proves successful.

I can not say very much in the time I have remaining, but I want to suggest this: My bill simply provides for the use of property which the Federal Government owns at Muscle Shoals at the present time, with as little economic waste as possible. I am not in favor of any kind of Government ownership or operation, but the Government has this property and it is incumbent upon us as directors of this corporation to make some disposition of this property. I feel that the bill I have offered or intend to offer with some slight amendments could be made workable. It would take care of our property; it would develop whether we are able to manufacture fertilizers to advantage or not and at the same time it would not be expensive. It does not call for any additional appropriations at the present time, and none will be needed unless it is developed that we can do this and do it successfully. Then Congress can make such appropriations as it sees fit.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. There will be $2,000,000 available in earnings from the dam almost immediately.

Mr. SNELL. That is so. There is at least $2,000,000 worth of surplus property there which my bill provides can be sold, and that amount can be used at the present time for the development of this work.

It seems to me this is a practical proposition and that it is a practical way to solve this problem. I hope the committee will give it careful consideration. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES]. [Applause.]

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, one would imagine from the speeches made by the three members of the House Committee on Military Affairs, Mr. RANSLEY, Mr. FROTHINGHAM, and Mr. GLYNN, that they are in favor of private operation and that the fight in the committee was between private operation and Government operation.

We had only one private operation bill before the committee; and where was Mr. RANSLEY at that time, and where was Mr. FROTHINGHAM at that time? If Mr. GLYNN had been here at that time, I am sure he would also have been against the Ford offer, and that was the only offer we had that provided private operation.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON] stated he did not represent and had nothing at all to do with fertilizer companies. I wish the gentleman had stated whether he has any interest of any kind in any power company like the General Electric.

And one would imagine from the speech of the gentleman from New Jersey that he is also in favor of private operation. We have only one private operation bill before our committee; was the gentleman from New Jersey in favor of that? The gentleman made bitter speeches against the offer of the American Cyanamid Co. The gentleman is for power and for power only.

Gentlemen, as a member of the House Committee on Military Affairs I have been engaged on the Muscle Shoals proposition for six years and my chief interest in it is not fertilizer. That comes second. I am not interested in power at all. What I am interested in, and have always been interested in, is the matter of national defense, and that is the only reason the bill is before the Military Affairs Committee.

We built nitrate plant No. 2 for one thing, and that was in case of war we would have the nitrates necessary to manufacture munitions. This plant is capable of taking care of 14 divisions of the American Army.

I was for the Ford offer. It was the best offer we ever had. We would have had fertilizer manufactured there under the Ford offer.

I also happened to be on the joint committee. During most of the time I was acting chairman of the joint committee of the House and the Senate, and we worked over there for about a month. We had up the matter of Government operation and we also had the offer of the American Cyanamid Co. I would like to have been for private operation, but there was no offer before the joint committee that I could vote for and come out here on the floor and say that it adequately protected the United States. There was nothing of this kind in the American Cyanamid offer then, and there was nothing of that sort when we quit. We practically subsidized them with the entire Tennessee River, and they could stop manufacturing fertilizer after having about $1,500,000 on the dump, and then from that time on it became strictly a power proposition and there was no way of getting back our property.

Before Mr. Madden introduced his bill the first time he talked with me about it. Before he introduced it the last time he came out to Walter Reed Hospital and asked me whether or not he should reintroduce the bill, because Mr. Madden had not forgotten the experience in his office just before we adjourned the last time. We tried for over a month to get Mr. Bell, of the American Cyanamid Co., to agree to the proposition that when it became a power proposition pure and simple and there was no more fertilizer, then we could get back our property. We could not get this amendment. We could not get any suggestion of this kind.

Finally, the men representing the Farm Bureau had the idea that Mr. Madden and myself being good friends, if we were to meet in conference and he should say that we were wrong in asking for a guaranty, we might withdraw it. Mr. Madden listened to Mr. Bell and to myself, and finally he said to Mr. Bell, "There must be a guaranty in there so that when you stop making fertilizer we get back our property." He then made Mr. Bell the suggestion that when it became a strictly power proposition the contract would be rewritten for the unexpired time by three Justices of the Supreme Court. This was turned down, and as Mr. Bell said he could not agree to it, Mr. Madden said, "Although I sponsored your bill, why do you not withdraw your offer?"

Mr. Madden came out to see me again this time and asked me what I thought about reintroducing his bill, and I said, "That is all right, provided you will not be for the bill unless we can get the same kind of a clause we asked Mr. Bell for the last time." The bill was reintroduced with this understanding.

The day before we had Mr. Bell before us the last time, Mr. Madden called me over to his office and asked how we were getting along. I told him we were against the same proposition in 1928 that we were against in 1926 and in 1927, and that was the provision that we could not get back our property when they ceased making fertilizer. Mr. Madden told me then he had sent word to Mr. Bell several times that he ought to agree to an amendment of this kind.

There is practically not a man on our committee who wanted to be for Government operation, but we had no bill providing private operation that we dared come out here and face you gentlemen with. We could not come out here and say we had a bill providing for the manufacture of fertilizer when there was no section in the bill by which we could get back our property when they stopped making fertilizer, and neither could we be for the Norris bill because under that bill you would have fertilizer plants all over the United States. We wanted this confined to Muscle Shoals. Neither did we want to see the Department of Agriculture making fertilizer or experimenting in the making of fertilizer.

Under the Norris proposition you could have fertilizer plants all over the United States, and, as I have said, we wanted it confined to Muscle Shoals. Under the Norris bill, also, the fertilizer was to be made under the Department of Agriculture, and Senator NORRIS said that if the fertilizer was made down there under his bill it would be made under the direction of Doctor Cottrell.

Every time that Doctor Cottrell appeared before our committee he said he was not in favor of the Government going into any kind of business. It is not a question of a fight between private operation and Government operation. It is a question whether you are going to be in favor of the Morin bill, the Norris bill, or the Snell bill.

You will not get any fertilizer under the Snell bill. It provides for 20,000 horsepower. Why, gentlemen, it takes 70,000 horsepower to operate one unit of nitrate plant No. 2 alone, to say nothing of what it is going to take to operate nitrate plant No. 1. It takes $8,000,000 to $10,000,000 to put plants No. 1 and No. 2 into condition so it will operate with the requisite horsepower. There is nothing in the Snell bill that provides any money to fix up the plants.

Mr. Bell never claimed that he could operate plant No. 2 without putting in eight or ten million dollars. Is there anything in the Snell bill with reference to that? Not a word. It is a power proposition with no fertilizer in it. There can not be any fertilizer in it unless there is a reasonable amount of horsepower and you give the money as we do in our bill.

It has been stated that the farmers are not for the bill. It is true the Farm Bureau is not for the bill. They say that under our bill there will be no fertilizer. The fertilizer people say that if our bill passes it will materially hurt them. Who is the best judge as to whether we can make fertilizer or not—the representative of the Farm Bureau or the fertilizer people?

Gentlemen, as I said, I would like to have been for private operation, but there never has been a good private operation offer since that of Henry Ford, and finally we came to the same conclusion that John McKenzie, chairman of the President's committee, came to, and John McKenzie was neither a Bolshevist nor an anarchist. How many times have you seen him on the floor here saying, "We standpatters must stand together"? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. J. Res. 46, 70th Cong., 1st sess.

Joint resolution providing for the completion of Dam No. 2 and the steam plant at nitrate plant No. 2 in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals for the manufacture and distribution of fertilizer, and for other purposes

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby empowered and directed to complete Dam No. 2 at Muscle Shoals, Ala., and the steam plant at nitrate plant No. 2, in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, by installing in Dam No. 2 the additional power units according to the plans and specifications of said dam, and the additional power unit in the steam plant at nitrate plant No. 2: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall not install the additional power unit in said steam plant until, after investigation, he shall be satisfied that the foundation of said steam plant is sufficiently stable or has been made sufficiently stable to sustain the additional weight made necessary by such installation.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed, within the limits of appropriations made by Congress from the fund hereinafter provided for or from the Treasury of the United States—

(a) To construct, maintain, and operate experimental or production plants anywhere in the United States for the manufacture and distribution of fertilizer or any of the ingredients comprising fertilizer;

(b) To contract with commercial producers for the production of such fertilizers or fertilizer materials as may be needed in the Government's program of development and introduction in excess of that produced by Government plants. Such contracts may provide either for outright purchase by the Government or only for the payment of carrying charges on special materials manufactured at the Government's request for its program;

(c) To arrange with farmers and farm organizations for large-scale practical use of the new forms of fertilizers under conditions permitting an accurate measure of the economic return they produce;

(d) To contract with said farmers and farm organizations to pay the special costs and losses, if any, sustained by them as a direct result of such large-scale use of the new fertilizer or fertilizer practices during the initial or experimental period of their introduction;

(e) Whenever the Secretary determines that it is commercially feasible to produce any such fertilizer, it shall be produced in the largest quantities practicable, and shall be disposed of at the lowest prices practicable, to meet the agricultural demands therefor, and to effectuate the purposes of this act;

(f) The Secretary is authorized to make alterations, modifications, or improvements in existing plants and facilities and to construct and operate new plants and facilities in order to effectuate properly the provisions of this section.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Agriculture in carrying out the purposes of this act shall locate a fertilizer plant in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals in Alabama and there shall be turned over to him the nitrate plants together with the steam plant at nitrate plant No. 1 connected therewith and such other buildings, houses, and shops there located as shall be necessary for the Secretary and his employees in the construction and maintenance and operation of such plants; and, when such fertilizer plant is thus located and established in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, all the power necessary for the requirements of said plant shall be supplied from said steam plant located at nitrate plant No. 2 or from Dam No. 2.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to utilize nitrate plant No. 2 for experiments in the production of fertilizers by the use of the cyanamide process, to determine whether it is or is not commercially feasible to produce fertilizers by such process. If the Secretary of Agriculture determines that it is commercially feasible to produce fertilizers by the cyanamide process, then such plant shall be used for the production of fertilizers by such process in the largest quantities practicable and the fertilizers so produced shall be disposed of at the lowest prices practicable, to meet the agricultural demands therefor and effectuate the purposes of this resolution. In the utilization of nitrate plant No. 2 the Secretary of Agriculture shall avail himself of power in the same manner as provided in section 8.

SEC. 5. Revenue obtained from the sale of fertilizer or fertilizer materials shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and shall become a part of the special fund hereinafter provided.

SEC. 6. The Secretary of War is hereby empowered and authorized to sell the surplus current not used in fertilizer operations and for operation of locks and other works generated at said steam plant and said dam to State, counties, municipalities, corporations, partnerships, or individuals, according to the policies hereinafter set forth, and to carry out said authority the Secretary of War is authorized to enter into contracts for such sale for a term not exceeding 10 years and in the sale of such current by the Secretary of War he shall give preference to States, counties, or municipalities purchasing said current for distribution to citizens and customers.

SEC. 7. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Government to distribute the surplus current generated at Muscle Shoals equitably among the States within transmission distance of Muscle Shoals.

SEC. 8. In order to place the Secretary of War upon a fair basis for making such contracts and for receiving bids for the sale of such current, he is hereby expressly authorized, either from appropriations made by Congress or from funds secured from the sale of such current, to construct, lease, or authorize the construction of transmission lines within transmission distance in any direction from said Dam No. 2 and said steam plant: Provided, That if any State, county, municipality, or other public or cooperative organization of citizens or farmers, not organized or doing business for profit, but for the purpose of supplying electricity to its own citizens or members, or any two or more of such municipalities or organizations, shall construct or agree to construct a transmission line to Muscle Shoals, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to contract with such State, county, municipality, or other organization, or two or more of them, for the sale of electricity for a term not exceeding 15 years, and in any such case the Secretary of War shall give to such State, county, municipality, or other organization ample time to fully comply with any local law now in existence or hereafter enacted providing for the necessary legal authority for such State, county, municipality, or other organization to contract with the Secretary of War for such electricity: And provided further, That any surplus power not so sold as above provided to States, counties, municipalities, or other said organizations, before the Secretary of War shall sell the same to any person or corporation engaged in the distribution and resale of electricity for profit, he shall require said person or corporation to agree that any resale of such electric power by said person or corporation shall be sold to the ultimate consumer of such electric power at a price that shall not exceed an amount fixed as reasonable, just, and fair by the Federal Power Commission; and in case of any such sale if an amount is charged the ultimate consumer which is in excess of the price so deemed to be just, reasonable, and fair by the Federal Power Commission, the contract for such sale between the Secretary of War and such distributor of electricity shall be declared null and void and the same shall be canceled by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 9. The money received by the Secretary of War for the sale of such current, after deducting the cost of operation, maintenance, depreciation, and the cost of constructing transmission lines, if any, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and the same shall be segregated and set aside as a special fund for developing, manufacturing, and introducing improved fertilizers and fertilizer practices for the purpose of reducing the cost and increasing the efficiency and use of fertilizers on American soils.

SEC. 10. Both the Secretary of War and the Secretary of Agriculture shall report in detail to Congress, on the first Monday in December of each year, their operations under this joint resolution.

SEC. 11. In order that the Secretary of Agriculture may not be delayed in carrying out the program authorized herein the sum of $10,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated for that purpose from the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 12. The Government of the United States hereby reserves the right, in case of war, to take possession of all or any part of the property described or referred to in this act for the purpose of manufacturing explosives or for other war purposes; but, if this option is exercised by the Government, it shall pay the reasonable and fair damages that may be suffered by any party whose contract for the purchase of current is thereby violated.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BYRNS. As I understand it, the substitute will not be considered section by section?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the House refused unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from New York, and this is one amendment.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Assuming there are Members of the House who would like to vote for the Senate bill known as the Norris bill; how can that be accomplished?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment, and if that is voted down, then the question comes up on the Senate bill.

Mr. LINTHICUM. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Have we a right to amend the different sections of the committee amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to offer an amendment to the Senate bill?

Mr. LINTHICUM. No; to the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can offer amendments to the committee amendment after it has been reported to the House.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRISP. Is not this the parliamentary situation? The original Senate bill was read under the five-minute rule and would have been open for perfecting amendments to any section. None have been offered. Now the House committee substitute it to be read through in its entirety and then it is open, any part of it, to perfecting amendments? When that has been perfected a motion will come to substitute the House committee amendment for the original Senate bill. If the committee does substitute the House amendment for the original text of the Senate bill, that displaces the Senate bill. Those who prefer the original Senate bill will vote down the substitute and that leaves the original Senate text before the committee for its consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; if the committee amendment is voted down, then the question will arise on the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

"ORGANIZATION OF CORPORATION

"That for the purpose of maintaining and operating the properties now owned by the United States in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, Ala., in the interest of the national defense and for agricultural and industrial development, and to aid navigation and the control of destructive flood waters in the Tennessee River and Mississippi River Basins, there is hereby created a body corporate by the name of the 'Muscle Shoals Corporation of the United States' (hereinafter referred to as the corporation). The board of directors first appointed shall be deemed the incorporators, and the incorporation shall be held to have been effected from the date of the first meeting of the board. This act may be cited as the 'Muscle Shoals act of 1928.'

"BOARD OF DIRECTORS AND OFFICERS

"SEC. 2. (a) The board of directors of the corporation (hereinafter referred to as the board) shall be composed of five members, not more than three of whom shall be members of the same political party, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and when at least three directors shall have been confirmed any one of such three or more shall call the first meeting of said board, and at such meeting the board shall organize by electing a chairman, vice chairman, and other officers, agents, and employees, and shall proceed to carry out the provisions of this act.

"(b) The terms of office of the members first taking office after the approval of this act shall expire as designated by the President at the time of nomination, one at the end of the first year, one at the end of the second year, one at the end of the third year, one at the end of the fourth year, and one at the end of the fifth year, after the date of approval of this act. A successor to a member of the board shall be appointed in the same manner as the original members and shall have a term of office expiring five years from the date of the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed.

"(c) Any member appointed to fill a vacancy in the board occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term.

"(d) Vacancies in the board so long as there shall be three members in office shall not impair the powers of the board to execute the functions of the corporation, and a majority of the members in office shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of the business of the board.

"(e) Each of the members of the board shall be a citizen of the United States, and shall receive compensation at the rate of $50 per day for each day that he shall be actually engaged in the performance of the duties vested in the board, to be paid by the corporation as current expenses, not to exceed, however, 150 days for the first year after the date of the approval of this act, and not to exceed 100 days in any year thereafter. Members of the board shall be reimbursed by the corporation for actual expenses (including traveling and subsistence expenses) incurred by them while in the performance of the duties vested in the board by this act.

"(f) No director shall have any financial interest in any public-utility corporation engaged in the business of distributing and selling power to the public nor in any corporation engaged in the manufacture, mixing, selling, or distribution of commercial fertilizers, or any ingredients thereof, nor shall any member have any interest in any business that may be adversely affected by the success of the Muscle Shoals project as a producer of concentrated fertilizers.

"(g) The board shall direct the exercise of all the powers of the corporation.

"(h) All members of the board shall be persons that profess a belief in the feasibility and wisdom, having in view the national defense and the encouragement of interstate commerce, of producing fertilizers under this act of such kinds and at such prices as to induce the reasonable expectation that the farmers will buy said fertilizers, and that by reason thereof the corporation may be a self-sustaining and continuing success.

"ADMINISTRATION

"SEC. 3. (a) The chief executive officer of the corporation shall be a general manager, who shall be responsible to the board for the efficient conduct of the business of the corporation. The board shall appoint the general manager, and shall select a man for such appointment who has demonstrated his capacity as a business executive. The general manager shall be appointed to hold office for 10 years, but he may be removed by the board for cause, and his term of office shall end upon repeal of this act, or by amendment thereof expressly providing for the termination of his office. Should the office of general manager become vacant for any reason, the board shall appoint his successor as herein provided.

"(b) The general manager shall appoint, with the advice and consent of the board, two assistant managers who shall be responsible to him, and through him, to the board. One of the assistant managers shall be a man possessed of knowledge, training, and experience to render him competent and expert in the production of fertilizer. The other assistant manager shall be a man trained and experienced in the field of production and distribution of hydroelectric power. The general manager may at any time, for cause, remove any assistant manager, and appoint his successor as above provided. He shall immediately thereafter make a report of such action to the board, giving in detail the reason therefor. He shall employ, with the approval of the board, all other agents, clerks, attorneys, employees, and laborers.

"(c) The combined salaries of the general manager and the assistant managers shall not exceed the sum of $50,000 per annum, to be apportioned and fixed by the board.

"CAPITAL STOCK

"SEC. 4. The authorized capital stock of the corporation shall be $10,000,000, which is hereby subscribed by the United States and shall be paid in as the same shall be made available by law, upon the draft of the corporation upon the Secretary of the Treasury in amounts of $100,000 or multiples thereof, and as the same shall be paid in shall be charged upon the books of the corporation as paid-in capital stock.

"GENERAL POWERS

"SEC. 5. Except as otherwise specifically provided in this act, the corporation—

"(a) Shall have succession in its corporate name.

"(b) May sue and be sued in its corporate name.

"(c) May adopt and use a corporate seal, which shall be judicially noticed.

"(d) May make contracts, but only as herein authorized.

"(e) May adopt, amend, and repeal by-laws.

"(f) May purchase or lease and hold such personal property as it deems necessary or convenient in the transaction of its business, and may dispose of any such personal property held by it.

"(g) May fix the compensation of such officers, employees, attorneys, and agents as are necessary for the transaction of its business, define generally their duties, require bonds of them and fix the penalties thereof, and dismiss at pleasure any such officer, employee, attorney, or agent, and provide a system of organization to fix responsibility and promote efficiency.

"(h) The board shall require that the general manager and the two assistant managers, the secretary and the treasurer, the bookkeeper or bookkeepers, and such other administrative and executive officers as the board may see fit to include, shall execute and file before entering upon their several offices good and sufficient surety bonds, in such amount and with such surety as the board shall approve.

"(i) Shall have all such powers as may be necessary or appropriate for the exercise of the powers herein specifically conferred upon the corporation, including the right to exercise the power of eminent domain.

"SPECIAL POWERS

"SEC. 6. The corporation is authorized and directed—

"(a) To hold, maintain, operate, and develop to the fullest extent all the properties hereby transferred to it for the purpose of producing and selling nitrogen and nitrogen products for agricultural and military uses, and for the purpose of selling any surplus electric power as hereinafter specified, and to construct, maintain, and operate such additional plants and facilities upon such properties now owned by the United States at or near Muscle Shoals, Ala., as it considers necessary for such production and sale.

"(b) To manufacture, distribute, and sell fertilizers, and/or any essential ingredient thereof, and/or any by-products of such manufacture.

"(c) Upon the requisition of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy to manufacture for and sell at cost to the United States explosives and/or their nitrogenous content.

"(d) Upon the requisition of the Secretary of War the corporation shall allot and deliver without charge to the War Department so much power as shall be necessary in the judgment of said department for use in operation of all locks, lifts, and/or other facilities in aid of navigation.

"(e) To produce, distribute, and sell electric power, as herein particularly specified.

"(f) To establish, maintain, and operate laboratories and experimental plants, and to undertake experiments for the purpose of enabling the corporation to furnish nitrogen products for military and agricultural purposes in the most economical manner and at the highest standard of efficiency.

"(g) The board shall have power to request the assistance and advice of any officer, agent, or employee of any executive department or of any independent office of the United States, to enable the corporation the better to carry out its powers successfully, and the President shall, if in his opinion the public interest, service, and economy so require, direct that such assistance, advice, and service be rendered to the corporation, and any individual that may be by the President directed to render such assistance, advice, and service shall be thereafter subject to the orders, rules, and regulations of the board and of the general manager.

"POLICY AS TO DISTRIBUTION AND SALE OF SURPLUS POWER

"SEC. 7. (a) It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Government to utilize the Muscle Shoals properties for fertilizer purposes in time of peace, and no electric power shall be considered surplus so long as it can be profitably used in the manufacture of fertilizer.

"(b) Surplus electric power sold by the corporation to the consuming public shall be sold to States, counties, municipalities, corporations, partnerships, or individuals at the best prices obtainable having in view the fair and equitable distribution of the power. The corporation shall have the authority to acquire, by construction or otherwise, transmission lines for the distribution of its power, or may sell power at the plant to those who have or will provide facilities for its distribution.

"(c) The board shall operate the steam plants so that power derived from said steam plants may be used in connection with hydroelectric power produced at any dam or dams under the possession and control of the corporation, so that the secondary power from the variable and fluctuating volume of water in the river may be converted into prime or firm power.

"POLICY AS TO FERTILIZERS

"SEC. 8. (a) It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Government to distribute the fertilizer manufactured at Muscle Shoals equitably among the States, Territories, and possessions of the United States.

"(b) The selling price of fertilizers and nitrogen products produced and sold by the corporation shall be fixed from time to time by the board. Sales through intermediaries shall be under contracts through which the maximum prices to the ultimate consumer shall be stipulated. The basis for the determination of the prices to be charged by the corporation shall be all charges properly attributable to the production, marketing, and distribution of the particular product, including interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, but only on money hereafter paid in as capital stock and then interest only after the first five-year period.

"(c) It shall be the purpose of the corporation to provide plant food in abundance for agriculture and to users of commercial fertilizer at as reasonably low cost as possible, and net profits derived from the sale of surplus electric power as provided by this act shall be used toward that end for the first five years of the life of the corporation. No nitrogen products of the corporation shall be sold for use outside of the United States, her Territories and possessions, except to the United States Government for the use of its Army and Navy or to its allies in case of war.

"(d) The board shall sell the fertilizers, or the fertilizer ingredients, produced under the authority of this act for the first five years of operation at actual cost, and all sales shall be for cash in advance free on board the cars at Muscle Shoals. Preference shall be given in sales, distribution, and shipments to the purchases by farmers, groups of farmers, and farm organizations for the use of members, then to States and State agencies for resale to farmers, and the demands of these two groups having been satisfied, to private manufacturers, mixers, and merchants of fertilizers.

"After the first five years of operation under this act, then the board shall manufacture and sell fertilizers at cost plus 4 per cent additional, and all profits arising by reason of said addition and, for the second five-year period of operation under this act, one-half of the net profits from the sale of electric power may be paid into the Treasury of the United States and covered into the general funds, but the same shall be ear-marked as Muscle Shoals receipts. After the expiration of the first 10 years of operation under this act all of the net profits from the sale of electric power shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and covered into the general funds, but the same shall be ear-marked as Muscle Shoals receipts.

"(e) The board shall commence the manufacture of concentrated fertilizers at Muscle Shoals by the employment of existing facilities, using the cyanamide process by modernizing the existing plant, but shall have power to employ also any other process or processes that in its judgment shall appear wise and profitable for the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen, and shall construct and operate a plant or plants at Muscle Shoals for the production of phosphoric acid and/or of potash to be combined with nitrates and nitrogenous products in the manufacture of a complete fertilizer.

"(f) For the first five-year period of the operation under the authority of this act, the board may donate not exceeding 5 per cent of the total product of the plant or plants operated by it to be fairly and equitably distributed through the agency of county demonstration agents, agricultural colleges, or otherwise as the board may direct for experimentation, education, and introduction of the use of said fertilizers in cooperation with practical farmers so as to obtain information as to the value, effect, and best methods of use of said fertilizers. If at the end of any fiscal year during the first five-year period there shall be on hand, unsold, more than 25 per cent of the product of the plant or plants operating by authority of this act, then the board shall have power, if unanimously approved by all of the members of the board in writing, to donate an additional 10 per cent of the total annual product of said plant or plants from such unsold surplus to be fairly and equitably distributed through the agency of county demonstration agents, agricultural colleges, or otherwise as the board may direct.

"(g) The board shall have the power and authority to buy one or more ingredients of commercial fertilizers and to mix the same with any other ingredient or ingredients manufactured by the corporation.

"PROPERTY

"SEC. 9. In order to enable the corporation to exercise the powers vested in it by this act—

"(a) The exclusive use, possession, and control of the United States nitrate plant Nos. 1 and 2, located, respectively, at Sheffield, Ala., and Muscle Shoals, Ala., together with all real estate and buildings connected therewith, all tools and machinery, equipment, accessories, and materials belonging thereto, and all laboratories and plants used as auxiliaries thereto; the fixed-nitrogen research laboratory, the Waco limestone quarry, in Alabama, and dam No. 2, located at Muscle Shoals, its power house, and all hydroelectric and operating appurtenances (except the locks), and all machinery, lands, and buildings in connection therewith, and all appurtenances thereof are hereby intrusted to the corporation for the purposes of this act.

"(b) The President of the United States is authorized to provide for the transfer to the corporation of the use, possession, and control of such other real and/or personal property of the United States as he may from time to time deem necessary and proper for the purposes of the corporation as herein stated.

"PRINCIPAL OFFICE AND VENUE

"SEC. 10. (a) The corporation shall maintain its principal office in the immediate vicinity of Muscle Shoals, Ala. The corporation shall be held to be an inhabitant and resident of the northern judicial district of Alabama within the meaning of the laws of the United States relating to venue of civil suits.

"(b) The corporation shall at all times maintain complete and accurate books of accounts.

"REPORTS AND AUDITS

"SEC. 11. (a) The board shall file with the President and with the Congress, in December of each year, a financial statement and a complete report as to the business of the corporation covering the preceding fiscal year. This report shall include the total number of employees and the names, salaries, and duties of those receiving compensation at the rate of more than $2,500 a year.

"(b) The board shall require a careful and scrutinizing audit and accounting by a reputable firm of certified public accountants during each governmental fiscal year of operation under this act, and said audit shall be open to inspection to the public at all times and copies thereof shall be filed in the principal office of the Muscle Shoals corporation at Muscle Shoals in the State of Alabama. Once during each fiscal year the President of the United States shall have power, and it shall be his duty, upon the written request of at least two members of the board, to appoint a firm of certified public accountants of his own choice and selection which shall have free and open access to all books, accounts, plants, warehouses, offices, and all other places, and records, belonging to or under the control of or used by the corporation in connection with the business authorized by this act. And the expenses of such audit so directed by the President shall be paid by the board and charged as part of the operating expenses of the corporation.

"USE OF PROPERTY DURING WAR

"SEC. 12. The Government of the United States hereby reserves the right, in case of war, or national emergency declared by Congress, to take possession of all or any part of the property described or referred to in this act for the purpose of manufacturing explosives or for other war purposes; but if this right is exercised by the Government it shall pay the reasonable and fair damages that may be suffered by any party whose contract for the purchase of electric power or fertilizers or fertilizer ingredients is thereby violated.

"EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION OF POWER

"SEC. 13. The board is hereby empowered and authorized to sell the surplus electric power not used in fertilizer or munitions operations and not used for operation of any locks at the dams or any hydraulic lift and other navigation works to States, counties, municipalities, corporations, partnerships, or individuals, and to carry out said authority the board is authorized to enter into contracts for such sale for a term not exceeding 10 years.

"SEC. 14. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Government to distribute the surplus electric power generated at Muscle Shoals equitably among the States within transmission distance of Muscle Shoals.

"SEC. 15. In order to place the corporation upon a fair basis for making such contracts and for receiving bids for the sale of such electric power, it is hereby expressly authorized, from appropriations made by Congress to construct, lease, or authorize the construction of transmission lines within transmission distance in any direction from said Dam No. 2 and said steam plant: Provided, That if any State, county, municipality, or other public or cooperative organizations whether incorporated or unincorporated, not organized or doing business for profit but for the purpose of supplying electricity to its own citizens or members, or any two or more of such municipalities or organizations, shall construct or agree to construct a transmission line to Muscle Shoals, the corporation is hereby authorized to contract with such State, county, municipality, or other organization, or two or more of them, for the sale of electricity for a term not exceeding 15 years; and in any such case the board shall give to such State, county, municipality, or other organization ample time to fully comply with any local law now in existence or hereafter enacted providing for the necessary legal authority for such State, county, municipality, or other organizations to contract with the board for such electric power.

"ADDITIONAL UNITS TO STEAM PLANT AND DAM

"SEC. 16. When the board shall deem it advisable and profitable, it shall, from funds that may be appropriated for carrying out such purpose, complete the steam-power plant at nitrate plant No. 2 by adding other power units and install in Dam No. 2 the additional generating machinery so that the operation of the steam plant when the water in the river is low may be combined with the power generated at Dam No. 2 when the water is high so as to produce the maximum of primary power.

"COVE CREEK DAM

"SEC. 17. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized, with appropriations hereafter to be made available by the Congress, to construct, either directly or by contract to the lowest responsible bidder, after due advertisement, a dam in and across Clinch River in the State of Tennessee, which has by long usage become known and designated as the Cove Creek Dam, according to the latest and most approved designs of the Chief of Engineers, including its power house and hydroelectric installations and equipment for the generation of at least 200,000 horsepower, in order that the waters of the said Clinch River may be impounded and stored above said dam for the purpose of equalizing and regulating the flow of the Clinch River and the Tennessee River below, so that an increased amount of primary power may be developed at Dam No. 2 and at any and all other dams below the said Cove Creek Dam. The Federal Power Commisison is hereby authorized, directed, and required to compel contribution by any person, firm, or corporation that it may hereafter permit, authorize, and empower to build a dam or dams in the said Clinch River and in the Tennessee River below the said reservoir and impounding dam herein called Cove Creek Dam in accordance with the provisions of the Federal water power act [(June 10, 1920, Stats. 1077, ch. 285, sec. 41) and U. S. C., title 16, ch. 12].

"SEC. 18. In order to enable and empower the Secretary of War to carry out the authority hereby conferred, in the most economical and efficient manner, he is hereby authorized and empowered in the exercise of the powers of national defense in aid of navigation, and in the control of the flood waters of the Tennessee and Mississippi Rivers, constituting channels of interstate commerce, to exercise the right of eminent domain and to condemn all lands, easements, rights of way, and other area necessary in order to obtain a site for said Cove Creek Dam, and the flowage rights for the reservoir of water above said dam and to negotiate and conclude contracts with States, counties, municipalities, and all State agencies and with railroads, railroad corporations, common carriers, and all public utility commissions and any other person, firm, or corporation, for the relocation of railroad tracks, highways, highway bridges, mills, ferries, electric-light plants, and any and all other properties, enterprises, and projects whose removal may be necessary in order to carry out the provisions of this act. When said Cove Creek Dam and transportation facilities and power house shall have been completed, the possession, use, and control thereof shall be intrusted to the corporation for use and operation in connection with the general Muscle Shoals project and to promote flood control and navigation in the Tennessee River, and in the Clinch River.

"PATENT RIGHTS

"SEC. 19. The corporation as an instrumentality and agency of the Government of the United States for the purpose of executing its constitutional powers, shall have access to the Patent Office of the United States for the purpose of studying, ascertaining, and copying all methods, formulæ, and scientific information (not including access pending applications for patents) necessary to enable the corporation to use and employ the most efficacious and economical process for the production of commercial fertilizers, or any essential ingredient thereof, and any patentee whose patent rights may have been thus in any way copied, used, or employed, by the exercise of this authority by the corporation, shall have as the exclusive remedy a cause of action for any damages claimed to be instituted and prosecuted against the United States in the Court of Claims for the recovery of reasonable compensation, in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 25, 1910, as amended by the act of July 1, 1918 (title 35, sec. 68, U. S. C.), recoverable on a royalty basis in proportion to the entire volume of commercial fertilizers or essential ingredients manufactured by the corporation by the use and employment of such patent rights, and if said patent rights shall have contributed in a fractional part to the production of the entire volume, said compensation shall be proportionately allowed, and it shall be competent for the corporation to contract with any patentee in advance upon said basis, or to settle for any claim for such amount as to said corporation shall appear to be reasonable, fair, and just. The Commissioner of Patents shall furnish to the corporation, at its request and without payment of fees, copies of documents on file in his office.

"PENALTIES

"SEC. 20. (a) All general penal statutes relating to the larceny, embezzlement, conversion, or to the improper handling, retention, use, or disposal of public moneys or property of the United States, shall apply to the moneys and property of the corporation and to moneys and properties of the United States intrusted to the corporation.

"(b) Any person who, with intent to defraud the corporation, or to deceive any director or officer of the corporation or any officer or employee of the United States (1) makes any false entry in any book of the corporation, or (2) makes any false report or statement for the corporation, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

"(c) Any person who shall receive any compensation, rebate, or reward, or shall enter into any conspiracy, collusion, or agreement, express or implied, with intent to defraud the corporation or to defeat its purposes, shall, on conviction thereof, be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than 15 years, or both.

"MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

"SEC. 21. That all appropriations necessary to carry out the provisions of this act are hereby authorized.

"SEC. 22. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 23. That this act shall take effect immediately.

"SEC. 24. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly declared and reserved."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following substitute for the committee amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers a substitute for the committee amendment, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SNELL offers as a substitute for the committee amendment the following:

"That it is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress in regard to the properties at Muscle Shoals Ala.—

"(1) To utilize the power facilities of such properties so as to produce the highest practicable annual revenue to the United States.

"(2) To use said annual revenues, or such part thereof as may be considered desirable, for the development of methods of nitrogen fixation in the interest of national defense and for the production and distribution of concentrated fertilizers and the promotion of their use.

"SEC. 2. The President, acting through the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, is hereby authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for the sale of power from Dam No. 2 and from the steam plant at nitrate plant No. 2 in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, Ala., in accordance with the policies outlined above and under the conditions set forth in the following sections for a period not exceeding five years.

"SEC. 3. The facilities and equipment used for the generation and delivery of such power shall be operated and maintained under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, the cost of such operation and maintenance to be paid from revenues derived from the sale of power.

"SEC. 4. Contract or contracts may be entered into for the sale of firm primary power to the prime capacity of the two plants above mentioned except for a continuous output of 15,000 kilowatts, which shall be reserved for the Secretary of Agriculture for the manufacture of fertilizer under the conditions set forth hereafter. If at any time the Secretary of Agriculture determines that all or part of the primary power so reserved is no longer required, such power may be sold under the same conditions as those applying to the sale of other primary power. Contracts may be entered into for the sale of secondary power in such amounts as may be available, including the power reserved for the Secretary of Agriculture but not used.

"SEC. 5. Power shall be metered at the generated voltage and shall be delivered at that voltage or at 110,000 or 154,000 volts at the option of the contractor. Delivery shall be made at the switch yard of one of the generating plants. Right of way over Government-owned property for the construction of lines for the transmission of power purchased under contract shall be granted free of charge during the term of such contract. The location of such transmission lines shall be designated by the Secretary of War, upon the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers. In order that the President may be in a position to consider all bids for the sale of power, authority is hereby expressly granted for the construction or lease of transmission lines in any direction from said dam and steam plant either from appropriations made by Congress or from funds secured from the sale of power.

"SEC. 6. The rates to be charged for power shall be such as to produce the largest reasonable net return on the money invested in the power properties which shall be considered as $49,000,000 for the plants with their existing capacities, to wit, $37,000,000 of Dam No. 2 and $12,000,000 for the steam plant. For the purpose of computing the net return the power reserved for use by the Secretary of Agriculture shall be considered to have a value equal to the average contract price for other primary power.

"SEC. 7. Contractors purchasing power under this act shall guarantee to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War to pay each year for the entire amount of primary power contracted for whether used or not, and the daily, weekly, monthly, and yearly load factors as agreed upon and set forth in the contracts shall be maintained so that the power during the low flow periods may be equitably distributed among the various contractors.

"SEC. 8. If the President shall deem it advisable and profitable, he is authorized at his discretion to direct the Secretary of War to complete or enlarge the steam plant at nitrate plant No. 2 by adding other power units and to install at Dam No. 2 any or all of the additional generating units contemplated by the original design. Any funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated for work in connection with the purposes of this act, or funds derived from the sale of power, may be applied to such additional installation.

"SEC. 9. The President, through the Secretary of Agriculture, is hereby authorized, within the limits of appropriations made by Congress, to construct, maintain, and operate, on the site of nitrate plant No. 1, an experimental and/or production plant or plants for the development of methods of nitrogen fixation and for the manufacture of fertilizer or fertilizer products in such quantities as he may deem advisable. For this purpose nitrate plant No. 1, including the steam power plant and all buildings, equipment, and dwellings in connection therewith, which he may desire, shall be transferred to the Secretary of Agriculture, who is hereby authorized to make such alterations, repairs, and additions as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, subject to the proviso contained in section 12.

"SEC. 10. Subject to the instructions of the President, the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to commence the manufacture of cyanamide by the use of one unit of nitrate plant No. 2 as soon as practicable, and to construct and operate such facilities as may be necessary to demonstrate the adaptability of this method of nitrogen fixation for fertilizer purposes. This plant shall be operated at the capacity of one unit for a period sufficient to determine whether or not fertilizer can be manufactured by this process at a cost favorably comparable with other processes, and whether a market can be established for its use. If the cyanamide process proves to be successful, and production costs are no higher than those for other forms of fertilizers, the President, at his discretion, and as the market demands, may direct the Secretary of Agriculture to increase the production from nitrate plant No. 2 to the full capacity of such plant or any suitable fraction thereof.

"SEC. 11. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to dispose of the fertilizer or fertilizer products manufactured at any of the plants hereinbefore mentioned. During the term of experimental operation the price of such products shall, if practicable, be so regulated so as to afford a return covering the cost of production, including a reasonable rate of interest on the investment in plant and equipment, but in any event such as to insure their prompt disposal and use. Accurate records shall be kept so that the actual cost of producing fertilizer commercially under the methods followed may be determined at the conclusion of experimental operation. If production be continued as provided for in this act, the product shall be sold at rates sufficient to cover the entire cost of production, including interest at 4 per cent on the fair value to the facilities used.

"SEC. 12. Facilities and equipment at nitrate plant No. 1 or nitrate plant No. 2 not required by the Secretary of Agriculture in carrying out the provisions of this act may be disposed of by the Secretary of War, with the approval of the President, by the sale or lease or both: Provided, That the plants for producing nitric acid from ammonia and for combining nitric acid and ammonia for the production of ammonium nitrate shall, in the interests of national defense, be kept intact and shall be maintained in efficient operating condition by the Secretary of Agriculture until such time as the Secretary of War shall certify that they are no longer needed for the production of munitions of war.

"SEC. 13. Revenue received from the sale of power and from the sale of fertilizer under this act, over and above the cost of operation, maintenance, and new construction herein authorized, and funds derived from the disposal of facilities, as provided for in section 12, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States.

"SEC. 14. All contracts or other agreements made under the provisions of this act shall be made subject to termination in the event of emergency, when in the opinion of the President national welfare or safety requires."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following perfecting amendment to the committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers a perfecting amendment to the committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 20, after the figures "1928," insert: "And the corporation herein created shall be subject to all the laws of the States in which it operates in the same manner and to the same extent as would a private corporation engaged in such enterprises, and when the Cove Creek Dam and power plant hereinafter provided for shall have been constructed by the United States Government the laws of the State of Tennessee and the regulations of the constituted authorities of Tennessee shall apply in full force and effect to the sale, lease, distribution, or other disposition of the power produced and the water released for power-developing purposes at all down-stream plants or projects, to the imposition of taxes and tolls on all the properties, and to the regulation and control of all rates and charges: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to navigation locks nor the operations concerned therewith."

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Upon what ground?

Mr. McSWAIN. I am willing to reserve the point of order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; I suggest that the gentleman make the point of order.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not germane in that there is nothing in the bill or in any section of the bill which undertakes in any way to confer any power of taxation upon any State authorities over Federal property, or any power to regulate Federal property by State authority. If a State has any such right, we can not destroy it by legislative act, and if it has not any such right, we can not confer it by legislative act. There is nothing in the resolution that in any way has any reference to the power of the State or of any State in the Federal Union, over the exercise of any Federal activities. For the purposes of this motion we must assume that we are exercising a Federal power, and only a Federal power, in the interest of national defense. The war power has existed always, in peace and in war; we are also exercising the right conferred by the Constitution to control interstate commerce, from which the right to regulate navigation and flood control is derived. That being so, Mr. Chairman, an effort on the part of any Member of the House to restrict or limit the Federal power by conferring upon the State the exercise of the power of taxation, would be in the very teeth of the fundamental principle of our dual system of Government, which rests on the proposition that the power to tax or regulate involves the power to destroy.

If we can tax Cove Creek Dam, then the State of Alabama can tax Muscle Shoals property; and if the State of Alabama can tax the Wilson Dam and the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals, then the State of Alabama can tax every Federal courthouse and every Federal post office within that State. Various other States of the Nation can tax every navy yard and every arsenal; can tax every Federal project that is established for the exercise of Federal power, if that be so.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. This committee amendment creates a corporation to carry out the purposes of the act. It also provides for the construction of a dam at Cove Creek. Is it not within the province of Congress, and is not it perfectly germane to the purposes of the bill, to the very letter of the bill, to prescribe the conditions and circumstances under which Cove Creek Dam shall be built, and the limitations on the Federal Government after the dam shall have been built? In other words, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] simply provides the conditions under which the dam is to be built. I can not see that it is not germane, as the gentleman argues.

Mr. McSWAIN. I think that I can show that it is not. There is nothing in the bill itself by implication or otherwise that in any way recognizes any right of any State.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In other words, the contention of the gentleman from South Carolina is that when a committee of this House brings in a bill deliberately designed to take away from a State every right that it has, it is not in order to propose an amendment to preserve the rights of the State.

Mr. McSWAIN. I will answer the gentleman by saying that whenever a committee proposes the exercise of Federal power and Federal power only, it is not germane to the bill to say that the State in which that power is sought to be exercised shall have joint control over that Federal project.

How can two authorities control the Cove Creek Dam? Suppose the State of Tennessee says the water ought to go down the 1st of June, and the Federal Government says, "Oh, no; the water should go down on the 1st of May." It is proposed there to exercise joint control over the power of the Federal Government. I am as much in favor of State rights as anybody. I was raised in that school.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is evident that the gentleman has not read the amendment. It does not propose a joint control. It proposes an exclusive State control after a certain period.

Mr. McSWAIN. Of course the gentleman will be recognized by the Chair on the point of order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman is not offended.

Mr. McSWAIN. No; I am not offended. I do not get offended by lots of things. The question is, "Shall the Federal Government permit a proposition by amendment here to divide the control with the State, because the power to tax is the power to destroy?" If the State of Tennessee can control the exercise of a Federal power, so can the State of Alabama and the State of Virginia and every other State.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman speaks of exercising a Federal power. I understood the gentleman to speak a moment ago of the incompetency of the State of Tennessee to tax any property or activity that belonged to the Federal Government.

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes; under the Constitution.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the Federal Government undertakes to do a private business and puts up a plant in the exercise of that undertaking, would the gentleman from South Carolina contend that this is the exercise of a Federal power?

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman from South Carolina would not. The gentleman from Virginia begs the question here. Here we are exercising three great Federal powers; the power of national defense, just as in the case of the navy yards; the power over interstate commerce, which is the basis of flood control, for without the interstate-commerce clause in the Constitution every proposition for flood control would fall; and we are further exercising the power to control and promote interstate commerce through our navigable rivers.

Now those are Federal powers, and the Supreme Court of the United States has held in a number of cases that the power incidentally generated under a navigation power project is the property of the United States Government. It is an absolute power that the Federal Government has, and that power, according to the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia, would apply to the power being generated at Muscle Shoals to-day, just as much as it does to a number of provisions enacted in time of war and in time of peace.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Suppose you exercised the power you have under the Constitution. You have auxiliary power, such as a steam plant and other things, to regulate and take care of the spasmodic power in the river. You have this private property in Teneessee and in Alabama. Is that beyond the range of the taxing power of those States?

Mr. McSWAIN. The Federal Government can establish a steam plant in connection with an arsenal or in connection with a navy yard. You can not limit the power of the Government in that respect. It has as much right to have a steam engine or a steam plant in Tennessee or in Alabama as it has to have one right here in Washington in the navy yard.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Of course, that is different from the exercise of power to manufacture fertilizers or to operate a private enterprise.

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman's inquiry goes to the merits of the question, and not to the legal question pending before the Chair as to the germaneness of the amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Carolina is very ingenious in stating that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] was talking to the merits while purporting to discuss the germaneness of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is germane.

In section 17 of the bill, the Cove Creek Dam section, the Secretary of War is authorized to go ahead with certain developments there for the purposes set forth in the bill. The Garrett amendment refers to the corporation that is created in the bill and limits the right that the corporation will have in the State of Tennessee with reference to the dam. Section 18 of the bill goes on to say:

> In order to enable and empower the Secretary of War to carry out the authority hereby conferred in the most economical and efficient manner, he is hereby authorized and empowered in the exercise of the powers of national defense in aid of navigation and in the control of the flood waters of the Tennessee and Mississippi Rivers, constituting channels of interstate commerce, to exercise the right of eminent domain and to condemn all lands, easements, rights of way, and other area necessary in order to obtain a site for said Cove Creek Dam—

And so forth. In other words, the committee amendment to the Senate bill creates a corporation and confers certain rights and powers upon that corporation. It is the purpose and intent of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] to limit those rights and powers under certain conditions and circumstances. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is germane and overrules the point of order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, for the first time in all the history of the country it is deliberately proposed that the Federal Government shall go into business for business' sake. There is no use in our deceiving ourselves concerning this matter. This bill is not to promote navigation. No one would ever have dreamed of it as a navigation proposition. This bill is deliberately designed to put the Federal Government into two avenues of business, namely, the manufacture of fertilizer and the development and sale of power, and in order to do it the Committee on Military Affairs has deliberately determined to take from the State in which the greatest water-power possibilities exist the control over the water powers that are on the particular stream that this Cove Creek dam will affect.

It has deliberately done so. I can not understand why gentlemen who believe, or think they believe, in any sort of State rights—now, please, do not construe that word in the old-time terms—should not favor this amendment. The State of Tennessee, under all the decisions of the courts, owns in trust flowage rights on navigable, and particularly on nonnavigable streams, that may be possible of being made navigable. It is a property right in the State, held in trust for the people of the State. You are destroying them all in this bill—utterly destroying them.

Of course, we are all tired of Muscle Shoals. We have been hearing of it and worrying with it. It is a nightmare to me, and has been for years, and the danger is that because we are all so tired of it we are going to be swept away from the sound principles which this House ordinarily would observe and vote for anything in the world that is presented.

This amendment is designed to protect not only the rights of Tennessee, but, if my Alabama friends care to look at it and analyze it, the rights of Alabama.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] may proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. I want to ask the gentleman whether he has considered the proposition of attaching a proviso to his amendment to the effect that the properties used by this corporation, permission to tax which would be given by this amendment if it were adopted, should not be taxed in a discriminative way? In other words, that they should be only taxed on an equality with other like properties in the State. The gentleman has in mind, no doubt, the fact that an instrumentality of the Government, the national banks, could not be taxed until an act was passed permitting that, and we have had fight after fight to maintain the doctrine that while those corporations could be taxed by the States they should not be taxed at a greater rate than like property of other corporations.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. My mind works slowly at times, but if the gentleman will examine the language of the amendment he will find it makes it purely subject to the laws of the State.

Mr. STEVENSON. I understand that. That was so as to the national banks, but it was provided that while the national banks, an instrumentality of the Government, should be subject to the general taxing laws of the States it was further provided that they could not tax them at a higher rate than they taxed competing capital.

Mr. DAVIS. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. I want to suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that the constitution of the State of Tennessee forbids anything except uniform taxation, and under our constitution they could not tax this corporation any differently or any more than any other hydroelectric power corporation in the State of Tennessee.

Mr. STEVENSON. But the gentleman will realize—and this is a question that might have a good deal to do with this law—that without this enabling act the State of Tennessee could not tax the property of this corporation because it is a Federal instrumentality, and Congress in giving the permission, as it has the right to do, to tax that property usually provides its own limitation.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit, I do not think Congress has the right to do what is provided in this bill but we are in this situation: We are here with a bill proposing to take everything away from us in the matter of natural resources. We are having to deal with it under the terms of the bill and we do not want to be remitted to the court. We do not wish to make any concessions concerning the rights of our State but we do not wish to be remitted to the courts to determine those rights. This language violates what we conceive to be our rights, and if the suggestion of the gentleman should be taken it would complicate our situation very much, or, at least I fear it would.

Mr. BROWNING. If the gentleman will permit, the amendment offered provides that:

> The corporation herein created shall be subject to all the laws of the States in which it operates in the same manner and to the same extent as would a private corporation engaged in such enterprises.

That is the beginning of it and I think that answers the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has again expired.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. This amendment is tantamount to a motion to strike out the enacting clause. If this amendment is carried, the project contemplated in the bill simply can not be carried out. Imagine submitting to the State regulatory power, as contemplated in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, the Muscle Shoals plant and the development that is designed in the bill.

The gentleman from Tennessee says this is putting the Government into business, but this is not the first time the Government, by act of Congress, has been put into business.

We put the Government in business when we established the parcel post. Now, if it is sound, if it is proper to tax the property at Muscle Shoals, as contemplated in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, then it is possible for any State to tax a warehouse or a mail wagon that is used exclusively for the carrying of parcel post.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. In just a moment. If the taxing of the dam in Tennessee is proper, then the taxing of the Roosevelt Dam in Arizona is proper. It is a matter of policy, if you please, contrary and novel to anything that has ever been presented in reference to Federal activities.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman surely distinguishes between the matter of sending packages by mail throughout the country or throughout the Nation and the control of physical properties lying within a State.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. All right then, how about the Shipping Board? How about the wharves and the docks and the warehouses and the repair shops of the Shipping Board? That is a Government corporation.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. None of those ships float in Tennessee.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And that is the only difference.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. By no means. The gentleman, with all his keen and incisive intellect fails to distinguish between instrumentalities of foreign commerce sailing upon the seas and properties lying within the States. Let me say to the gentleman, and I have no doubt the gentleman is in entire accord with it although, of course, I may be wrong, all that is asked in this amendment I have proposed is what the authorities of the State of New York obtained by concession from the Federal Power Commission here. You have in the State of New York absolute control over every water-power facility of New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The same as any other State.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Precisely; and all that is asked in this amendment is recognition of the same principle that was recognized by the Water Power Commission down here as a result of a conference.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Let us assume—

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I know the gentleman from New York believes—at least I suppose he believes—in the Government running everything?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Not everything.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not believe in that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I know the gentleman does not, hence the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. So there is a very marked fundamental difference between us.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Exactly; hence the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But the gentleman is using in an effort to sustain his own position precedents that are not precedents at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, a fundamental question which underlies the consideration of this amendment should be called to your attention, and if there is a recognition of this fundamental right to which I refer in the Federal Government, then I do not understand that we would be doing violence at this time to any State by refusing to adopt the pending amendment.

You will recall that in 1916 we passed the national defense act. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] voted for that bill, as well as many other Members still here. In this bill Congress declared its purpose to establish at some place a plant that would provide nitrates for national defense in time of war and provided that in time of peace the plant so constructed for national defense should be used for the production of nitrates and other products needed for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizers and other useful products. We spent millions of dollars toward the establishment of such a plant at Muscle Shoals. I think we recognize its importance, and we are now seeking to put that plant in operation, and that there may be no misunderstanding as to the purpose of the Military Affairs Committee in this regard I invite your attention to the first section, where it is declared—

That for the purpose of maintaining and operating the properties now owned by the United States in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, Ala., in the interest of the national defense and for agricultural and industrial development and to aid navigation and the control of destructive flood waters in the Tennessee River and Mississippi River Basins—

And so forth. Then on page 25 this language is found:

And for the purpose of equalizing and regulating the flow of the Clinch River and the Tennessee River below.

Then on page 26 these words appear:

In the exercise of the powers of national defense in aid of navigation and in the control of the flood waters of the Tennessee and Mississippi Rivers, constituting channels of interstate commerce, to exercise the right of eminent domain—

And so on.

I submit there can be no question but what this bill seeks to exercise a sovereign right of the National Government, and in selecting a site for the construction of a dam to improve navigation and to serve other governmental purposes herein declared, the Federal Government should not be required to assume the burdens imposed by the pending amendment.

If it should later appear that in the exercise of its powers this corporation is engaging in other than public business, it may be that Congress, by a general law, should and will define what contributions in the way of taxes and tolls the Federal Government shall make to the States wherein such business is carried on. You have done this in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, but you must do it by a law general in its application.

We in Alabama are willing that Congress shall deal with such questions under a general law applying to all States alike. Should you adopt this amendment, you would be subjecting the Federal Government to burdens such as the several States might see fit to impose—burdens assumed in one State might be very different from those assumed in another.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. May I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. You should not by an amendment like this impose on the Federal Government burdens not only in reference to taxes but also in reference to water tolls, such as the several States may determine. In the protection of Government rights you must pass a general law whereby you make its burdens and the contributions uniform.

We in Alabama are willing that the right of a State to tax or otherwise impose burdens and limitations on the exercise of Federal powers be fixed by a general law passed by Congress, and not left to the legislatures of 48 States.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does the gentleman mean to say that the national defense act provided for the manufacture of fertilizer and nitrate?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Has not the gentleman read it?

Mr. LINTHICUM. The manufacture of nitrates to be used in the production of fertilizer—did it undertake to authorize the Government to go into the fertilizer business?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I think my friend was here when the national defense act was passed, and if he will refer to it he will find that so strong is the language that it required that the plant or plants authorized therein should be constructed and operated solely by the Government and not in conjunction with any industry carried on by private capital.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Did the War Department make any reference to the necessity for the development of nitrate as an act necessary for national defense?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I am not prepared to say what the War Department may have done in that respect further than that I understand they were extremely anxious that our Government should be prepared to make nitrates. If you will read the statement of General Pershing, in which he called attention to the supreme needs of the Government for a plant to manufacture nitrates, you will not linger long in the field of doubt as to what should be the attitude of the War Department as to this development.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Has the War Department ever made any recommendation as to the present manufacture of fertilizer as a necessity for national defense?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I assume that was the declaration and policy of Congress, and Congress, long before the gentleman came, when the gentleman from Tennessee was cooperating with us, undertook to provide for the utilization of the Muscle Shoals plant in the manufacture of fertilizer for farmers. That has been the declared purpose of Congress since 1916. The War Department, I think, would be rather out of its sphere if it undertook to suggest what Congress should do for agriculture.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Alabama will do me the justice to say that I never cooperated with the gentleman on any proposition which affected the sovereign rights of Tennessee touching the water power in Tennessee.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I will say that the gentleman cooperated in constructing a plant just over the line from Tennessee, and that the Governor of Tennessee and the Representatives from Tennessee cooperated in trying to put the plant to use for the same purposes that the Military Affairs Committee are seeking here to provide for, and neither the gentleman from Tennessee nor any member of the Alabama delegation undertook to ask that tax and toll rights be given the State of Alabama, such as this amendment seeks to give to Tennessee. When the question of the location of this plant was being considered there was a strong effort to locate it in Tennessee, and there was no insistence then that burdens should be imposed on the Federal Government such as the pending amendment seeks to impose now.

The declared purpose of the national defense act served notice on all when the site was selected that the plant would be used to manufacture nitrates in time of war and fertilizer in time of peace. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee) there were 46 ayes and 125 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following perfecting amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOCH: Page 16, line 12, after the word "power" strike out the period, insert a semicolon and add the following: "Provided, That in any contract of sale of power by the corporation, the purchaser from the corporation shall agree that any resale of such power to the ultimate consumer shall be at a price that is reasonable, just, and fair, as determined by the Federal Power Commission."

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, neither the committee bill nor the substitute proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], if I read them correctly, provides for any regulation of rates as far as the ultimate consumer is concerned. Gentlemen who were here at the time we considered the Ford proposal recall that one of the principal objections to that proposal was that it lodged in no one regulation of the power rates. I think it is very doubtful whether control over rates, if we say nothing about regulation in the bill, could be exercised by the State commissions. It would be contended that since this is a Federal corporation engaged in interstate commerce the State commissions would have no power over the regulation of rates. Certainly there should be somewhere in the bill clear provision for the protection of the ultimate consumer, and even if the State commissions were held to have the power to regulate rates, do we desire to put into the hands of the service commission of Alabama, for instance, the regulation of rates on power developed and sold by this Federal corporation? I do not think we should do that.

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the gentleman not think that it would be just as fair for the Government, if it is going to regulate the rates for the sale of electricity, to also regulate the rates at which the fertilizer manufactured by the Government should be sold to the ultimate consumer, the farmer?

Mr. HOCH. I do not want to be diverted from the proposition I am discussing.

Mr. CLARKE. That is not a diversion. It is a fair question for the farmer to ask, is it not?

Mr. HOCH. When we get to that proposition, if the gentleman has a provision to that effect, I shall be glad to consider it. But I want to discuss for a moment or two the one proposition before us. This bill provides for the sale of power at the plant, or over transmission lines which the corporation may build, but there is nothing in the bill, if I read it correctly, which provides that the purchaser of that power from the corporation shall be subjected to any sort of regulation of the rate when he comes to sell the power to the ultimate or private consumer.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. Suppose the gentleman's amendment was adopted and the Federal commission established a rate. Within each State there is a public utility commission that establishes the rate on which the current is sold on plants within the State. The Federal Power Commission might establish a rate that undersells and cuts under every institution within the State.

Mr. HOCH. I think if the Federal Government creates a corporation and sells power, if it is done in the discharge of a Federal function, then the Federal Government should control the rate at which the power is sold to the consumer.

Mr. HUDSON. Under those conditions they could undersell the companies within the States who operate under a ruling of the State utility commissions.

Mr. HOCH. Of course, any exercise of this power would be subject to review by the courts, as to whether there was any confiscation or anything of that sort, but certainly the gentleman does not want this power to be sold without any regulation either by the Federal or a State commission of the rate at which it is sold. I have talked this over with several members of the committee, and I trust the committee will be willing to accept the amendment in order that we may assure the public that there will be a regulation of the rates as far as the ultimate consumer is concerned.

Mr. REECE. Does not the gentleman feel that we could trust the regulating bodies of the various States to see that a reasonable and fair price is charged?

Mr. HOCH. I will answer the gentleman frankly. Without any disrespect to the great State of Alabama, I do not think the Federal Government, under the situation which has been outlined here with respect to the Alabama Power Co., should turn over to the commission of the State of Alabama the regulation of the rates for power developed and sold by this Federal corporation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am not rising in opposition to the bill, but I hold in my hand a telegram containing a copy of a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Atlanta, Ga., which they desire to appear in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent to read the resolution and to place it in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, the resolution is as follows [reading]:

ATLANTA, GA., May 8, 1928.

Hon. LESLIE J. STEELE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Following is copy of resolution adopted this date by board of directors of Atlanta Chamber of Commerce:

"Be it resolved, That Senate Joint Resolution 46 entitled 'A bill to provide for the national defense by the creation of a corporation for the operation of the Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals, in the State of Alabama, and for other purposes' should not be enacted into law for the following reasons: That said bill definitely commits the United States Government to the manufacture of fertilizer. That said bill is class legislation. That it tends to destroy the privately owned fertilizer business of the country by unfair means. It proposes to sell fertilizer at cost and in fixing the cost ignores the return to the Government on the $140,0000,000 spent up to this time in developing Muscle Shoals. It contemplates the free distribution under certain circumstances of 15 per cent of the fertilizer produced. It provides for further large expenditures by an initial capital upset of $10,000,000. It authorizes further large expenditures for acid-phosphate plants of which there is already a surplus. It provides for the further expenditure of some $37,500 for a new dam. That said bill would not only entail a loss of revenue to the Government but would entail further large expenditures calculated to increase the tax burden. Said bill in effect is nothing more than a tremendously wasteful and expensive method of subsidizing the farming interest."

ATLANTA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

[Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want to say just a word on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WRIGHT] in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH] would place the regulatory power as to rates for the power generated at Muscle Shoals under the Federal Power Commission.

It seems to be pretty well conceded that this is the law of the case: If the corporation which is proposed to be created by the bill sells power at the switchboard to a city, municipality, county, or corporation, there will be no regulatory power exercised over that either by the Federal Power Commission or any State commission.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. HOCH. Since I took my seat I have been informed that power is being sold by the Government at 2 mills and being resold at 7 cents. What is the effect of the regulation we have by the State commission now?

Mr. WRIGHT. I will get to that.

I say it is conceded by the best authority that there will be no regulation either by the Federal Power Commission or the State commission, so far as the power sold by this corporation or by the Government at the switchboard is concerned, either to a State, county, municipality, or corporation. The moment that that current passes into the hands of a purchaser—and I do not care who the purchaser is—then it comes under the regulatory power of the State utilities commission.

Now, then, if the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas is adopted, you would have two regulatory powers over this same current. Suppose the Federal Water Power Commission says, "We will fix the price to the consumer at a certain rate." The State commission, there being no doubt about its right to fix rates, says, "We will fix it at another rate." Which one would control? It is admitted on every hand that the State commissions have the right to regulate the rates. It is conceded that the minute the power passes from the hands of the Government to a purchaser it is subject to the regulation of the State commissions.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Suppose that is the case. The Alabama commission can fix one rate and the Mississippi commission can fix another rate. Would not that cause the State of Mississippi to have more or less trouble?

Mr. WRIGHT. The Alabama commission would fix rates on the power used in Alabama and the Mississippi commission on power used in Mississippi. It would handicap the sale of power if two authorities have the right to regulate the rate. The people of Mississippi would not know what they are getting if the Federal Water Power Commission had authority to fix rates and the Mississippi commission authority to fix rates on the same power.

Mr. RANKIN. If in Alabama you turn the power over to the Alabama Power Commission or the railroad commission or the public service commission, and in Mississippi to the Mississippi commission, Tennessee to the Tennessee commission, would you not have that many commissions competing with each other?

Mr. WRIGHT. No. If it were used in Mississippi, Mississippi would control the rates, and if used in Alabama, Alabama would control the rates. The purpose of this amendment would be to substitute Federal regulation for State regulation, thereby creating a conflict of authority which would embarrass the whole situation.

Mr. ALMON. Can the State of Alabama sell it at any rate?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH] is, in my judgment, of the utmost importance, and ought to be adopted by the committee, for otherwise there would not be any protection whatever to the ultimate consumer of the power generated by this plant and controlled by the authority set up in this bill. The Senate bill, when it came to the House, contained a provision to which I invite your attention, a provision that amply protects the ultimate consumer. It is on page 6 of the original Senate bill, beginning on line 13; and with your permission, Mr. Chairman, I will read it. I read:

And provided further, That any surplus power not so sold as above provided to States, counties, municipalities, or other said organizations, before the Secretary of War shall sell the same to any person or corporation engaged in the distribution and resale of electricity for profit, he shall require said person or corporation to agree that any resale of such electric power by said person or corporation shall be sold to the ultimate consumer of such electric power at a price that shall not exceed an amount fixed as reasonable, just, and fair by the Federal Power Commission.

Why, Mr. Chairman, there are plants in this country where between the water and the ultimate consumer are three corporations, each making a profit. That is absolutely wrong. And, knowing that fact, are you going to vote down an amendment so just and proper and well safeguarded as is the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kansas?

If the United States Government is to sell to corporations which are to resell for profit, how much profit are they to make? Are they to gauge their rates by those of the private corporations that have three opportunities for profit between the water and the ultimate consumer? Are you going to do nothing to safeguard the consumer? I trust that the pending amendment, so just and fair and so founded in reason, and which, in substance, was in the bill when it came to the House, will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. CROWTHER. Does it not make void the contract if they do not comply with that amendment?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERHILL. If there is one man in this House who has shown the qualifications of a statesman of the old school, of the Jeffersonian school, of the Jacksonian school, it has been the gentleman from Tennessee, who has addressed you this afternoon, and stood for the fundamental principles laid down by the forefathers. [Applause.]

But just to get rid of this proposition many of you are willing to adopt something which is worse than the disease. Let me read to you from a speech made by one of your colleagues, Hon. JOHN MCDUFFIE, of Alabama, before the Alabama Bar Association:

There is a growing demand throughout the Nation for more bureaucratic control and more Federal supervision over the very person and conduct of the citizen himself. Even here in the Southland, where so much precious blood was spilled to preserve the integrity of State and local government, there are those who would all too quickly surrender to the Federal Government duties and responsibility which should be performed by the State and local communities.

There speaks the statesman once again, not the local representative, looking at this from the standpoint of how many votes it means to him or what advantage it means to his own immediate locality, but to what is to come in the aftermath of the surrender of the most precious possession of every State of the Union—its sovereignty and control of its natural resources.

I want to read to you one other article from the Liberal Socialist Forum, of New York. Here are seven issues, but I shall read only four of them:

Public ownership, development, and distribution at cost of all natural resources, such as coal and wood, iron, steel, and other metals, cement, oil, gas, electricity, water supply, and water power.

Abolition of patents. Inventors to be rewarded by having the Government pay them either a salary for inventing or a lump sum for each invention.

Establishment of municipal stores to furnish food, clothing, and other commodities.

Including fertilizers—

at cost to residents.

Employment by the town, city, or State of all residents who desire it, at some productive or otherwise useful work, for not less than $4 nor more than eight hours a day.

TEMPORARY MEASURES FOR IMMEDIATE RELIEF

First. Seizure by the Government of the entire food supply.

Second. A world-wide 4-hour day, at 50 cents an hour, in order to provide employment for all without overproduction.

Third. A general moratorium, including a proclamation giving each family rent-free possession for 10 years of its present place of residence.

Every one of these fundamental principles of the Socialist Party are embodied in this bill—every one of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, may I have two additional minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I want to ask the gentleman this question: Did the gentleman apply the same doctrine that he has announced with reference to the Muscle Shoals project to the Cape Cod Canal? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. UNDERHILL. Oh, I expected that, Mr. Chairman. The fundamental principle of government is the protection of its people, and the Cape Cod Canal is, in the last analysis, for the protection of the lives and property of the people and did not take away any one of the rights of my own State, or I would have voted against it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, just one more word. Let me read you one paragraph from the bill:

Any person who shall receive any compensation, rebate, or reward or shall enter into any conspiracy, collusion, or agreement, express or implied, with intent to defraud the corporation or to defeat its purposes, shall, on conviction thereof, be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned not more than 15 years, or both.

This is not for Soviet Russia. It is for the United States and its people; it is a proposition submitted to us by the Military Affairs Committee of the United States House of Representatives, which is supposed to protect us. Russia never has exceeded in any idea of economics the idea which they have presented to us in intolerance, in injustice, in interference with ambition. In the stifling of initiative in the development of one of the greatest sections of this country, which has a wonderful future before it if you keep the wasting hand of government out of it and let private individuals, private initiative, private ambition, and the States themselves take care of the future. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes on the amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it seems to me we should not deceive ourselves about what we should do by adopting the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH]. I am in entire sympathy with the attempt to put real power of control into this bill for rate making; but let us not think that by adopting this amendment we should go far toward putting power of control over rate making into the bill. No matter whether we employ the Federal Power Commission or the State commissions, it makes little difference, it seems to me, with respect to an adequate measure of control, in view of the recent decisions of the higher courts in the matter of valuations of public utilities.

We have in the Federal water power act the provision of actual prudent investment as a basis of valuation for rate making. Recent decisions of the courts make that "actual prudent investment" provision of no importance, even if the Federal Power Commission or a State commission should try to follow it. The principle laid down in these decisions is an entirely different principle, a principle of valuation in terms of reproduction cost and of going-concern value. And this means considerably higher rates than would result from the use of the actual prudent investment basis which the regulatory commissions have sought to follow.

Therefore if we are going to control power rates in this project for the benefit of the people of the Southeastern section of our country, it seems to me that we need more than Federal Power Commission or State commission protection. We should provide in this bill that in the contract which the Government or the Government corporation may make with the producer of power, the principle of actual prudent investment shall appear as a term of the contract. Unless we do this, neither by the use of the Federal Power Commission nor the State commissions have we done much, in view of the recent decisions of the courts, to protect the consumers in the Southeastern section of this country. [Applause.]

It seems to me this is a vital defect in this bill and one which has not been considered in connection with any of the other Muscle Shoals bills either, and I am informed that the proponents of the Senate bill, which this House bill amends, would gladly have incorporated a more certain form of contract control, if the need of it had been brought to their attention in time.

Mr. HOCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes.

Mr. HOCH. Assuming the validity of all the gentleman says, and I agree with him as to the importance of the matter, what has that to do with this particular amendment? Certainly we would be better off to have the power of regulation lodged in the Federal Power Commission than we would be to have no power of regulation lodged in any body under the terms of this bill.

Mr. DAVENPORT. We might be slightly better off, but we would not be as well off as we would be if we took the time to apply sound reason and experience to the feature of control over rate-making in this bill.

Mr. HOCH. In other words, the gentleman wants to go further, and I would probably go with him, but why should we refuse to go this far simply because we can not go further?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I would say to the gentleman from Kansas that in view of the importance of this matter the best thing this committee could do would be to rise and take time to settle the problem right. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak on the amendment for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, the people I have the honor to represent are vitally interested in the distribution of the surplus power at Muscle Shoals, and I sincerely hope the Hoch amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

You may talk all you please about the State commissions regulating the sale of this power, but I am here to tell you that unless this provision is written into the law, giving the Federal Government the right to curtail the profits of those who retail this power, it simply means that the people in the Tennessee and Tombigbee Rivers Valleys are going to have to pay just as high prices for this power as they are paying today. [Applause.]

This is no theory. I live within about 60 miles of Muscle Shoals. I know of one town within 20 miles of me whose citizens went to one of these power companies and asked what they would bring power and distribute it in their town for. I am informed that the reply was 16 cents a kilowatt, whereas they are buying this power from the Federal Government at Muscle Shoals at about 2 mills a kilowatt.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Who gets the profit?

Mr. RANKIN. The power companies, and the power companies will continue to get the profit, if you leave this to be regulated by three or four State power commissions or State public-utility commissions scattered over that section of the country. How can the public-utility commission of a State regulate the sale of interstate power?

This extra power is going to mean a great deal to the people of that country. It is going to mean a new day, if it is given to us at something like what it costs to produce it and to transmit it.

I sincerely trust the membership of this House will vote for the Hoch amendment, in order that our people throughout that country, who have the right to the use of this power, may not be held up on the price of it in the years to come. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BANKHEAD) there were 145 ayes and 35 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the amendment and all amendments thereto close in one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to close debate on the committee amendment and all amendments thereto in one hour.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORIN. I yield.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman couple with his motion a statement that if this motion is carried he will then move to rise? If the motion is carried, it limits debate to one hour, so that we can easily finish the bill in one day. There has been no disposition on the part of anybody to obstruct the progress of the bill so that I am sure the matter can be disposed of readily in one day.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman yield? Under the Rules of the House, Calendar Wednesday is dispensed with 14 days prior to adjournment. Suppose Congress should adjourn?

Mr. TILSON. It would take a majority vote to pass the resolution to adjourn.

Mr. ALMON. Within 14 days of the time set for adjournment you will not have Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. SNELL. Let me say that we will give you a rule to have an extra day. We are not going to do anything to prevent a vote on this bill.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Connecticut a question. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to move that all debate on the pending amendment and amendments thereto close in an hour. I submit that the proposition of the gentleman from Connecticut to rise after that will not amount to anything because the bill will have been concluded at that time.

Mr. TILSON. If we now vote to close debate in one hour, when we go into committee again there will be one hour's debate pending.

Mr. BYRNS. I thought the gentleman's proposition was to have one hour debate to-night.

Mr. MORIN. My motion is, Mr. Chairman, that all debate on the committee amendment and all amendments thereto and the substitute amendments close in one hour.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If that motion prevails will it be the purpose of the gentleman to move that the committee rise?

Mr. MORIN. It will not be my purpose.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. You might as well understand now that we are going to pass this bill to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to close all debate on the committee amendment and all amendments thereto and all substitutes thereto in one hour.

The question was taken; and on a division, there were 146 ayes and 114 noes.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. MORIN and Mr. RANSLEY.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 144 ayes and 123 noes.

So the motion of Mr. MORIN was agreed to.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to make a brief statement. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, all debate on this bill is now limited to one hour, so that we can not go beyond this time, and there will be a whole day in which to conclude the bill. There is no disposition, so far as I know, on the part of anyone to obstruct the consideration of the bill. It will be an easy proposition to pass it on the next calendar day. In addition to this, I understand from the chairman of the Committee on Rules that so far as he can exercise influence with his committee he will urge a rule in case there should be a mishap, so that the bill may surely have a chance to pass. In view of this fact and the lateness of the hour I have been requested by a number of gentlemen to move that the committee rise and the House adjourn at this time. I therefore move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by several Members) there were—ayes 148, noes 103.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. MORIN and Mr. TILSON to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 153, noes 106.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. NEWTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration Senate Joint Resolution 46 and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute in order to ask a question of the gentleman from Connecticut.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, if the House now adjourns, could the gentleman from Connecticut give some assurance that the pending resolution will be taken up to-morrow, in lieu of next Wednesday, either through a unanimous-consent agreement now, or the passing of a rule in the morning?

Mr. TILSON. I made a similar request this morning, and I am very glad to renew it now. I am glad to ask unanimous consent that to-morrow may be considered as Calendar Wednesday, in lieu of next Wednesday.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CRAMTON. In the remainder of my time, then I would observe that a delay of one week on this resolution keeps it out of conference just that much longer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that to-morrow it shall be in order to consider business in order on next Calendar Wednesday. Is there objection?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana and several Members. I object.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Monday next be considered as Calendar Wednesday, in order to take up this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that next Monday may be set aside for the consideration of business in order on Calendar Wednesday. Is there objection?

Mr. DEAL and several Members. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. UNDERWOOD, by unanimous consent (at the request of Mr. MCSWEENEY), was granted leave of absence, for an indefinite period, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that in his opinion the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri and several Members. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 169, nays 157, answered "present" 1, not voting 103, as follows:

MEMORIAL—TAX REDUCTION

Mr. DENEEN presented a memorial of the council of the city of Chicago, Ill., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A memorial to the Congress of the United States by the city of Chicago in the matter of the amendment of subdivision (d) of section 116 of the proposed revenue bill now pending before the Congress, H. R. 1, entitled "An act to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes"

In this, its memorial to the Congress of the United States, the city of Chicago represents that by an ordinance the city participates in the earnings of the city's street railway companies and transit lines operating in said city under and by virtue of the terms and conditions of said ordinance, the division of said proceeds or earnings as provided being 55 per cent thereof to the city, previous to which, however, there shall be deducted from revenues derived from such operation all taxes or other governmental charges of every description assessed or which may hereafter be assessed against the lessee (street railway and transit companies) in connection with or incident to the operation of the railways before the city shall receive any rental or compensation for the rights leased or granted, or receive any payment or amortization on the public debt which represents the cost of constructing said railroads, or any division of net profits from operation of said railroads as aforesaid, and that these prior deductions are cumulative in their priority to the city's participation in profits or its realization of other rights, benefits, or interests under the contracts aforesaid; and

The city of Chicago represents that the realization by the city of such rights, profits, and interests are minimized, decreased, and postponed and a loss or burden thereby imposed upon the city to the extent that deductions are made by the operating companies, on account of increased operating costs due to the imposition of Federal income taxes, before the profits, rights, benefits, or interests of the city can be realized on the property owned by it, and that to such extent the taxes so imposed and paid by the operating companies are in the last analysis paid by the city out of the taxes levied by it upon its citizens; and

The city of Chicago further represents that the city council is now contemplating the adoption of another ordinance granting franchises to said street railway and transit companies, and also is proposing the construction at an estimated cost of several hundred millions of dollars of subways and other means of transportation in said city; and also has in contemplation the acquisition of other transit lines or connecting roads necessary to the efficient operation of its transit system, the cost of which is to be paid out of public funds; and

The city of Chicago represents that its present street railway and transit system and the new system in contemplation of construction and operation will render it necessary or advisable for the city to enter into contracts for the maintenance and operation of them, and that the methods of operation of such new railroads must be decided upon in the near future before such contracts are executed; and

It appearing to the city of Chicago that the proposed revenue bill now pending before the Congress, H. R. 1, and entitled "An act to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes," provides, in subdivision (d) of section 116 thereof, that whenever a State, Territory, or any political subdivision of a State or Territory, prior to September 8, 1916, entered into a contract for the acquisition, construction, operation, or maintenance of a public utility, and by the terms of such contract the Federal tax on income is to be paid out of the proceeds from the operation of such public utility prior to any division of the proceeds between the person or corporation and the State, Territory, or political subdivision, that there shall be refunded to the State, Territory, or political subdivision a proportional part of any income tax collected from such public utility contractor to the extent that if, but for the imposition of the tax imposed by this title, a part of such proceeds for the taxable year would accrue directly to or for the use of the city; and

It further appearing that by and under the construction and interpretation placed upon the corresponding similar subdivisions of the revenue acts of prior years by the governmental agencies the city of Chicago is deprived, and will be deprived, of the benefits of a rebate of income taxes charged against the revenues derived from the operation of the railroads which are owned by the city, contrary to the true intent and spirit of the revenue laws; and

The city of Chicago represents that it will be deprived of any and all benefit which, under any construction of the proposed revenue law, it would be entitled to arising under any contract entered into by it subsequent to September 8, 1916, the object of which contract is the acquisition, construction, operation, or maintenance of a public utility; and

The city of Chicago being informed that it has been proposed that subdivision (d) of section 116 of the proposed revenue bill now pending before the Congress, No. H. R. 1, and entitled "An act to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes," be amended so as to make more specific and certain that under such contractual relation, having for its purpose the acquisition, construction, operation, or maintenance of a public utility, the amount of any Federal income tax paid by the lessee, grantee, or person operating a public utility under such contract or contracts, or certificates similar to the contracts of March 19, 1913, aforesaid, shall, to the same extent as the amount, but for the imposition of such taxes, would have accrued directly to or for the use of, or inure to the benefit of, or increase the right, title, interest, or equity in such public utility of such municipality, be refunded to the city or shall not be levied, all of which is more particularly set forth in said proposed amendment, as follows:

"Whenever any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of a State or Territory enters in good faith into a contract with any person the object and purpose of which is to acquire, construct, operate, or maintain a public utility—

"(1) If by the terms of such contract the tax imposed by this title is to be paid out of the proceeds from the operation of such public utility prior to any division of such proceeds between the person and the State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia, and if but for the imposition of the tax imposed by this title a part of such proceeds for the taxable year would accrue directly to or for the use of, or inure to the benefit of, or increase the right, title, interest, or equity in such public utility of such State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia, then a tax upon the net income from the operation of such public utility shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in the manner and at the rates prescribed in this title, but there shall be refunded to such State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia (under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, an amount which bears the same relation to the amount of the tax as the amount which (but for the imposition of the tax imposed by this title) would have accrued directly to or for the use of, or inure to the benefit of, or increase the right, title, interest, or equity in such public utility of such State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia bears to the amount of the net income from the operation of such public utility for such taxable year.

"(2) If by the terms of such contract no part of the proceeds from the operation of the public utility for the taxable year would, irrespective of the tax imposed by this title, accrue directly to or for the use of, or inure to the benefit of, or increase the right, title, interest, or equity in such public utility of such State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia, then the tax upon the net income of such person from the operation of such public utility shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in the manner and at the rates prescribed in this title.

"(3) If by the terms of such contract the acquisition, construction, operation, or maintenance of such public utility is for or on behalf of a State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia, or the effect of such contract is to enable the State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia to acquire a right, title, interest, or equity in such public utility, no tax shall be levied under the provisions of this title upon the income derived from the acquisition, construction, operation, or maintenance of such public utility, so far as the payment thereof will impose a loss or burden upon or decrease or postpone such right, title, interest, or equity of such State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia."

Whereas the city council of the city of Chicago is advised and is of the opinion that the foregoing proposed amendment will be beneficial to the interests of the city of Chicago under the said contracts of March 19, 1913, and under contracts which may be entered into by it subsequent thereto for the acquisition, construction, operation, or maintenance of such public utilities, and under any plan of consolidation or unification as is now being considered by its committee on local transportation:

Resolved, That the city council of the city of Chicago does hereby approve the proposed amendment aforesaid, and that it does hereby urge upon the Congress the passage of such amendment; further

Resolved, That the city clerk be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to transmit to each of the United States Senators for the State of Illinois and to each Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Illinois a certified copy of this resolution.

STATE OF ILLINOIS County of Cook, ss:

I, Patrick Sheridan Smith, city clerk of the city of Chicago, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of the certain resolution unanimously adopted by the city council of the city of Chicago at a regular meeting held Tuesday, May 1, 1928.

Witness my hand and the corporate seal of the said city of Chicago this 3d day of May, 1928.

[SEAL.] PATRICK SHERIDAN SMITH,
City Clerk.

The property to be transferred under this act was conveyed to the United States by deed of April 7, 1817, from Charles B. Gause, registered in the records of New Hanover County in Book P, page 305, and is described therein as "a certain piece or parcel of land situate, lying, and being in the State of North Carolina and county of New Hanover on Federal Point near the new inlet of Cape Fear River, whereon the beacon erected by the United States now stands, to contain 1 square acre of land, the beacon being the center of said square acre," together with "the use and privilege of the most convenient and usual landing place on said point from the river and from said landing place free egress and regress over the said point of land."

The United States reserves the right to resume ownership, possession, and control for Government purposes of the said property so conveyed at any time and without the consent of the grantee.

BOULDER DAM

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point an address delivered yesterday before the Federal Trade Commission by Hon. LOUIS W. DOUGLAS, Representative in Congress from the State of Arizona, in which he urges the Federal Trade Commission to investigate the insidious and odious lobby which is here and elsewhere attempting to pass the Boulder Dam bill. I also ask to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the San Diego Times-Union on this subject. I desire to have these printed in the RECORD at this juncture and not in the Appendix. May I secure such permission?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address and editorial are as follows:

STATEMENT OF LOUIS W. DOUGLAS, MEMBER OF CONGRESS FROM ARIZONA, BEFORE THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION MAY 9, 1928

MEMBERS OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION: I have seen the recent reports of evidence submitted to you relative publicity activities with reference to the Boulder Dam bill pending before Congress.

I appear as a Member of Congress to suggest to you a course of inquiry in this connection, which falls within the general authority given to you by Senate Resolution 83 of the Seventieth Congress, first session, to inquire into and to report to the Senate whether, and to what extent corporations doing an interstate or international business "in supplying electrical energy, or any officers thereof or anyone in their behalf, or any organization of which any such corporation may be a member, through the expenditure of money or through the control of the avenues of publicity have made any and what effort to influence or control public opinion on account of municipal or public ownership of the means by which power is developed and electrical energy is generated and distributed, or since 1923 to influence or control elections."

The city of Los Angeles is a corporation. The Los Angeles Bureau of Light and Power of the City of Los Angeles is engaged in the production and distribution of electric energy and in interstate commerce.

Its activities to persuade the Congress of the United States to appropriate moneys for the construction of the largest of power projects are proper subjects of inquiry by your commission. Its activities in connection with State legislation are likewise proper subjects of inquiry for this commission.

In 1917 the city of Los Angeles was successful in preventing the California Legislature from passing an act which would subject all dams in California to a rigid inspection by the State engineers. The bill providing for inspection (ch. 377, Calif. Stat. forty-second legislative session), as amended through the influence of the city of Los Angeles, specifically exempted from State inspection dams built by a municipality with an engineering department. The St. Francis Dam in California was constructed without a State license, without State inspection, and in violation of the water rights of the people in the Santa Clara Valley. The dam failed. The city of Los Angeles, through its great political power, went into Owens Valley and confiscated water, the right to which belonged to the inhabitants of Owens Valley. The city of Los Angeles is now attempting to persuade the Federal Government to appropriate the moneys for a high-power dam at Boulder Canyon and to confiscate the resources of States.

In the early part of February, 1922, before Boulder Canyon had been adequately investigated, the city of Los Angeles appropriated to the United States Reclamation Service for the investigation of that site, and for the investigation of no other site, $75,000, in support of which I call your attention to the following resolution:

"On presentation by special counsel, and on his recommendation and of the chief engineer and chief electrical engineer—the matter being considered at some length—Mr. Haynes moved the adoption of the following resolution:

"'Whereas the city has made application to the Federal Power Commission for license or permit to develop the Boulder Canyon Reservoir on the Colorado River with a view of obtaining from that source sufficient power for the future needs of Los Angeles; and

"'Whereas it is practicable to obtain such information through the United States Reclamation Service which, if provided with the necessary funds, proposes to complete investigations on the ground which will disclose the facts required, as aforesaid; and

"'Whereas the cost to the city of obtaining such necessary information if it should itself be required to do the proper investigation work, would be greatly in excess of the amount to be paid the United States Reclamation Service for supplying such information; and

"'Whereas said Reclamation Service estimates that the amount required of the city of Los Angeles for said purpose would be $75,000, and has indicated that said amount might be paid in installments conforming to the needs of said Reclamation Service for such work as it progresses; and it appearing to be to the best interests of the city and this board, in fulfilling the public duty to provide an ample power supply for the inhabitants of Los Angeles, that this board should undertake to advance said amount for said purposes: Therefore be it

"'Resolved, That this board, out of power revenue, undertake to advance and pay to the United States Reclamation Service the sum of $75,000 to carry on the work of said Reclamation Service in investigating the site of the proposed dam at Boulder Canyon on the Colorado River for the purpose aforesaid, subject to the condition that the results of said investigation be furnished this board; that such payment be made in installments; that a demand for the initial installment of said sum, to wit, $15,000, be drawn on the power-revenue fund in favor of the United States Reclamation Service.'

"Seconded by Mr. Bartlett, and carried by the following vote:

"Ayes: Messrs. Bartlett, Haynes, Robinson, the president.

"Noes: None. (Twenty minutes of the board of public service commissioners, city of Los Angeles, pp. 115–116, special meeting, February 16, 1922.)

You will note that the purpose of the appropriation for the investigation was "to provide for an ample power supply for the inhabitants of Los Angeles." You will also note that the appropriation was for the investigation of the Boulder Canyon site, and Boulder Canyon site only.

Dr. Elwood Mead, in a letter addressed to me under date of April 6, 1928, transmitted a statement disclosing that up to June 30, 1927, the city of Los Angeles, Imperial irrigation district, Coachella Valley district, Palo Verde levee district, and the city of Pasadena had appropriated $140,000 for the investigation of Boulder Canyon. The Reclamation Service was restricted in its use of funds for the investigation of the Colorado River to Boulder Canyon, in that it could not expend those funds for an investigation elsewhere except in so far as the Federal Government appropriated such funds. I inclose herewith a statement submitted by Doctor Mead.

It is clear that the city of Los Angeles and affiliated agencies, through their control of the investigating moneys, influenced the Reclamation Service to support Boulder Canyon as the site. In view of the subsequent activities of the city of Los Angeles and affiliated agencies, it is equally clear that the city of Los Angeles abandoned the idea of constructing a power project on the Colorado River with its own funds and supported instead the proposition of obtaining funds from the Federal Treasury for this purpose.

To carry out its ends there was organized in southern California an organization known as the Boulder Dam Association, of which the city of Los Angeles is a member. This association has been one of the great lobbying organizations in behalf of the Boulder Dam bill. In 1924 its secretary was Mr. Burdette Moody, who was also business manager of the board of public service commissioners of the city of Los Angeles.

The statement of receipts, July 19, 1924, audited by W. M. Irwin, auditor, shows sources of revenue of the Boulder Dam Association as of that date, a copy of which I inclose herewith:

In March, 1924, the city of Los Angeles passed the following resolution:

"On written recommendation of the special counsel by Floyd M. Hinshaw, Mr. Dykstra moved the adoption of the following resolution:

"'Whereas the city of Los Angeles is vitally interested in the matter of inducing Congress to provide the necessary funds for the construction of a high storage dam at or near Boulder Canyon on the Colorado River, because of the fact that such dam, besides insuring protection to Imperial Valley and other menaced sections against the floods of the Colorado River and greatly extending irrigation in the lower Colorado Basin, will make possible the development of a great amount of hydroelectric power; and

"'Whereas an organization known as Boulder Dam Association, composed of representatives of the various municipalities, districts, and communities interested in said project, has been formed for the purpose of providing such publicity, and such organization is to be supported and financed by participating public agencies, and it appears desirable that the city of Los Angeles, as a member of such organization, should contribute its share of the legitimate expense of such publicity work: Now, therefore, be it

"'Resolved, That a demand for $250 in favor of the Boulder Dam Association be, and the same is hereby, ordered drawn and approved on the "power revenue fund."'

"Seconded by Mr. Baker and carried by the following vote:

"Ayes: Messrs. Baker, Burton, Dykstra, the president.

"Noes: None." (Twenty-fourth minutes of the board of public service commissioners, city of Los Angeles, p. 484, March 21, 1924.)

On June 12, 1923, there was authorized an additional amount, not to exceed $1,500 per month, to the Boulder Dam Association, $1,000 of which was thereupon ordered drawn upon the power revenue fund. (Twenty-third minutes of the board of public service commissioners, city of Los Angeles, pp. 21, 22, 94, 95.)

On February 19, 1924, a sum of $500 was voted for the same purposes. (Twenty-fourth minutes of the board of public service commissioners, city of Los Angeles, pp. 12, 376, February 19, 1924.)

On April 30, 1928, I am informed that the Los Angeles Public Service Commissioners appropriated another $1,000 for the purpose of persuading Congress to construct a high dam at Boulder Canyon. How much in addition Los Angeles may have directly or indirectly appropriated to the Boulder Dam Association to influence public opinion I can not now testify to.

The Boulder Dam Association has published many pamphlets which it has distributed to the public and to the Members of Congress, copies of which I submit herewith. The purpose of the publication was to influence public opinion and the opinion of Congress.

In 1923 the public service commissioners of Los Angeles passed the following resolution:

"'Be it resolved, That Ralph L. Criswell, president of the council, and W. B. Mathews, special counsel, be authorized to proceed to Washington, D. C., to give attention to the interests of the city as involved in the Swing-Johnson bill, pending before Congress, for the development of the Colorado River, and that their necessary expenses in the matter be paid by the department out of the power revenue fund.'

"Seconded by Mr. Dykstra and carried by the following vote:

"Ayes: Messrs. Baker, Dykstra, Haynes, the president.

"Noes: None." (Twenty-second minutes of the board of public service commissioners, city of Los Angeles, pp. 21, 182, January 16, 1923.)

The representatives of the Boulder Dam Association and of the city of Los Angeles, together with representatives of the Imperial irrigation district, to which reference will later be made, have been constantly present at all of the hearings on the Boulder Dam bill and have been in constant contact with Members of Congress for the purpose of persuading them to support the proposed legislation.

The Imperial irrigation district has been active in other ways. I submit herewith as evidence the following, taken from a statement submitted by officials of the Imperial irrigation district, which will be found on pages 257–258, part 2, hearings before the House Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation on H. E. E. KIEFER, Chief Accountant.

The above items were submitted by E. E. Kiefer, chief accountant, Imperial irrigation district.

I am informed that Mr. John R. Haynes, one of the public service commissioners of the city of Los Angeles, has been very liberal in his donations to the Boulder Dam lobby.

How much may have been expended, either in cash or in kind, since 1924 I do not know, but I submit that if, as of that date, before the bill had reached the stage in its legislative career at which it might have been considered by the House, $129,177.60 (the sum of expenditures by the Boulder Dam Association and the Imperial irrigation district) had been expended in its behalf, then, as of this date, it is reasonable to conclude that at least four times that amount has been expended.

In this connection I call the attention of this commission to the special train which came to Washington in 1927, carrying lobbyists for the Boulder Dam bill; I call the attention of this commission to the many news advertisements containing large photographs and black-typed narrative of the Boulder Dam, and of the merits of the bill under consideration, which have appeared very frequently throughout the past few years in the Hearst newspapers and in the tabloids. I call the attention of this commission to the many boxes of grapefruit and oranges which have been presented to the Members of the Congress. I call the attention of this commission to the speeches which have been made throughout the country by representatives of the Imperial irrigation district and of the city of Los Angeles. I call the attention of this commission to the great number of Californians now in Washington lobbying for the Boulder Dam bill. I call the attention of this commission to an appropriation of $20,000 by the board of supervisors of Los Angeles County on May 3, 1928, for the purpose of lobbying for the Boulder Dam bill.

I have submitted evidence, which is conclusive, that over $129,000 was expended in behalf of the Boulder Dam bill as of the middle of the year 1924. I have indicated to this commission many other additional items for which moneys have been expended, the purpose of which was to influence public opinion and the Congress.

I submit to this commission that in view of the activities of the city of Los Angeles and other California municipalities in amending the dam inspection bill of 1917 to exclude municipalities from State supervision, and in view of the activities of the city of Los Angeles through the use of its great political power with relation to the inhabitants of the Owens and Santa Clara Valleys in California, and in view of the activities of the city of Los Angeles and affiliated agencies, not only in exerting its great political power but also in expending huge sums of money to influence public opinion and the Members of Congress to support Federal ownership of a tremendous power project, one can not but conclude that activities by political subdivisions to influence public opinion can be as insidious and as dangerous to the body politic as can be the activities of any other type of organization.

IMPERIAL ASKS SAN DIEGO AID ON DAM FUNDS—$100,000 TO BE RAISED FOR LOBBY IN WASHINGTON ON BOULDER BILL LEGISLATION

The people of Imperial County are looking to the people of San Diego County to help them in the common cause of putting through the Boulder Canyon Dam legislation, according to C. A. Hall and George Whitlock, of the American Conservation Club of the Imperial Valley, who are in San Diego seeking funds to help in the last push in Washington.

"The people of the Imperial Valley are spending $100,000 this year to maintain the necessary lobby in Washington," said Hall yesterday. "Legislation of this nature is costly, and we are fighting the wealthiest and best-organized opposition lobby that ever went to Washington. The people of the valley can't carry all the load, and they are appealing to San Diego County, which will benefit almost as much as Imperial from the dam construction, to help carry on the work and to put over the legislation.

"This bill will do more for southern California than any other legislation ever initiated. It will produce enormous publicity all over the country. Thousands of people are just waiting for the passage of the bill to come to southern California, and I firmly believe that real-estate values will increase 10 per cent within 24 hours after President Coolidge signs the bill.

"This is a worthy and necessary cause. The San Diego Chamber of Commerce and many leading citizens here have given it their full indorsement, and the chamber is going to help all it can with funds. But it is necessary for us to make an appeal to the citizens of the community to help with funds now. The time is short, and we want the people of San Diego to help and help now."

EXCHANGE QUOTATIONS AND EUROPEAN CURRENCY

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE]? I desire to ask the Senator what has become of Senate Resolution 95, referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, providing for the reprinting of Senate document serial 8 on foreign exchange quotations and European currency and finance. Early in January I introduced a resolution (S. Res. 95) calling for the republication of that Senate document.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, the Committee on Mines and Mining expect to have a meeting in a very short time with reference to that matter. I want to say that I consider the resolution a very important one. The subject matter included in it is worthy of the grave attention of the Senate, and I hope that something will result.

Mr. COPELAND. May I inquire if there is any opposition in the Senate to the project?

Mr. ODDIE. I have not heard of any opposition. It has not been brought before the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator know of any Senator who is in opposition to it?

Mr. ODDIE. There was opposition to it two years ago from various Senators, but I think it can be explained in a very satisfactory manner to them at this time.

Mr. COPELAND. May I inquire of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] what his attitude is regarding the matter of the reprinting of the Senate document relating to foreign exchange quotations and European currency and finance? I know that he has given much thought to the matter. There are so many inquiries coming from every section of the country that I am very eager to have the Committee on Mines and Mining take action in the matter. Does the Senator from Utah know of any opposition to the republication?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, unless there is some real demand for it I can not see why it should be reprinted. There were a great many copies printed originally.

Mr. COPELAND. What would the Senator consider a great demand? I think I have had a letter from every bank in the United States and from every college and from everyone in the United States interested in the subject of finance. Is that a demand?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know when those banks asked the Senator, but I do know the original issue was sent to banks wherever they asked for it up to the time this resolution was submitted.

Mr. COPELAND. May I ask the Senator in all kindness and with deference if he is opposed to the matter?

Mr. SMOOT. I would be opposed to it unless there is a real call for the document. I have never received a request from anyone except those to whom I sent copies of the document when it was originally published.

Mr. COPELAND. I shall take pleasure in showing to the Senator from Utah a great stack of requests from every part of the country for the publication brought up to date. I believe, without knowing anything about it personally, from the character of the persons who have inquired and the nature of the requests, that it must be a very valuable document.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall be glad to have the Senator submit the requests to me.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from New York why he did not have the resolution referred to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. COPELAND. Because, in the first place, the report was gotten out by the Committee on Mines and Mining, and in order to bring it up to date there must be some further work done on it that seems to be within the purview of that committee.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understood that the resolution merely provided for a reprint.

Mr. COPELAND. It provides for a little more than that. It says:

The Committee on Mines and Mining be, and is hereby, authorized to revise to date and publish with illustrations—

And so forth. That, apparently, would require some little work.

ANNIVERSARY OF DEATH OF STONEWALL JACKSON

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, on the 10th day of May, 1863, there passed away at Guinea Station, Va., one of the greatest generals this country has ever known. My State, South Carolina, set apart that day as Confederate Memorial Day. I ask to have printed in the RECORD an article furnished me by Miss Anna Jackson Preston, sponsor for the South at the reunion at Little Rock on this day, being a short sketch of the life of her great grandfather, Gen. Stonewall Jackson.

I also ask to have printed an address delivered by Dr. W. E. Abernethy to the Daughters of the Confederacy at Statesville, N. C., on May 10, 1927, and a short article by Bishop Charles B. Galloway.

There being no objection, the articles and address were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STONEWALL JACKSON

Thomas Jonathan Jackson, usually known as Stonewall Jackson, was born in Clarksburg, Va., now West Virginia, on the 20th day of January, 1824. He died at Guinea Station, Va., on the 10th day of May, 1863, being 39 years of age. He was the son of Jonathan Jackson, of Clarksburg, a promising and well-to-do young lawyer, and his beautiful and accomplished wife, Julia Beckwith Neale. His great grandfather, John Jackson, the first of the line in America, by birth a Scotch-Irishman, came from London about 1748, and located first in Maryland and later the western portion of Virginia. The Jacksons became in time quite a numerous family, owning large boundaries of mountain land. They were noted for their honesty, indomitable wills, and physical courage, holding many positions of public trust and honor in what was then known as western Virginia.

EARLY CHILDHOOD

When Thomas Jonathan Jackson was 3 years of age his father died with typhoid fever, contracted while he was nursing his little daughter who also died. He left a widow and three children in very limited circumstances. Mrs. Jackson, after recovering in a degree from the double shock—the death of her daughter and husband—supported her little family as best she could with her needle and by teaching school for about three years when she married Capt. Blake B. Woodson, a gentleman from eastern Virginia, of excellent family and delightful manners but visionary and unsuccessful. When her health became impaired the children were placed temporarily with relatives. A year later Jackson's mother died, and thus at the age of 7 he was left a penniless orphan.

One story most characteristic of him is that when about 12 years of age he appeared at the house of Federal Judge John G. Jackson in Clarksburg, and addressed his wife, saying, "Aunt, Uncle Brake [referring to the relative he was then living with] and I don't agree. I have quit him and will never go back any more." He never did, but walked 18 miles to the farm of Cummins Jackson, bachelor half-brother of his father. There he lived happily until he was appointed to West Point through the political influence of his Uncle Cummins, at the age of 18. Before going to West Point he held his only political office, that of constable, and satisfactorily discharged the duties of the office.

The first year at West Point, having had but indifferent preparation, he stood near the foot of the class, but each year by dint of untiring study he advanced steadily until he graduated No. 17 in a class of 60. One of his professors remarked that if there had been one more year in the course before graduation he would have led his class.

IN MEXICO

After graduating at West Point in 1846 he at once went to the Mexican war and served with distinction in the battles there, coming out brevet major, with a noble reputation for bravery and extremely popular with the Mexican people of the higher classes for whom he entertained to the end of his life great admiration.

AT LEXINGTON, VA.

In 1851 he became professor of military tactics at the Virginia Military Institute, Lexington, Va., known as the West Point of the South, at a salary of $1,200 per year and a residence. Lexington was at that time a small town in the midst of the Blue Ridge Mountains, also the seat of Washington College, now Washington-Lee University. The community at that time was largely dominated by the Presbyterian Church, whose pastor was Rev. William S. White, for whom Jackson formed a great affection. General Jackson was deeply interested in religious matters, and though baptised in the Episcopal Church, joined the Presbyterian Church the first year he was in Lexington.

In 1853 he married Miss Eleanor Junkin, daughter of Dr. George Junkin, president of Washington College. In a year his wife died. The young husband was heartbroken and his thoughts turned more than ever to religion. In fact, it was at this time that his intense religious nature began to assert itself outwardly.

In 1855 Jackson and Col. J. T. L. Preston, who was subsequently his adjutant general, organized a Sunday school for negroes in Lexington. Some local antagonism was aroused against them because slaves were taught to read and write in this school. The school was carried on successfully, however, up to the outbreak of the war.

On the 16th day of July, 1857, he was married to Miss Mary Anna Morrison, of Lincoln County, N. C., the daughter of Dr. Robert Hall Morrison, who founded Davidson College, Davidson, N. C., and Mary Graham Morrison, a sister of Gov. William A. Graham, of North Carolina.

IN THE WAR BETWEEN THE STATES

Though opposed to secession, Jackson, like many of the leading citizens of the South, was equally opposed to the coercion of the Southern States; and, therefore, promptly offered his services to the State of Virginia when war was declared against it, believing that his first and highest loyalty was to his native State.

Jackson had been commissioned by the Governor of Virginia to take charge of the State militia detailed to keep the peace during the trial and execution of John Brown at Charlestown in 1859. In a letter to his wife he gave an interesting account of this occurrence. At the actual outbreak of hostilities he spent his time drilling soldiers. He was then made colonel of the Virginia State troops. First at Manassas, he was given his famous sobriquet of "Stonewall," by General Bee, of South Carolina. His promotions to brigadier, major general, and lieutenant general were very rapid. His fame as a soldier rests largely upon what is known as the valley campaign, where in rapid succession he won a series of brilliant victories—McDowell, Winchester, Port Republic, Cross Keys, and Cedar Mountain. Of these he himself is said to have considered Cedar Mountain his greatest victory.

On May 3, 1863, in the midst of the brilliant victory at Chancellorsville, he was wounded by his own men, usually supposed to belong to one of the North Carolina regiments, and died a week later.

After half a century has elapsed, it is hard to realize the feelings of sorrow and hopelessness which swept over the South when the news of Jackson's death flashed along the wires. Everywhere men and women broke down and cried as though a beloved member of their own family had been taken. When the news of his death reached Europe the newsboys and porters in the hotels announced that "Stonewall Jackson was dead," for his was a familiar name throughout the world. The people of all nations felt a great soldier and a noble Christian hero had fallen, while in the hearts of the people of the South there was a deep and unexpressed fear that the cause which they loved so well had suffered an irreparable blow the day his casket with the Confederate flag wrapped around it was placed in the cemetery at Lexington.

It is not our purpose to attempt any eulogy of Jackson's career as a soldier. The English historian, Colonel Henderson, probably the greatest military critic of the nineteenth century, says that he was in no way inferior to Wellington, Napoleon, Lee, or any of the great generals of history. He was one of the few generals who was never defeated, and without any effort on his part maintained the confidence and admiration and, one might say, the adoration of all his troops.

APPEARANCE AND CHARACTERISTICS

In private life Jackson was a simple, rather silent Scotch-Irish, Presbyterian gentleman, with large blue eyes, pensive and deep; dark-brown hair, which was very slightly curly and worn rather long; about 5 feet 11½ inches in height, with a fine, full figure. His complexion was fair, almost like a girl's, except when tanned by outdoor exposure. He was noted for his politeness, gentleness of manner, and love of children. While never talkative, he felt always the duty when in society to be responsive to the conversation of others, and was at times a delightful companion and full of pranks and humor, though these occasions were rare. His habits of life were methodical and rigid. According to Dr. R. L. Dabney's Life of Jackson, he always rose at dawn, had private devotions, and then took a solitary walk. When at home family prayers were held at 7 o'clock, summer and winter, and all members of his household were required to be present, but the absence of anyone did not delay the services a minute. Breakfast followed, and he went to his classroom at 8 o'clock, remaining until 11, when he returned to his study. The first book that then engaged his attention was the Bible, which was studied as he did other courses. Between dinner and supper his attention was occupied by his garden, his farm, and the duties of the church, in which he was deacon. After supper he devoted his time for half an hour to a mental review of the studies of the next day, without reference to notes, then to reading or conversation until 10 o'clock, at which time he always retired. There was no variation in this daily program.

There were certain maxims of his life which had much to do with framing his character. One was that "you can be what you resolve to be," the other, "do your duty." His last works are supposed to have been, "Let us cross over the river and rest under the shade of the trees," though others of the attendants at his bedside tell us that the last words were, "Soldiers, do your duty."

General Jackson left one infant daughter, 6 months old, whom he had the privilege of seeing upon only one occasion, when Mrs. Jackson visited him in camp. He named her Julia Neale, for his mother, and in 1885 she married Capt. William E. Christian, of Richmond, author and newspaper man, now living in Washington, D. C. She died in 1889, leaving two infant children, the oldest, Mrs. Julia Jackson Christian Preston, wife of Randolph Preston, an attorney, lives in Charlotte, N. C., and has five children; the youngest, a boy 18 months old, bears the name of his great-grandfather. Mrs. Christian's son, Thomas Jonathan Jackson Christian, is a major in the United States Army, now stationed (1928) at the University of Chicago. He married Miss Bertha Cook and has two children, a boy, Thomas Jonathan Jackson Christian, jr., aged 11, and a girl, Margaret, aged 7.

General Jackson left surviving him an only sister, Laura, the wife of Mr. Jonathan Arnold, of Beverley, W. Va. This sister survived him until the year 1911, when she passed away at the age of 85 years, leaving one son, Hon. Thomas Jackson Arnold, and a number of grandchildren surviving her.

Mrs. Mary Anna Jackson, the widow, lived in Charlotte with her granddaughter until March 24, 1915, when at the age of 83 she passed to her reward. Her Christian faith, great wisdom, and cheerful, courageous disposition marked her as a most unusual woman. Her plan of life was as simple as her husband's, which consisted of finding out each day what she believed to be her duty, through prayer, Bible reading, and meditation, and then doing it uncomplainingly and with as little affectation as possible.

In 1907, when offered a pension by the Legislature of North Carolina, though she greatly needed it, she authorized one of her relatives, then a member of that body, to say that she preferred the money be given to help needy soldiers, or to found a school for wayward boys. At this session there was chartered the Stonewall Jackson Training School, one of the greatest institutions of its kind in America, and certainly the name it bears is an appropriate and inspiring one for the 500 boys enrolled there.

General Jackson's life was representative of the simple virtues for which the South was noted—honesty in thought, speech, and action, freedom from sordid ambition for wealth or notoriety, a high sense of honor and chivalry, unselfish patriotism, and benevolence toward his fellow men. To these traits were added an absolute reliance upon God, and trust in His providence as guarding, guiding, and controlling the daily lives of His servants.

Heroes of the Sixties

(Address delivered before the Confederate Veterans and Daughters of the Confederacy in Statesville, N. C., May 10, 1927, by Dr. W. E. Abernethy)

Daughters of the Confederacy, old veterans, ladies, and gentlemen, when Pericles ascended the hustings to deliver an eulogy over the Athenians who had fallen at Samos, he prayed to all the gods that he might utter no word unworthy of their fame. In some such spirit I approach the discharge of the duty with which you have honored me to-day.

In that memorable year of Our Lord 1860, no lovelier land lay under the circuit of the sun than that which in terms of tender endearment we call the "Old South." Here nature had lavished all her treasures. Mountains lordly as Olympus broke the hurricane's wing and the cyclone's wheel, standing sentinels around hills of embannered grain. Valleys fertile as the deltas of the Tigris or the Nile, clad in cotton, echoed to the happy songs of contented slaves. Mines rich as Golconda locked the sunshine of buried centuries in their vaults. Virgin forests rivalling those of Lebanon rang with the riotous carnival of the southern birds. Lakes, lovely as Leman or Lucerne, mirrored the sky as blue as that which bends above the Bay of Naples. Here dwelt a peaceful, pastoral people, living in Acadian simplicity, bowing to none but God, loving the old flag which their fathers had followed, and the Union which they had fashioned, coveting no man's goods, meddling with no other's conscience; utterly content only to be let alone in the home which the good God had given them, in possession of the rights clearly guaranteed them under the Constitution.

The flowers of the fateful summer of 1861 were not full blown when the sound of the sullen battery had supplanted the songs of peace. Eleven sovereign Southern States stood in embattled array on the border of our beleaguered land, lifting a new banner to the breeze against the old flag of our fathers, and striving to the utmost of human valor to sever by the sword the bond of an intolerable union. Were they right or wrong? On these memorial days it is just and right that we appeal for the verdict of history. It makes a material difference in our own self-respect as to whether we regard ourselves as the sons and daughters of patriots or traitors.

Lowell, in his address on Lincoln, says: "The impatient vanity of South Carolina hurried 10 prosperous Commonwealths into a crime." That I deny to-day with deep indignation. The assertion that our fathers would shatter the Union for the sake of slavery is the frothing of a flannel-mouthed fool, and deserves to be answered in language too lurid for the lips of a preacher. They fought for the Constitution as its framers understood it. Why should the South desire to destroy the Union? It was born in the brain of a southern sage; its freedom was won by the sword of a southern soldier, and it had been graced by the genius of southern statesmen.

The first Declaration of Independence was made in Charlotte in 1775; the first call for a Continental Congress came from Richard Henry Lee, of Virginia, in 1774. The national Declaration of Independence was drawn by Thomas Jefferson in 1776, James Madison, of Virginia, was called "the Father of the Constitution." The new Government was organized by the same southern soldier who had won our freedom. It was not in a fit of passion that our fathers broke the bonds of the Union, but it was because there was nothing else to do. I boldly assert that secession was justified by the Constitution, and, beyond that, by the right of revolution.

First, as to the Constitution: The original thirteen States were settled as separate and sovereign. The Declaration of Independence declared they were free and independent States. The treaty of peace with Great Britain called them by separate names as sovereign and independent States. Under the articles of Confederacy and Perpetual Union, the States reserved their separate sovereignty, and limited Congress to an "express" delegation of power. It was on motion of Richard Henry Lee, of Virginia, the convention was called to "revise the Articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union." That convention gave us the Constitution drawn by the hand of James Madison. It was not then, but years later, that the enemies of the South came to the conclusion that when the Constitution supplanted the Articles of Confederation, then the supreme sovereignty passed from the States to the Federal Government. At the time of its adoption everybody believed that the States were sovereign, and the Federal Government was but the servant; that it was a government not of the people but of the States. Nobody dreamed that the States were creating a corporation whose clutch later would choke its makers. The Federalists came to camp in the preamble, and bowed in worship before the words, "We, the people," ignoring the fact that the words "people" and "States" were used in the same sense in the ninth and tenth amendments. In the ninth: "The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people." Then, in the tenth: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, or reserved to the States, respectively—or to the people." Under article II of the Constitution and the twelfth amendment, the President was not—and is not to this day—elected by the people but by the States through electors appointed as the State legislatures should direct—and on failure to so select he should be chosen by the States in the lower House of Congress, each State having one vote. Under article 1, the Senators were to be elected not by the people but by the States through their legislatures. All the justices of the Supreme and Federal Courts were elected not by the people but appointed by the President by consent of the Senate, both of which were creatures not of the people but of the States. It was not by accident or oversight that the word "perpetual" was left out of the new Constitution, for no man of that day dreamed that the States had surrendered their right at any time and for any reason to withdraw from the Union as freely as they had entered it.

Without this understanding, so notorious that it was not even discussed, not a single State would have entered the Union. Very early the course of events proved this true.

In 1797, John Adams, suffering from fatty degeneration of the ego, had Congress pass the alien and sedition laws, under which he, without any process of law, could banish any alien or imprison any citizen whom he disliked. It was answered by the Kentucky resolutions drawn by Thomas Jefferson. Surely he knew what sort was our Government. Those resolutions recited: "The Federal Government is one of delegated powers for special purposes; each State reserves the residing mass of right to itself; when the General Government assumes undelegated powers its acts are null and void; each State has the right to judge for itself as to the infraction and the mode and measure of redress." In the selfsame year Virginia passed some resolutions drawn by Madison, "the father of the Constitution." Surely he knew what the Constitution meant. Those resolutions said: "We will defend the Constitution and the Union; the Federal Government is a compact of States; it is limited by the plain terms of the Constitution, and its acts are invalid if not authorized by grants in the Constitution; in case the General Government exceeds its granted powers the States have the right and duty to interpose."

There is hardly a State in the Union that has not at one time or another claimed the right of nullification or secession—they amount to the same thing. Josiah Quincy the younger proclaimed in Massachusetts the right of a State to nullify any act of Congress for any reason. In 1791 Congress laid a tax on liquor. Pennsylvania answered it by the "whisky rebellion." Utterly ignoring two proclamations of President Washington, she captured the Government officials. By strange coincidence it was the father of Robert E. Lee, "Light Horse Harry," who was sent by Washington to put down that rebellion.

In 1807 Congress passed the embargo act. All the New England States entered into a conspiracy with England and with Sir James Craig, Governor of Canada, to secede from the United States and unite with Canada, and they employed as their agent a naturalized Irishman named John Henry for the sum of $5,000. All that stopped it was the repeal of the embargo. In 1812 Congress passed an act declaring war with Great Britain, and President Madison called on the States for troops. Massachusetts and Connecticut spurned the act and the call. The Massachusetts Legislature said, "We spurn the idea that the free, sovereign, and independent State of Massachusetts is reduced to a mere municipal corporation without power to protect itself from oppression from any quarter." Where was the lordly Daniel Webster then? We listen in vain for that stentorian voice. But this is not all. The Legislature of Massachusetts issued a call for a convention of all the New England States; and they met in Hartford in 1814. For three weeks they sat behind locked doors. An officer of the Government watched them as far as he could. We know only what they gave out: They demanded that the war with England should stop at once; they denied the right of the General Government to call or control State troops; they declared the right of the States to nullify any act of Congress and to resist its enforcement by any means in their power. Where, oh, where was the lordly Daniel then? There is no doubt nor room for doubt that the New England States would have seceded from the Union then if the war had not stopped.

In 1816 Congress passed an act incorporating the United States Bank. The Legislature of Maryland declared the act unconstitutional, and, though overruled by the United States Supreme Court, the supreme court of Maryland, in the case of McCulloch v. Maryland, sustained the nullification. As early as 1793 James Iredell, of North Carolina, then a justice of the United States Supreme Court, said in Chisholm v. Georgia that the States were completely sovereign in regard to the powers they had not delegated to the Federal Government; as late as 1830 the Legislature of North Carolina refused to pass a resolution denying the right of secession, and in 1832 Senator Nat Macon said any State could withdraw from the Union on first paying its proportional part of the national debt.

Amidst all the thunder of fierce debate that shook the national forum from 1820 to 1860 historians concede that the position of the North was more moral; that of the South more logical. In the Senate of 1830 the speech of Hayne was an unanswerable argument for the Constitution; that of Webster an unanswerable plea for the Union. But while the right of secession slept in the Constitution like a sword in its scabbard, the Southern States would never have drawn it forth if they had not been harried and harassed beyond all endurance. Virtually the South was driven out of the Union by a rabid northern majority ruled not by reason but by the white-hot logic of passionate fanaticism.

Slavery was not the cause of the war; it was merely incidental. The position of southern leaders was expressed in the words of Lee: "Secession is anarchy. If I owned the 4,000,000 slaves, I would give them all for the Union." The colonial South was opposed to slavery, it was forced on her by New England States' slave traders who bought the slaves with New England liquor. At one time Virginia and Georgia comprised all the Southern States of the original thirteen. Twenty-three successive times the Legislature of Virginia refused to receive the slaves; but under the influence of Massachusetts slave dealers, poor, crazy King George forced Virginia to let them in. George Whitfield, cofounder of Methodism, dumped a cargo of slaves on Georgia over the bitter protest of the governor.

Moreover, it was the Northern States that set slavery in the Constitution as an integral part of it. Its adoption was effected by nine Northern States with a population of 2,000,000 and four Southern States with a population of 1,000,000. But it was soon found that negro slavery was not profitable in the North. With the coming of the cotton gin it became immensely profitable to the South.

When the Northern States had sold their slaves to the South they caught a malignant case of religion; slavery was a sin and must be suppressed. In 1908 a North Carolina barkeeper was converted, he sold his bar to his brother, and joined the church, and adopted the slogan of the Anti-Saloon League, "To hell with liquor." That was now the northern attitude. Press, platform, and pulpit poured forth a fiery denunciation of our people.

The happy relation between the slaves and Ol' Marse and Ol' Missus was colored by the lurid light of frenzied fiction. The Methodist Episcopal Church was sure we were going to hell without a return ticket. In 1844 James Andrew, of Georgia, was bishop. He had married a wife. In fact, he had married two wives. Both of them held inherited slaves. Andrew was opposed to slavery. He said to the slaves, "You are free so far as I can set you free; go in peace." But they would not go. Andrew made this frank, manly statement to the general conference of 1844. They kicked him out, and the South went with him.

Every so-called "compromise" in Congress was really a concession by the South to save the Union. In 1820 the Missouri compromise barred slavery from all territory north of 36° 30'. That was clearly unconstitutional, but the South submitted. In the case of California in 1850 the northern majority killed its own Missouri compromise because part of the State lay south of the dividing line. Again the South submitted. In 1854 Kansas and Nebraska knocked at the door. Douglas proposed his squatter sovereignty; that is, let the States decide for themselves by popular vote. The rabid abolitionists now untombed and paraded their own baby, which they had smothered—the Missouri compromise. Douglas won, and the battle of ballots was on in Kansas. Proslavery won at the polls. The duly elected legislature met at Lecompton, drew up a constitution, and sent their Delegate to Congress. The abolitionist, defeated and disgruntled, seceded, withdrew to Topeka, and set up an independent government. Again the battle was on—not of ballots but of bullets.

Then, in 1857, came the Dred Scott decision. Dred Scott was a Missouri slave who had sued for freedom. The United States Supreme Court said, "Negroes are not citizens and can not become so by any process known to the Constitution. They can not sue or be sued. They are only chattels in law. The Constitution gives the owner the right of taking them as property into any State or Territory. Therefore the Missouri compromise and all other compromises are null and void."

This decision, mark you, was effected by northern and not southern judges. On the bench sat five northern and four southern justices—Taney, of Maryland; Grier, of Pennsylvania; and Nelson, of New York, voted for the decision. Fondly our fathers dreamed that this settled the matter forever. Then the abolitionists began to "cuss" the court and the Constitution. Thad Stevens said that Taney went to hell for that decision. The Constitution was denounced as a "Covenant with hell and a league with death."

The fugitive slave law was annulled by the passage of "personal liberty" bills in the following 14 States: Connecticut, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, New York, Massachusetts, Michigan, Maine, New Jersey, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, and Vermont.

Then came the election of Lincoln. It has been charged that the election of Lincoln was not sufficient to justify secession. Standing as an isolated incident, this might be true. I know Lincoln said in his first inaugural that he had no purpose or power to interfere with slavery in the States and no express power to interfere with it in the Territories. But Lincoln, with all his power, would have been but a feather in the tempestuous passion of the party which elected him. They declared slavery was a sin and must be suppressed. Lincoln himself had said, "The Nation can not survive half slave and half free."

As a last gesture of despair the South threw a "sop to Cerberus" in the Crittenden resolution of 1860, offering to restore the Missouri compromise. Douglas, Davis, and Stevens believed its passage would restore peace and save the Union. It was beaten by northern votes. The Southern States were given to understand that they could remain in the Union only when shorn of their sovereignty and under a constitution regarded as a rotten rag. So, justified by the Constitution and clean of conscience, the South rescinded the ordinances under which she entered the Union.

When South Carolina resumed her separate sovereignty, then all her forts and arsenals reverted to her rightful possession. She sent Adams, Barnwell, and Orr to Washington to negotiate for their peaceable surrender. In answer the Government sent the Star of the West with reinforcements for Fort Sumter. This was a flagrant invasion; this was the first act of open war. The shot from the Confederate batteries in Charleston Harbor was the answer to that invasion.

The story of that struggle against such fearful odds has become the wonder of the world. On one side was a nation of 22 States and 10 Territories, with a population of 21,000,000 of white people, whose starry standard shone on every shore and sea of the planet. She had her army and her navy, her factories and munition plants, and the unlimited credit of the world.

We had 11 States, with a population of 10,000,000, including 4,000,000 slaves. New York, Pennsylvania, and Ohio together could send two fighting men to our one into the field. We were without army or navy, without factories for clothing or weapons, without the recognition of a single nation, practically without arms save such as freemen may find or fashion in the hour of oppression. Yet, with unfaltering faith and undaunted daring we unrolled the "Southern Cross" to the sky above the bravest, truest men that ever marched to war's wild music.

Never were men better lead than by the stainless sword of that superbest soldier of the centuries, Robert E. Lee, and never was a leader more faithfully followed than by the heroes in gray.

Eulogy knows no language nor language any eulogy to fashion a fitting wreath for Lee. Nor was self-sacrifice more sublime than when he gave up his princely home rich in tender and heroic memories, resolutely refusing the supreme command of the Nation's Army, to live or die with his people. He well knew that our cause was hopeless without the recognition of some great nation, yet he said: "We have a duty to perform."

"His was all the Norman's polish and sobriety of grace,
All the Goth's majestic figure, all the Roman's noble face.
And he stood the tall examplar of a grand heroic race.
Truth walked beside him always
From his childhood's early years,
Honor followed as his shadow; valor lightened all his cares;
And he rode—that grand Virginian, last of all the Cavaliers."

The genius of Napoleon; the courage of Cæsar; the fortitude of Wellington; the devotion of Leonidas; the chivalry of King Arthur; and the purity of Chevalier Bayard—all met and mingled in the perfect character of Robert Lee. Grand as he led his legions in the land of the Montezumas, grander as he rode "Old Traveler" along the dusty line of gray, grander still as he rode through the smoking streets of his conquered capital and heard the applause of the victors, grandest of all as, with the mist of unshed tears in his eyes, he faced his fate at Appomattox.

For one moment there came to his soldier soul the desperate dream of a final charge. "How easy," he said, "to ride along the lines and end it all!" He knew that at the flashing of his blade every tired, ragged southern soldier would die with him there. But above the sulphurous smoke of battle rose the vision of the stricken South, and he said: "We must live for our people." Sadder words never leaped from lips of mortal than these, "Men, we have fought through the war together; I have done my best for you; my heart is too full to say more." The greatest man of the Old Testament, Moses, cried to God: "Save my people; if not, blot out my name from Thy book!" The peerless man of the New Testament, St. Paul, said: "I could wish myself accursed from Christ for my kinman according to the flesh!" On that supreme height with these heroic souls stands Robert Lee, as he sacrificed all for his people.

What shall we say of the "Bluelight Elder," Stonewall, the unconquered and unconquerable? He never lost a battle and he never entered one without a prayer to God. Every old veteran of the Shenandoah campaign will recall the sharp command: "Halt!" and the dust-brown ranks stood with bowed heads while he lifted his gauntletted hands to Heaven. Then the clear, crisp command: "Hold your fire till you come within 50 yards of the enemy; then fire, and give them the bayonet, and when you charge yell like devils!" No line ever withstood that fiery onset. Hugo said of Napoleon that he embarrassed God. An all-wise Providence had to take Stonewall Jackson to Heaven before the Confederacy could fall.

But while we pay loving tribute to-day to our leaders, Lee and Jackson, Stuart, Johnston, and the long roll of fame, we would not forget the common soldier. We are told that Sir Christopher Wren built St. Paul's and Michaelangelo built St. Peter's, we hear nothing of the common workmen who translated their dreams with trowel and chisel. History heralds the proud admiral who wins the sea fight; it forgets that the men who handle the guns on the blood-besprinkled decks and the stokers down below the water line feeding the furnace—these made victory possible. We sing of the general with gleaming spur and shining epaulette riding along the line; sometimes we forget the unsung soldier standing in the trenches. No bulletin of war to blazon his name; yet in simple, heroic devotion, he does his duty and crowns his leader with victory.

Veterans of the South, I salute you reverently. Your record has become the priceless heritage of history. For four fearful years, through cold and hunger and homesickness, you fought on and on, undreaming of surrender. You were never conquered by Yankee blades or bullets. A deadlier enemy struck from the rear. The unuttered need of our defenseless women and children at home clamored for your aid. God never made more heroic women. Their tender hands, unused to toil, were called to crush the nettle of war. They slept in naked beds, for the sheets were gone to stanch the soldier's blood. The fields were untilled, for the plow horse was pulling the cannon. Food was scarce and money worthless. A calico dress cost $500; flour was $500 a barrel; corn, $30 a bushel; potatoes were $30 a bushel; bacon was $7.50 a pound; eggs were $5 a dozen; sorghum molasses $20 a gallon; yet our more-than-Spartan mothers locked their lips in silent suffering, and sent cheering messages to the front.

Your valor was unconquerable, your defeat was decreed in the chancery of heaven. An iron pen dipped in blood, wrote into the Constitution an interpretation never meant by its framers but one necessary to the perpetuation of the Union. God Almighty needed this undivided Nation. Among the old Hebrews, when a lasting covenant was made each of the contracting parties opened a vein in his arm, and they let their blood flow in a common stream. This blood covenant was irrevocable. So in the red blood of the North and of the South poured together on many a battle field a bond of Union was made which never shall be broken.

To-day you are facing a deadlier enemy than the boys in blue; you are getting old. The shadows are lengthening, and the days are darkening. The thin gray line is growing thinner and grayer. Only a few fleeting years and the last old veteran shall have crossed the river to rest with the leaders under the shade of the tree of life. But into the shadows of old age and into the darkness of death you shall be followed by the reverent regard of our men and the gentle ministries of our women.

When Alexander stood by the tomb of Achilles he said: "O happy Achilles, to have had Homer for your herald." So fortunate are you to have the dear daughters of the Confederacy to guard your memory and garland the graves of your comrades.

Daughters of the Confederacy, I salute you lovingly. No nobler ministry was ever committed to more faithful souls than that of yours to scatter sunshine over the darkening pathway of living veterans and scatter the fragrant flowers of spring over the graves of the dead. They shall live forever in the love and memory of a brave people.

The wild rose of spring dashed with the dews of dawn and sweet with the meadow's breath, the flaming laurel on the sloping highlands, and the shrinking violet in the lowly dell—all are fragrant with their memory. The song birds and the babbling brooks shall chant their names. Nature's cathedral voices, the soft south winds shall breath their story to the hills, and old ocean shall peal, like some mighty anthem to the star of heaven.

"The meanest rill, the mightiest river,
Rolls mingled with their fame forever."

A JUDICIAL ESTIMATE OF JEFFERSON DAVIS

That which preeminently signalizes the public character and parliamentary career of Jefferson Davis was his sincere, unwavering devotion to the doctrine of State sovereignty and all the practical questions that flowed therefrom. He held with unrelaxing grasp to the fundamental fact that the Union was composed of separate, independent, sovereign States, and that all Federal power was delegated, specifically limited, and clearly defined. The titantic struggles of his entire public life were over this one vital issue, with all that it logically involved for the weal or woe of his beloved country. The insistence of Mr. Davis and his compatriots was that the Constitution and laws should be obeyed, that the individual sovereign States must regulate their own domestic affairs without Federal interference, and that their property, of whatever kind, must be respected and protected. They resisted any invasion of the State's right to control its own internal affairs as a violation of the sacred Federal compact.

And, by the way, our present-day political discussions are eloquently vindicating the patriotic jealousy of Mr. Davis for the rights of the States. The most significant fact of these strenuous times is the solemn warnings in endless iteration and from both political parties against the ominous encroachment of Federal authority. More and more the Nation is seeing that Jefferson Davis was not an alarmist or an academical theorist, but a practical, sagacious, far-seeing statesman, when he contended so persistently for the rights and unconstrained functions of each member of the Federal Union. And it is an interesting and suggestive fact that the latest historians and writers on constitutional government sustain this fundamental contention of southern statesmen.

Mr. Davis wrought with all his great ability and influence to preserve the Union. He favored and earnestly advocated the "Crittenden resolutions" on condition that the Republican members of the peace committee would accept them. Had they not stubbornly refused (and they did it at the advice of Mr. Lincoln), war would have been averted and the dissolution of the Union prevented or postponed.

By the sacred political convictions which had inspired his every public and patriotic service Jefferson Davis consistently lived to the end. Without compromise or modification and with never a suggestion of contrition or concession, he died in the accepted faith of his fathers. And for that fearless and unshaken fidelity to his honest conception of truth and duty the South will continue to adore him, the world will never cease to admire him, and with a wreath of unfading glory the genius of history will not fail to crown him. Had he ever recanted or even compromised, had he ever apostatized or even compromised, had he shown in any way that his often-reiterated doctrines were not the undying convictions of his sincere soul, had he ever pleaded for pardon on the ground that he had misconceived the truth and misguided his people, the South would have spurned him, the North would have execrated him, and the verdict of history would have deservedly and eternally condemned him. But in the calm consciousness of having done what sacred duty and the cause of constitutional liberty demanded to the end of his days he walked with a steady step that knew no variableness or shadow of turning. The banner under which he fought went down in clouds and gloom, but was never furled by his hands. (Bishop Charles B. Galloway.)

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H. R. 5297. An act for the relief of Christine Brenzinger; and

H. R. 10799. An act for the lease of land and the erection of a post office at Philippi, W. Va., and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10360) to confer additional jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims under an act entitled "An act authorizing the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota to submit claims to the Court of Claims," approved May 14, 1926.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11026) to provide for the coordination of the public-health activities of the Government, and for other purposes.

TAX REDUCTION

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, in lieu of the amendment I offered yesterday afternoon and which is to be voted on this morning, I wish to offer as a substitute the amendment I send to the desk. I ask the clerk to read it, and I should be very glad if those Senators who are interested in it would listen to the clerk's reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 205, after line 12, in lieu of the committee amendment striking out lines 12 to 14, inclusive, it is proposed to insert:

Upon each sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell (not including so-called transfer or scratch sales) any products or merchandise at, or under the rules or usages of, any exchange, or board of trade, or other similar place, for future delivery, for each $100 in value of the merchandise covered by said sale or agreement of sale or agreement to sell, 50 cents, and for each additional $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 50 cents: Provided, That if any person who shall contract for future delivery of cotton or grain shall furnish an affidavit stating that he is the owner of such cotton or grain and that he has the intention to deliver such cotton or grain, or that such cotton or grain is at the time in actual course of growth on lands owned, controlled, or cultivated by him, and that he has the intention to deliver such cotton or grain, or that he is at the time legally entitled to the future possession of such cotton or grain under and by authority of a contract for the sale and future delivery thereof previously made by the owner of such cotton or grain, giving the name of the party or names of parties to such contract and the time when and the place where such contract was made and the price therein stipulated and that he has the intention to deliver such cotton or grain; or that he has the intention to acquire and deliver such cotton or grain; or that he has the intention to receive and pay for such cotton or grain, shall in that event pay no taxes. But if such affidavit shall be made willfully false, then the maker thereof shall be guilty of perjury and upon conviction be punished as provided by law.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senate for a few moments, let me say that the amendment just offered in lieu of the one we discussed yesterday afternoon will prevent what is called short selling. It would not prevent anyone who owns cotton or grain or who has it in course of production or who holds a contract from some one who has it or has it in course of production from selling that contract. It would not prevent the mill hedging on that sort of a contract. It would tax rather heavily those who sell what they have not and what they never will have to those who do not want it and never expect to receive it. That is what the amendment in its present form does. Under it anyone may sell for future delivery without tax anything he has or has in course of production or that he has under contract to buy.

The evil lies not in the sale for future delivery; no one objects to a man selling what he is going to produce to be delivered in a number of months thereafter; no one objects to a mill which is engaged in spinning cloth buying from somebody who is going to have the raw material in advance of the time it manufactures the product. We object only to people selling what they never have and never expect to have.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question for information?

Mr. CARAWAY. I will be glad to answer the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. Suppose a cotton mill wants 10,000 bales of cotton delivered and authorizes me as a broker to hedge for it on that contract—I call it a contract, but I will say its purpose to buy.

Mr. CARAWAY. In other words, it wants to buy a contract for a future delivery of 10,000 bales.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. The mill may do that, but before it can be sold to the mill you must hold a contract from somebody who has that cotton or somebody who is growing that cotton.

Mr. OVERMAN. I could not, then, telegraph to the cotton exchange to buy 10,000 bales.

Mr. CARAWAY. You could; but nobody on the exchange could sell it unless he had a contract from somebody who is going to own it. For instance, about 6,000,000 bales of American cotton, in round numbers, is all that is spun in America in a year. Yet they sell on the exchanges in the United States in excess of 200,000,000 bales.

It has been said by the defenders of this system that a future contract, a hedge contract, may be sold five or six times over. Granting that—though I do not think anybody ever has been able to establish it—there would be use for only twenty-five or thirty million of future-contract sales to take care of every bale of cotton that is to be spun in America. Instead of that, they sometimes sell that much on the exchange within a week; and against that we protest.

I have in my hand a letter from the Direct Sales & Finance Co., a concern of Fall River, Mass., with main office at Franklin Building, 100 Purchase Street, Fall River. The letterhead bears the legend "Grower to mill." They handle about 135,000 spot bales a year, and possibly are the largest concern selling directly to the mills in America. If I may trespass upon the time of the Senate for a few moments, I wish to read the letter. It is under date of April 7, 1928, and it is addressed to me:

I have your letter of April 4, and have handled as much as 135,000 bales of cotton in one season in this section.

I might say that I wrote a letter to the company to ascertain how much they handled.

I feel that the manipulation which is possible in New York has seriously interfered with the free movement of cotton and is one of the important factors disturbing the textile industry to-day.

One of the mill men in this section, who is also a national figure in the textile industry, informed me yesterday that there was a lack of confidence in cotton goods, going back to the retailer. This was caused by the steady decline in prices during the present season and may take considerable time to adjust itself.

I am thoroughly familiar with the working of the cotton exchange, having traded in rather a large way and also tendered and taken up cotton from the New York stock. All of the following statements are of facts of which I have personal knowledge and on which I can give exact information and names if desired.

In 1923 the cotton business was disrupted by a corner managed by Cooper & Griffin, which cornered March, May, and July. Early in that season I hedged staple cotton, with the market around 29 cents, which was worth at the time in the neighborhood of 36 cents.

Due to the manipulation the New York market advanced to over 35 cents, mills in this section practically stopped buying cotton entirely, and, although I had a loss of over $3,000 in each future contract, the cotton which I had hedged had shown no advance whatever, and was unsalable to the mills even at contract price.

This situation became so serious that mills closed down a great deal of machinery, purchased practically no cotton, and finally in July many of them tendered on New York contracts the cotton which they had in their warehouses. It was more profitable for them to do this than to run the mill; and this consumption which was lost removed this buying power from the market, with a consequent decline to owners of cotton after July contracts had expired.

The latter part of July I tendered on two July contracts cotton at about 35½ cents, when similar cotton could be purchased at the same time in the South at slightly over 29 cents. At that time it was impossible to get cotton from the South into New York in time to tender; and, if my memory is correct, the difference between New York and New Orleans was approximately 6 cents a pound.

Anyone who had hedged cotton during the spring or summer, and who did not tender it, had a very serious loss; and those who did tender were only able to lessen in a small way this loss, which must have been very serious to a great many owners of cotton. I know it was very expensive to us; and the high market in New York was of no advantage to the southern owner of cotton, as he was not in a position to take advantage of it, as it had curtailed the buying of actual cotton.

There is quite a long letter here arguing it out, the result of which is that in his conclusion the grower of cotton lost heavily on the manipulation in the futures market. Doubtless the Senators from Massachusetts, who are familiar with textiles, will know this concern, and know whether it is reputable or not. It is the Direct Sales & Finance Co., of Fall River, Mass. It offers to make good by giving the names and dates of the transactions to anyone who wants to know about them.

Mr. President, I offer this letter to be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

DIRECT SALES & FINANCE CO.,
Fall River, Mass., April 7, 1928.

Hon. T. H. CARAWAY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of April 4, and have handled as much as 135,000 bales of cotton in one season in this section.

I feel that the manipulation which is possible in New York has seriously interfered with the free movement of cotton and is one of the important factors disturbing the textile industry to-day.

One of the millmen in this section, who is also a national figure in the textile industry, informed me yesterday that there was a lack of confidence in cotton goods going back to the retailer. This was caused by the steady decline in prices during the present season, and may take considerable time to adjust itself.

I am thoroughly familiar with the working of the cotton exchange, having traded in rather a large way, and also tendered and taken up cotton from the New York stock. All of the following statements are of facts of which I have personal knowledge and on which I can give exact information and names if desired.

In 1923 the cotton business was disrupted by a corner managed by Cooper & Griffin, which cornered March, May, and July. Early in that season I hedged staple cotton with the market around 29 cents, which was worth at the time in the neighborhood of 36 cents. Due to the manipulation the New York market advanced to over 35 cents, mills in this section practically stopped buying cotton entirely, and although I had a loss of over $3,000 in each future contract, the cotton which I had hedged had shown no advance whatever and was unsalable to the mills even at contract price.

This situation became so serious that mills closed down a great deal of machinery, purchased practically no cotton, and finally in July many of them tendered on New York contracts the cotton which they had in their warehouses. It was more profitable for them to do this than to run the mill, and this consumption which was lost removed this buying power from the market, with a consequent decline to owners of cotton after July contracts had expired.

The latter part of July I tendered on two July contracts cotton at about 35½ cents, when similar cotton could be purchased at the same time in the South at slightly over 29 cents. At that time it was impossible to get cotton from the South into New York in time to tender, and, if my memory is correct, the difference between New York and New Orleans was approximately 6 cents a pound.

Anyone who had hedged cotton during the spring or summer and who did not tender it had a very serious loss, and those who did tender were only able to lessen in a small way this loss, which must have been very serious to a great many owners of cotton. I know it was very expensive to us, and the high market in New York was of no advantage to the southern owner of cotton, as he was not in a position to take advantage of it, as it had curtailed the buying of actual cotton.

It is possible for New England to ship cotton into New York and tender within 48 hours, and I knew the mills in this section had shipped in considerable long-staple cotton late in July. In addition to the cotton which was shipped into New York, Cooper & Griffin agreed to buy cotton from certain mills and resell it to them provided the cotton could not be tendered on any contract in which they had an interest. They also purchased in the South cotton owned in the Eastern States which could have been tendered, and by holding this cotton off the market they were in a position to penalize all persons who were short the New York market, either as a speculation or as a legitimate hedge.

Knowing that this cotton was in New York and also that mills had practically no cotton to run, I got in touch with Mr. McCuen, who was handling the details of the cotton in New York for Cooper & Griffin. They had taken up, I believe, in the neighborhood of 65,000 bales, which was all of the cotton tendered. In this there were several thousand bales of staple cotton, a large part of which I purchased and which was shipped to New Bedford.

The handling of the market in 1923 was for no legitimate purpose. It was an absolute corner, run for the purpose of making money out of the shorts and for no other purpose. Cooper & Griffin gave plenty of warning of what they were doing and most of the New York brokers were familiar with what was going on. It was the legitimate cotton shipper who used the market as a hedge who was hurt and all owners of cotton indirectly by depriving them of a market for their actual cotton by maintaining fictitious values of which they were unable to take advantage.

These same people ran a corner in 1920, when futures were forced to 43 cents, followed later by a decline in the following months to very nearly 10 cents. To blame all of the subsequent declines on the corner would probably be incorrect, but they unquestionably made the subsequent declines more serious.

Since this corner, manipulation has tended in the other direction by keeping in New York under control of one organization practically all of a large stock in New York.

I have considerable sympathy with the attitude of Mr. Clayton in his controversy with the New York exchange, as he has at least handled actual cotton, whereas most of the active members of the exchange have been out of the cotton business for some time or have never engaged in the handling of actual cotton.

I believe that Mr. Clayton is correct when he says that if he did not control the market it would be impossible for him to do business; but, on the other hand, this is very little satisfaction to the small dealer in cotton who finds it impossible to make a profit in the face of competition as it is to-day.

Early this season, owing to the scarcity of low grades in the present crop, we tried to purchase in New York on a basis to figure more than 100 points over the contract price low middling contract cotton. There were at that time over 30,000 bales low middling value cotton in New York, but we found that no one would sell this cotton and either did not care to or were afraid to interfere with the owners of the stock.

I can not see why the tendering of 100,000 to 200,000 bales of cotton on first notice day is necessary for the protection of hedges. There are few, if any, dealers in New York who would be able to take this entire stock as tendered. For this reason it forces out of the market every owner of a contract and makes it impractical to own contracts after the 15th of the month preceding the contract month. This, of course, keeps the spot month down, and as actual cotton, to a large extent, is based on the spot month, also keeps the price at which cotton can be sold at a level below what it would be if there was not this manipulation on notice day.

When this practice of tendering practically the entire stock was first inaugurated by Anderson, Clayton & Co. the market dropped off very decidedly on notice day, and the difference between the spot and following months was widened. This is not so noticeable at the present time, as the adjustment is spread out over a longer period, but has the effect of depressing the spot month over a period of two or three weeks instead of concentrating this pressure on one day.

I firmly believe that unless the contract is put under strict control either of a body of the exchange or, preferably, a Government commission of practical cotton men, that a great many of the handlers of cotton will be forced out of business entirely. Up to the present time it has ruined a great many shippers and injured the credit of a great many more, and as far as I can see, up to the present time nothing has been done which gives any hope of improvement in the future.

I hope the above will be of value to you, and if you wish me to explain further will be pleased to do so.

Yours very truly,

EDW. C. PEIRCE.
